NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER

The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of ... county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of a newspaper friendly to the political interests, and recognizing the UNION as such paper, we indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation."

PAY YOUR POLL TAX BEFORE FEBRUARY 1st, 1904, or you can't vote for anything at any time in 1904. DO NOT SLEEP ON YOUR RIGHTS. Make it your business to see the tax collector AT ONCE, and pay up. Don't put it off, for you might get sick or something might happen so that your opportunity would pass. A great many of our people think that the poll tax was put on the voluntary plan, so as to disfranchise a lot of careless white voters in the country beats. If that is so, DON'T give the democrats the satisfaction of disfranchising you. PAY YOUR POLL TAX and vote a straight PEOPLE'S ticket in 1904, and show them "where you are at." PAY YOUR POLL TAX; it goes direct to the children of the community in which you pay, to help educate them, and no man should begrudge paying his money to such a cause. PAY YOUR POLL TAX. tf

McKINLEY AND HANNA.

In the Washington Post of recent date appeared a statement attributed to Mr. Perry Heath, while visiting Louisville, which is more or less interesting. Mr. Heath is quoted as saying:

"'I saw President McKinley only a few days before he was shot at Buffalo. He was in the white house at Washington, and I had a long talk with him on affairs pertaining to the next presidential election and the conduct of the republican party generally.

"'During the conversation Mr. McKinley, in speaking of the man who would succeed him, said:

"'I expect to see my friend and associate, Marcus Hanna, the next president of the United States. I believe he will be nominated and elected.

Mr. McKinley went to Canton the following day and the next day thereafter was shot. It was his firm conviction that he would live to see Hanna president, and that he would receive the nomination from his party. I know that he died with the conviction firmly planted in his mind. Nothing occurred between the time he made the statement to me and the time he was shot to change his views, and he died with the belief that his party would reward Hanna by making him president.

Mr. Heath is further quoted by the Courier-Journal, of Louisville, as saying that while Senator Hanna is sincere in his declaration that he is not an aspirant for the nomination, he would not refuse the honor if the republican convention should tender it.

It is not surprising that Mr. Heath should have been thus taken into the confidence of President McKinley, since the two men were close personal friends. How much weight Mr. Heath's interview will have in republican circles, however, remains to be seen. But there is no doubt that Mr. Hanna or any other man would accept the nomination if it was offered. That honor does not, never did and never will go begging. Mr. Hanna would like to be president, just as every other politician or business

THE FUSION TICKET IN ST. CLAIR COUNTY.

Special to the Birmingham News.

Pell City, Ala., Dec. 29.—A joint committee meeting of republicans and populists, held in the court house yesterday afternoon, divided the St. Clair county offices for the fusion ticket at follows:

Republicans—Tax collector, tax assessor, superintendent of education and commissioner of the fourth district.

Populists—Probate judge, clerk of the circuit court, county treasurer and commissioner of the first district.

Nominations for these offices will be made by the republicans at a committee meeting in Friendship on January 9th and by the populists by county primary on February 10. The election will be held in the fall. The joint committee yesterday was composed of five members from each part, with Mr. M. C. Frame, of Easonville, as chairman

WINSTON REPUBLICANS.

Double Springs, Jan. 4.—The republican executive committee of Winston count met at the court house here Friday for the purpose of formulating plans for the coming campaign. In addition to the members of the committee there were present perhaps 200 of the rank and file of the party.

After some discussion it was decided to hold a primary election February 10, the candidate for any office receiving the most votes to be the nominee Several members of the party took advantage of the occasion to notify the people that they could be persuaded to abondon their private businesses to serve the county in public capacities. Notably among these was John S. Curtis, for twelve years clerk of the circuit court and for the past eighteen years the "belled wether" of Winston republicans. Mr. Curtis wishes to succeed Hon. R. L. Blanton as probate judge; F. O. Burdick also announced for that office. This will be a lively tilt, as Mr. Curtis and Mr. Burdick are confessedly two of the most popular men in their party.

There was from one to a half-dozen announcements for each of the other offices to be filled, and the eagerness with which the candidates announce carries conviction that they hope to win out at the general election.

Winston, it will be remembered, had been continuously republican since the civil war until six years ago, when the county democracy elected its entire ticket. Two years ago the republicans carried the county.

CLANTON HIGH SCHOOL.

There was a gathering at the school house Tuesday night of the patrons of the school, who decided to make January 25th the date for the commencement of the four-months public school and to go on and supplement as before. The great trouble with Clanton school is that the patrons are like the farmer who tried to run a four-horse farm with a one-horse outfit. Get out and get your outfit and pay for it when the crop comes in. In other words, bond the town and build a school house that will hold all the children in comfort.

All along life's pathway we see people sidetracked, wavering, vacillating, who waited until their opportunities had gone by, until the tide had receded, until the nick of time was beyond their reach, philosophizes Success. There is nothing else which will so energize and brace up all the faculties as a habit of quick, energetic decision, and prompt action.

The United States Government has adopted the policy of never placing the portrait of a man on a postage stamp or any of its paper currency unless the man is dead, comments the Los Angeles Times. It is a wise rule, based on the acknowled frailty of human nature. It seems we can never be sure of people until they are dead. After that they can commit no wrong, nor can they ever err again or besmirch a once fair reputation with disgrace. However unwillingly we may recognize it, the truth of the maxim is forced upon us that reputation is a bubble liable to burst at any moment.

Andrew Carnegie is only a few inches above five feet in height. Henry W. Phipps, his old partner, is not an inch taller, and John Walker, the other member of the trio who revolutionized the manufacture of steel, has perhaps a little the better of both Carnegie and Phipps. As for Henry C. Frick, his head would just about reach to the shoulder of a man ... ary height. It is ...

Trial Soon.

Court has begun at Camden and the Pineapple case will soon be on.

A new feature in the case developed Sunday when Colonel W. W. Quarles, solicitor of the fourth judicial circuit, received a telegram from Sheriff Albritton at Camden stating that as he had no mittimus or any authority he would turn the five prisoners loose Monday morning at 9 o'clock. Sunday night Colonel Quarles telegraphed Sheriff Albritton that under all circumstances he must hold the prisoners and that if he did turn them loose he would be impeached.

Albritton, it seems, has had an understanding with the prisoners that if he turned them loose they would not sue his bondsmen. There also seems to be an undercurrent of opinion at Camden that the wrong men are under arrest.

A COMPANY WAR

Means Much for the Alabama Coal Mining Industry,

The possibilities for the immediate development of the mineral resources of Alabama, especially in coal fields, are revived by a persistent story that comes from New York city and from several different sources. These stories rest on the truth or fallacy of two announcements that have been made—that new interests are in control of the United States steel corporation, and that this trust and the Pittsburg Coal Company are at outs.

What is claimed to be practically official information is given out to the effect that J. P. Morgan has run his limit as dictator of the steel trust, and that the control of this gigantic corporation has passed into the hands of John D. Rockefeller, Standard Oil magnate, and Henry C. Frick, the enemy of Andrew Canegie.

The other story deals with the expiration of the contract between the steel trust and the Pittsburg Coal Company for the supply of the coal used by the first named corporation. This contract expired with the old year and has not been renewed. The claim is advanced it will not be. The United States steel corporation will develop its own large holdings of coal properties, the supposition being that they are largely interested in Alabama fields.

Under active conditions the United States Steel Corporation consumes in the neighborhood of 8,500 tons of coal per day, most all of which has been furnished by the Pittsburg Coal Company. The consumption of the steel combine last year was something less than 3,000,000 tons. At the rate of $1.40 per ton, paid in 1903, the coal consumed in a single year would represent a valuation of more than $4,000,000.

Historic School Burned.

St. Catherine's academy, a Catholic school for girls, located near Springfield, Ky., burned to the ground Sunday. There was no fatalities. The loss is about $200,000. So rapid was the progress of the flames that the pupils barely escaped with their lives, and clad only in their robes de nuit made their way over the icy and snow covered fields to the academy at St. Rose, where they were sheltered. St. Catherine's was one of the historic educational institutions of Kentucky, and was founded in 1804.

The receipts for the six months of the present fiscal year amounted to $277,837,472, and the expenditures to $263,899,971, a decrease in receipts of nearly $11,000,000 from the corresponding period last year, and an increase in expenditures of slightly more than five and a half millions.

A PRIZE YARN ABOUT A MIXED SEA MONSTER

Combination of Fish, Alligator and Bat Found.

Throws the Old Sea Serpent Into the Shade—Gigantic Survivor of Prehistoric Ages is Over Sixty-five Feet Long, and Equally at Home in Air or Sea.

Salt Lake, Utah.—A terrible, nameless, unclassified creature of the animal world is exciting the curiosity, wonder and fear of occasional visitors to Stansbury Island, in the southern portion of Great Salt Lake.

This monster, so strange and unnatural in appearance, has lately, it is said, been seen by several persons, but the best account of its characteristics and movement is given by Martin Gilbert and John Barry, two hunters who this week returned from an expedition over the island, in the course of which they studied the habits of this hitherto unheard of creature for three days.

The monster, which appears to be almost equally at home in the air, on the beach, or submerged in the briny waters of Salt Lake, is probably the sole survivor of a prehistoric species. It is doubtless the last representative of a family whose other members, dead ages since, have left the testimony of their existence in the primeval rocks of the mountains.

Arranging in concise form the description of this incredible relic of the animal world, from the accounts given by those who have observed it at close range, it seems in plain, unscientific language, a combination of fish, alligator, and bat.

DESCRIPTION OF THE BEAST.

In size it is simply tremendous. Gilbert places its length at sixty feet, while Barry, who is an amateur scientist, says that an examination of its tracks demonstrates that the monster must be sixty-five feet from head to tail.

The head is like that of an alligator, the eyes fiercely glowing, the jaws, capable of opening to a distance of ten feet from the top of the upper to the lower, are provided with a fearful array of sharp sawedged teeth; the body, so far as observation goes, is encased with heavy horny scales. As to this Gilbert and Barry are not positive, as the constant diving of the beast, if such it may be called, into the strong brine of the lake has incrusted it with a thick coating of salt, which, save near the wings, completely hides the body.

According to their account they first sighted it at a distance of between one and a half and two miles. The day was clear, the sun intensely bright. Gilbert's own words of the discovery are:

We were walking westward from the east shore of the island about 9 o'clock in the morning, when suddenly to the northwest there appeared a Thing. I don't know what to call it; it looked to me like a [illegible] rainbow folded into [illegible] moving rapidly [illegible]nded that for a few [illegible]d the evidence of my [illegible] object came nearer, [illegible]re so dazzling that it [illegible]efore it assumed def- [illegible]one who has not wit- [illegible]ht can conceive its [illegible]e mass of color was [illegible], radiant. I spoke to

[illegible]sake, man can you see [illegible] was no less astonished

[illegible] four minutes the mon- [illegible] was such that it no [illegible]ed the sunlight directly [illegible]d we could then discern [illegible]f the form. Its wings [illegible], stretching out over a [illegible]se, I should say at least [illegible] feet from tip to tip. The [illegible]portionately short and re- [illegible]of a huge fish. We were [illegible]ugh at this time to tell [illegible]e head, only we saw that [illegible] very long. In shape the [illegible] that of a crocodile."

[illegible]e a long account of how [illegible]v watched the monster, [illegible]ted its enormous wings, [illegible] and round in immense [illegible]h the air, gradually de- [illegible] approaching nearer to [illegible]declares that it was not [illegible] yards above their heads, [illegible]onvinced that the awful [illegible] about to attack them, he [illegible]monster with his rifle, a [illegible]n loaded with a steel-

[illegible] more of the [illegible]arry hastened [illegible]ght, and after [illegible]f hills to the [illegible]le trouble the [illegible] soil into the gloomy cavern feared at that time to make any closer inspection.

"These tracks," said Barry, "were five-toed, almost exactly like the imprint of a gigantic hand, if you can imagine a hand nearly four feet across the palm."

Gilbert and Barry constructed a barricade for themselves of the largest rocks they were able to handle and lay down to await the results.

The day wore on and the men were weary and almost despairing of success in their vigil, when, just at dusk, the horrible creature crawled slowly from the cave, and, pausing at its mouth to take flight, gave them their first view at close range.

Barry says that the hackneyed phrase of exaggeration, "made his blood run cold," is none too strong for the sight they saw.

"The monster slowly moved his great jaws," declared the hunter, in speaking of his experience, "until it seemed as if he could have swallowed a large horse at one mouthful. He gave a snort that might have been heard a mile, and then slowly spread his huge wings. We now saw that the huge body was coated with salt, apparently nearly a foot in thickness. This explained why the salt lumps dropped at our feet when the bullet struck the monster. By this we knew that the creature must spend much of its time in the waters of the lake.

"The great beast made a short run before taking flight, taking long jumps upon its hind legs and tail. The forelegs were comparatively short, and appeared to be used only when it crawled flat upon the ground.

"The frightful head was not more than ten feet from us when it rose in the air, but so well were we screened by our shelter of rocks that we were unobserved. The large, fiercely gleaming eyes, the sharp, serrated teeth, the wide expanse of wings that began to move rapidly as the horrible beast rose from the ground and passed directly over our heads, combined to make a terrible sight—one that I shall never forget.

"We watched it disappear in the gathering gloom of night, but were for a long time paralyzed with fear, not knowing when it might return. It was probably an hour later when it did come back.

"We heard the swish of the mighty wings before it could be seen, but as it drew nearer, by the light of the young moon in the west, we saw that carried in its great jaws was a large horse, which I suppose it had swooped down upon while feeding. The horse was badly crushed and mangled.

FEASTED ON THE HORSE.

"The monster carried its burden into the cave and we could hear the crunching of its jaws and the cracking of the horse's bones as the beast devoured its victim. After an hour or so all was still and we then slipped quietly away in the darkness and returned to our camp on the eastern shore of the island.

"Had it not been for a bad break in our boat we would have fled the island that night. As it was we worked all night to repair the craft, although the task might have been accomplished in two hours except that we feared to build a fire to afford light.

"It was just dawn and we were preparing to launch, when Gilbert said: 'There it comes again!' In an instant we turned the boat bottom up and crawled under it. One end was lifted about a foot above the end by a rock, and we were able to watch the monster's actions.

"It settled down on the beach less than fifty yards to the north and dived quickly into the lake. From its actions while nearly buried under the waves I judged that the creature was gathering and feeding upon the salt water shrimps which abound along the coast there. When the monster came up it was very close to us, and we were particularly impressed by the fact that the strong brine had no effect upon its eyes, which appeared lidless. Evidently the animal's food in the water was found by the sense of sight.

"Although of such gigantic size, there was nothing sluggish in the movements of the monster. It swam and dived as rapidly as any large fish.

"We watched it for perhaps half an hour as it gradually worked its way northward and finally disappeared."—Philadelphia Record.

Like a Boy's Pocket.

A most remarkable case of gastronomy for foreign bodies of the stomach was described at a meeti[illegible] the Academie de Medecine. Th[illegible]ent, a youth sixteen years old, had entered the St. Joseph Hospital for epilepsy. He had had melaena, and a rather sharp pain, accompanied by crepitation in the left hypochondrium. The operation was performed in June, and the following bodies were removed through an orifice of two and a half centimeters: Eight teaspoons, from eight to fifteen centimeters long; a thr[illegible] pronged fork; a letter file, twelve ce[illegible] meters long, two sharp points; a nee[illegible] six centimeters long; a knife bl[illegible] [illegible]meters long; a pi[illegible] lo[illegible] revived for evening bodices.

In England and Wales alone, we are told, there are 44,000 women bootmakers, 3329 ropemakers, 4370 saddle-makers; sad to say, there are 27,707 barmaids; 3850 butchers. But it is a hopeful sign that 5140 women earn their living by gardening. There are 3000 cycle makers, 117,640 tailors, who are women; there are 279 undertakers, 12 shepherds, and almost every trade has at least one woman representative in it, even the dock laborers and road workers.

Fashionable Writing Paper.

Hieratica, which was the writing paper of old Egypt, is actually reproduced at the present day and is in all respects now what it was then, a vegetable parchment on which were inscribed the writings of what Shakespeare calls "the antique world." Hieratica is absoiutely prepared from the papyrus, as of old, and is now sold at a price which makes it possible to the most shy and modest income. It can be had in all sorts of sizes, while for thoroughly satisfactory results it stands now, as in days when the world was young, quite alone.—Detroit Free Press.

Injurious Veils.

A German physician has discovered that the wearing of tight face veils may easily produce skin troubles. The nets catch and hold dust and entrap all general impurities of the air, and so, unless kept perfectly clean, they endanger not only the complexion, but the lungs. The dotted nets of course cannot be washed, and they should be discarded after reasonable wear or if they show any evidence of soil. Other veils can be easily cleaned by dipping them into clear tepid water into which a few drops of alcohol have been sprinkled. They may be dried by stretching over a pillow.—Detroit Free Press.

Rainbow Ostrich Plumes.

Wonderful indeed are the new fashions in ostrich plumes. Long, curling specimens, capable of completely encircling a very large hat, are beautifully tinted in rainbow fashion to show the melting colors of a prism.

A long plume may be colored white cream, buff, gold-color and orange; or it may be a marvellous harmony of white, tender blue, deep blue, purple-violet, lilac, mauve, pink, rose-color and crimson or wine color, in some portion of its curling length.

The changeable feathers are exceedingly "pronounced," and sober Philadelphia will no doubt take its time in adopting it. But in time it will come.

Chinese Fans and Puff Boxes.

The fans carried by Chinese ladies are of the flat, stiff description, the foldable kind being mainly used by men. When a lady's fan is of silk it is often beautifully painted. Even now the best of the painter's art is at the fan maker's service, but it consists not in new and original designs, but in copies of the masterpieces of other days which are still considered—at any rate in China—the most beautiful paintings on earth.

The puff box is a Chinese lady's constant companion, and wherever she looks at herself in the little mirror on its lid she is sure to put on just a touch more powder. For special occasions, such as a formal call or a wedding party, she often paints her face with a paste made of rice flour. This dries and imparts a deathlike whiteness which she finds charming. With a wet cloth she removes the paste from her eyes and lips, which are almost full and pouting, and then she wets her finger and draws it thrice down her throat. She has then finished all that custom could require in the way of her "make-up," and is as fascinating as she can make herself.—Detroit Free Press.

Influence of Women's Clubs.

Through women and women's clubs the arts and crafts movement is spreading rapidly. Mention has been made of the traveling exhibit to be established by the South Carolina Federation, and of the efforts of the individual clubs of the state to revive an interest in weaving among the country women and the mountain folk. In Tennessee a beginning has been made in the encouragement of native arts, and the leading newspapers are giving space to the subject, and highly extolling the work of the women.

Hingham, Mass., has an ideal arts and crafts organization. The old town was formerly noted for the production of wooden articles for the home and farm, tubs, buckets, piggins, troughs and similar articles, and this craft is one of the principal ones followed there in the present renaissance of hand work. The dipping of bayberry wax candles was, and is, another industry made profitable the[illegible] ties of bayberries grow o[illegible] barrens around the town, [illegible] ries, after crushing and ste[illegible] [illegible] candles coiled school, the weave of which has always been a favorite with the best basket makers in the world, because it is capable of such a large variation. The foundation of these baskets is of grass and sedge, the cornhusks being used for padding and to carry out the design.

For instance, to make a large scrap basket the first step is to procure a pound of manila hemp. Begin the basket with the hemp, as the coil is so small it is difficult to use the stiff, hard grasses. Sew with raffia, as the stitches can be made finer. Then proceed to build as the name indicates, with a continuous coil of the grass or fibre bound completely together with the familiar stitch of the southwestern Indians. This is done by sewing with a strong tapestry needle, threaded with raffia, over the coil and through the stitch underneath until the top is reached.

When ready to build the sides, take several strands of grass for a foundation and wrap the cornhusk about it; then sew as already indicated. It will thus be seen that the baskets are really of grass, the cornhusks being merely for ornamentation. In fact, they can only be used when wrapped over grass, for the pieces are too short for anything else.

The cornhusk baskets are especially commendable, as they are handsome, solid and give wide range of coloring for yellows, greens, browns, purples and reds, which may be woven to suit the individual taste. The cornhusks should be gathered now, and great care taken in selecting good colors and firm husks. The larger they are the better, for sometimes one can be split in several pieces, and used to wrap a coil of grass.—Indianapolis News.

Fashion Notes.

Lace is being used on cloth gowns as much as ever.

Braiding done by hand, in the most elaborate pattern, is seen on the newest gowns.

Pale gray combined with yellow or with green are two of the chic color combinations of the year.

The old-fashioned very long pointed front waist, quite high on the hips, is revived for evening bodices.

The latest walking skirts now hang back instead of forward, flare well below the hips, yet fit close to the figure.

The disposition to bring in flounced wide skirts in place of the close-fitting clinging ones, in favor so long, is most marked.

Deep collars and cuffs of embroidered satin are the latest notion as an accessory for waists of accordion or side plaited chiffon or net.

Sleeves are finished at the bottom with wide cuffs or in flowing, flare fashion rather than gathered into a band-like cuff in bishop style.

Light cloth dresses, trimmed with dark furs, are ideal for the early winter, and this combination will be much in evidence during the next few months.

All transparent materials in embroidered muslins and batistes, as well as embroidered pongees, are being more trimmed with embroidery or embroidered or lace applique figures than with lace this autumn.

Many small wrist bags of reindeer skin are set with watches. At one time the fad for watches in different articles of use and wearing apparel appeared to be on the decrease, but recently it has revived to some extent.

A white liberty gauze waist has sleeves tucked in wide horizontal tucks from the shoulder to below the elbow. The sleeve gradually widens from the top, and is quite voluminous where the tucks cease. The loose material is gathered in a band at the wrist. The waist is not tucked, but is laid in several wide box plaits in the front. A pointed collar of yellow lace falls low over the front and back of the waist.

Fortunes in Songs.

Mr. W. S. Gilbert and Mrs. D'Oyly Carte have explained the apparent drop in the value of the copyright of the Savoy operas. The subject recalls that the sale rights of popular songs are also assets of more value than one would imagine. For instance, the copyright of Mascheroni's "For All Eternity" sold for £2240, "Anchored" realized £1120, "Tell Her I Love Her So," £465; "Goodby, Sweetheart, Goodby," £462; "Ma Curly Headed Babby," £800; "The Arab's Farewell to His Steed," £640. Even pianoforte studies possess a valuable copyright. Mr. Oscar Beringer's series, written for the benefit of musical students, fetching the large sum of £2200. What songs like "Nazareth," "The Lost Chord," "Tommy Atkins" and "Soldiers of the Queen" have realized in their time is only known to the music publishers; but the profits must have been immense. The copyright of "Ehren on the Rhine," purchased by the publishers for a trifle, proved a small gold mine. 50,000 copies being sold in nine months. "Nancy Lee" is responsible for a sale of over 250,000 copies, and like "Charley's Aunt," is still running.—Men and Women.

Gladstone as a Giver.

Among other things to be gleaned from John Morley's new Life of Gladstone is that Mr. Gladstone was not a poor man. Hawarden, after great exertions on his part to clear the feet of brother-in-law, became his, with a [illegible]ent roll, comparatively early in INACCURACIES OF SUN DIALS.

Mental Corrections Must Be Applied to Indications of the Shadow.

Sun dials have so much to recommend their construction that failure to record time with absolute precision should not be regarded a serious fault. However, if they are properly made and are large, and if those who refer to them know what mental corrections to apply to the indications of the shadow, these interesting instruments will have a practical value, aside from their ornamental and historic character.

Owing to astronomical causes, which are well known, but which it is not necessary here to specify, the sun itself is not an accurate timekeeper. It is not on the meridian exactly at noon every day in the year. In fact, it is there only four times in twelve months. At the opening of the year it is not far out of the way, but by February 10 it is fifteen minutes slow, compared with a clock which is as perfect as a man can make it. On May 15 it is four minutes fast, on July 31 six minutes slow, and on October 27 sixteen minutes ahead of the clock. Keeping these eccentricities in mind, and making the proper discounts, one can with practice get within two or three minutes of the right time on any day in the year, if there is sunshine, and if the dial is mounted correctly.

In a previous article on this subject it was pointed out that the upright triangular plate which casts the shadow should stand in a north and south plane. Perhaps it will assist in accurately locating the plate if the maker sets it up on or near one of the four days when the sun is neither fast nor slow. These are April 15, June 15, August 31 and December 24. Another precaution is to be observed when laying out a north and south line. The compass needle does not point due north except in a few places. In most parts of this country there is a slight variation from the true north. Surveyors and mariners are familiar with that fact. The amount of this variation is very slowly changing, too. Since accuracy of adjustment is essential to satisfactory timekeeping with a sun dial, information should be obtained from a surveyor or other competent person about the necessary corrections to apply to the readings of a compass.

Our Oriental Customers.

Commerce between the United States and Turkey amounts to 54,000,000 piasters annually. This seems like a very considerable sum, but its apparent magnitude is somewhat reduced by the matter-of-fact announcement of the Department of Commerce and Labor, through its Bureau of Statistics, that a piaster is only four and a half cents in value (or, to be more accurate, 4.[illegible] cents). These are the figures of the Turkish government. Reduced to United States currency, they give a total value of a little more than two million dollars. The figures of the Bureau of Statistics, however, state our total commerce with Turkey last year at about six million dollars with Turkey in Europe and about five million dollars with Turkey in Asia. If that of Turkey's dependency in Africa—Egypt—were included, the total would be about twenty-three million dollars, but the figures of the Turkish government do not include that of Egypt.

With Turkey in Asia the commerce of last year was over five million dollars, but of this sum only $276,247 was exports and $4,897,428 was imports. If we consider Egypt as a part of Turkey, the total would be considerably enlarged, though still with a heavy balance of trade against the United States, as the figures of our commerce show our total exports to Egypt last year to be $470,375, and the total imports from Egypt $10,661,978. The Bureau of Statistics, it is proper to say, classifies Egypt as a part of Turkey, under the title of "Turkey in Africa." Including all of the possessions of Turkey, our total commerce with it last year was, in round terms, twenty-three million dollars.—Harper's Weekly.

Just Civic Pride.

Cong Slayden, of Texas, is telling his friends how he learned from a little girl of six how much New York people thought of their city. He was at the house of one of his New York acquaintances, whose daughter had begun to attend school a few weeks before.

"And what have you been learning at school, Agnes?" he asked her.

Then she proceeded to tell him about spelling and reading and her other studies, but seemed to be interested in geography more than anything else. The points of the compass occupied all her thoughts now.

"North's that way, teacher said," and Agnes pointed her finger. "It's not exactly right up Fifth avenue, but a little that way."

"Now don't you think the avenue ought to have been built north and south?" Slayden asked.

"Oh, well," was the reply, and there was not a trace of a smile, "I s'pose they'll change north and south to fit Fifth avenue before long."—New York Times.

HOUSEHOLD MATTERS

Hints to Housekeepers.

A nice way to prepare Frankforts or other sausages of commercial brand is to parboil them, split them in halves and then broil them. This is a New York idea.

It is well understood that water for drinking purposes should be boiled. The "flat" taste of boiled water can be removed, it is said, by beating rapidly with a Dover egg-beater just before using. This beats air into it, which is expelled in boiling.

Very few people are as careful as they ought to be about what they let go down the sink waste pipes and the kitchen sink. Plumbers grow rich on housekeepers' carelessness. Greasy water, coffee grounds, tea leaves, cereals, etc., are allowed to run down the kitchen waste-pipe, where eventually they become clogged and endless annoyance and inconvenience to clear. Water in which corned beef, etc., has been boiled should not be turned into the sink. Fats in its passage and deposits a coat of grease on the trap and on the pipe. Let it cool and remove the fat before pouring into the sink. If you do not use the fat for soap-making, burn it; it is cheaper and less trouble in the long run than to run it through the sink. Burn tea leaves and coffee grounds; it is surprising how much one can dispose of by fire with a little trouble.

Never throw combings, bits of string, threads, burnt matches or any such refuse into the pail or closet basin. Hair is particularly dangerous. It catches in any little irregularity of the inside of the pipe and serves to arrest the progress of other waste until accretion it clogs the whole sy[illegible]

A Boon to Housewi[illegible]

China in open stock sets i[illegible] conveniences of the present d[illegible] increasing prevalence of th[illegible] dinner and the practice of us[illegible] eral varieties of china for its ser[illegible] largely responsible for the change, the Washington Star. A woman some years ago purchased a handsome dinner set now feels that if she used it alone she would make a poor showing before her guests.

Different plates are used for every course. The service plates are of particularly fine china. The plates for the meat course are of a simpler and more substantial design than those for the dessert, and the after dinner coffee is served in cups as delicate as can be found. In the larger establishments dinner is served from the butler's pantry. Many of the dishes used in a simpler menage where the roast and its accompaniments are placed on the table are not required in the former case. The needs of the different housekeepers are as varied as the houses in which they live.

It is no more expensive to have several kinds of china than to have all the pieces alike. Open sets have made this possible. Within the last five years these have increased in size and number. Now there is practically no style of china that cannot be bought in open stock.

A set of china which the merchant keeps on hand, and from which his customer makes her selections, is much more complete than the one he would formerly have sold her entire. He is prepared to suit all tastes and meet all needs. He has tea pots in all sizes, chocolate pots equally varied and sugar bowls and creamers to match. A woman with a large, small or medium family finds exactly the set size she requires. If her family increases, she is able to increase her number of pieces, and to obtain the larger sizes.

It is also possible to replace any piece of china. The housekeeper is not, as in the old days, heart broken over the loss of a dish. It can easily be duplicated.

There are open sets not only in the fine china, but in the pottery. In this less expensive ware are delightful reproductions of old-time dark blue with quaint little low tea pots, sugar bowls and creamers. The pottery in lighter colors, in pinks and in pinks and greens combined, has something of the art nouveau designs. They are pleasing, even if they have not quite the charm of the reproductions.

RECIPES

Creamed Beans—Soak a cup of dried lima beans over night, drain and cook in boiling salted water until soft, but still whole. Drain; add three-fourths of a cup of cream, season with butter, salt and pepper, re-heat and serve.

Lamb Balls—Chop meat quite fine, season with salt and pepper, add one egg, form into balls; have saucepan, with water at the boiling point—water must not be boiling—drop the balls into the water and cook at the boiling point only twenty minutes; serve with tomato sauce.

Sandees—Chop some beef or mutton very fine; chop one green pepper, add it to the meat; season with salt and pepper, mix a little gravy with it; butter escallop dishes or shells, fill them two-thirds full with the mixture; spread over mashed potato that has had a little cream added to it; brush over with melted butter and brown in the oven.

Salad Dressing—Beat three eggs until very thick, add one cup of cream and beat well; rub two level tablespoonfuls of [illegible] in a little cold

RIPANS TABULES

Ripans Tabules are the best dyspepsia medicine ever made. A hundred millions of them have been sold in the United States in a single year. Every illness arising from a disordered stomach is relieved or cured by their use. So common is it that diseases originate from the stomach it may be safely asserted there is no condition of ill health that will not be benefited or cured by the occasional use of Ripans Tabules. Physicians know them and speak highly of them. All druggists sell them. The five-cent package is enough for an ordinary occasion, and the Family Bottle, sixty cents, contains a household supply for a year. One generally gives relief within twenty minutes.

DEADENING THE NOISE OF MACHINERY.

Suspended Foundations Said to Prove Satisfactory.

Hair felt has repeatedly received mention as a means of deadening vibrations and noise from machinery, placed, for this purpose, between engine bedplates and foundation capstones, and underneath rails subject to heavy train traffic. Now, however cork is said to have been used in Germany with the same end in view, the available particulars being to the effect that a sheet, made up of flat pieces of the cork, in mosaic fashion, corresponding in size to the bedplate of the noisy machine, and held together by an iron frame, is laid under the machine. What measure of success has been obtained with this new expedient is not told, though, as a means of temporary relief, it probably answered the intended purpose. The true solution of most, if not all, machinery vibration problems is, however, to be found in proper foundations, ample in area and weight, and it generally pays to provide these if at all practicable. To what exercise of ingenuity the engineer is sometimes put in accomplishing this was illustrated a dozen or more years ago in one large factory where, on an upper floor, a row of small engines had to be installed for the independent driving of a corresponding number of different machines. Though the building was of substantial construction, with steel floor beams, it was a foregone conclusion that that row of engines would cause trouble if set with nothing but the floor as foundation, and as it was undesirable to raise them much above the floor level, each engine was provided with a separate foundation, built up of brick and mortar in the usual way, but suspended by steel straps between the floor beams, and thus projecting down into the head room of the floor below. Seen from there, each foundation, with its engine, appeared as if resting on airy nothing. But those suspended foundations accomplished all that was expected of them as vibration absorbers.—Cassier's Magazine.

Hard to Exterminate.

The captain of a well-known Australian clipper, the Caduceus, wishing to clear his ship of rats, offered his crew a glass of grog for every rodent killed or captured. The result was speedily apparent in the diminished number of rats, yet, somehow or other, there were always a few, the crew, anxious for supplies of grog, having devised a means of manufacturing them out of oakum. The captain's curiosity was aroused one day by noticing a supposed rodent floating very "light" on the port quarter. He waited his chance, and when the next man appeared with a rat the captain remarked: "Throw it to windward." The result was dead against the sailor, for the oakum rodent was blown back onto the poop. Thenceforth there were no more rats and no more extra grog.—Shipping World.

The heart of Brittany never changes, but its face is rapidly losing many of its prominent characteristics with the leveling influence of the French republic. It is only far out of the beaten track, now, or on special occasions like fetes, that you see universally the costumes and customs of the old Armorican peninsula. Only an hour's journey from Quimper, the modernized chief town of Finistere, and you are among the Bigoudines, a people whose dress suggests the Eskimos and Chinese, whose faces are strongly Mongolian in type, and who in language, customs, and beliefs seem to have no relation with the rest of France. More and more the picturesque problem they present is coming to attract attention. Artists, students, and tourists alike are fascinated by it.—From Andre Sagou's "The Bigoudines," in the Century.

GOVERNOR OF ORE

CAPITOL BUILDING, SALEM, OREGON.

A Letter From The Governor of Oregon.

Peruna is known from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Letters of congratulation and commendation testifying to the merits of Peruna as a catarrh remedy are pouring in from every State in the Union. Dr. Hartman is receiving hundreds of such letters daily. All classes write these letters, from the highest to the lowest.

The outdoor laborer, the indoor artisan, the clerk, the editor, the statesman, the preacher—all agree that Peruna is the catarrh remedy of the age. The stage and rostrum, recognizing catarrh as their greatest enemy, are especially enthusiastic in their praise and testimony.

Any man who wishes perfect health must be entirely free from catarrh. Catarrh is well nigh universal; almost omnipresent. Peruna is the only absolute safeguard known. A cold is the beginning of catarrh. To prevent colds, to cure colds, is to cheat catarrh out of its victims. Peruna not only cures catarrh, but prevents it. Every household should be supplied with this [illegible] for coughs, colds and so forth.

The Governor of Oregon is an ardent admirer of Peruna. He keeps it continually in the house. In a recent letter to Dr. Hartman he says:

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Dear Sirs—I have had occasion to use your Peruna medicine in my family for colds, and it proved to be an excellent remedy. I have not had occasion to use it for other ailments.

Your very truly,
W. M. Lord.

It will be noticed that the Governor says he has not had occasion to use Peruna for other ailments. The reason for this is, most other ailments begin with a cold. Using Peruna to promptly cure colds, he protects his family against other ailments. This is exactly what every other family in the United States should do. Keep Peruna in the house. Use it for coughs, colds, la grippe, and other climatic affections of winter, and there will be no other ailments in the house. Such families should provide themselves with a copy of Dr. Hartman's free book, entitled "Winter Catarrh." Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

Army Remount Stations.

Members of the general staff of the army are considering the establishment of remount depots, where all horses and mules for use in the service may be received and trained before sent to various posts. The necessity for such depots has been urged by officers for some time, and Quartermaster-General Humphrey, and by other officers. Great breeding farms, where the government might carry on experiments in the raising of horses suited to the service, have been suggested, but this plan would require a large appropriation, and is not seriously considered. The general staff will doubtless agree on the location of several remount depots and give the proposed system for handling horses a trial. As most of the horses used by the army are supplied by the middle West, the depots will doubtless be in the Mississippi valley.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I can conscientiously recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to those of my sisters suffering with female weakness and the troubles which so often befall women. I suffered for months with general weakness, and felt so weary that I had hard work to keep up. I had shooting pains, and was utterly miserable. In my distress I was advised to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it was a red letter day to me when I took the first dose, for at that time my restoration began. In six weeks I was a changed woman, perfectly well in every respect. I felt so elated and happy that I want all women who suffer to get well as I did." —MISS GUILA GANNON, 359 Jones St., Detroit, Mich., Secretary Amateur Art Association. —$5000 forfeit if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

...Scene of Greatest Calamity in History of American Stage.

THE IROQUOIS A DEATH TRAP

More Than 600 Men, Women and Children Lose Their Lives in a Fire Panic.

Beautiful New Theatre, Supposedly Fireproof, Crowded With Women and Children Attending Matinee Performance, Becomes in a Flash a Caldron of Flame — Electric Spark From a Broken Wire Started the Blaze — Draught Swept the Flames Almost Immediately Into the Auditorium — Stairways Became Choked Quickly — Bodies Piled Three and Four Deep in Aisles — Fire Exits Not Adequate — Terrible Panic on the Streets.

Chicago, Ill.—More than 500 persons, mostly women and children, perished by fire in the Iroquois Theatre. It is estimated that the total number of the dead is 563.

The fire began while a matinee performance of "Mr. Bluebeard" was being played. An electric spark from a broken wire shot into the flies and an explosion followed. Then a panic ensued.

From that time on until the flames filled the place the death crush continued. A mass of humanity was jammed into the balcony stairway, surrounded by smoke and flames. The mass soon settled back into a death pose, and there they were found by firemen. Trucks, express wagons and patrol wagons were all in use carrying away the bodies.

The asbestos curtain in the theatre would not work, and the flames swept at once to the pit and adjoining walls. All the exits were soon choked by frantic women and children, and those on the inside, terror stricken at the advancing flames and smoke, were unable to move either way. Children were taken from the ruins, some burned to a crisp, and others trampled beyond recognition. Women by the score were found in a tangled and scorched mass near the stairway.

The theatre was almost in darkness in the second act. The stage was lighted only by the soft artificial beams from the calcium, which lent beauty to the scene during the singing of the "Moonlight Song" by the double sextette. A flash of flame shot across through the flimsy draperies, started by a spark.

A show girl screamed hysterically. The singers stopped short, but with presence of mind the director increased the volume of the music. Scores rose in their seats as the stage manager shouted an order for the continuation of the song. It was obeyed with feeble hearts. The girls forced the words from their throats until two of their number swooned.

Clouds of smoke poured from the stage into the auditorium, enveloping the struggling mass of panic-stricken men, women and children.

Behind the scenes all was confusion. It required but a moment to perceive that the fire had gone too far to be conquered by the amateur fire brigade formed by the stage hands. In the dressing rooms as high as the sixth story were the score of girls of the ballet. At the first alarm the elevator boy fled from his post, and the flames soon shot upward in the wings and made escape by the narrow stairway impossible.

The screams from the imprisoned girls in the upper rows of dressing rooms came to the ears of the more fortunate below, as they rushed to the stage doors. Some stopped for a brief moment, thinking to give aid, but the clouds of smoke, growing denser and denser, forced them to flee. Their escape even then was miraculous.

The blackened bodies which choked the aisles and stairways, the lines of policemen and firemen carrying limp forms from the building, the overtaxed hospitals, the rows of dead and dying in the surrounding buildings, which were thrown open to the sufferers, tell briefly the tale. Only a few of the terrifying incidents will ever be known.

Great loss of life was prevented and many lives were saved by the heroic rescue work of the students, faculty, janitors and workmen in the Northwestern University building. The rescue work of the people in the top balcony was effectively done by the people in the university building. The platform of the theatre fire exits on the top balcony was directly opposite the third floor fire escape platform of the university building and on a line with the law school lecture room. Kalsomniers, decorators and painters were at work in this lecture room, using large planks to make platforms.

The first seconds of the rush for life among those in the audience were quiet, according to those who live to tell the tale. Few, if any, in that throng realized what was to come. They thought only of themselves as they pushed and struggled for every inch as they advanced toward the exits.

For an instant the stairways leading from the balcony were a mass of struggling people, with scores behind constantly pushing closer and fighting to get out. Those in the van, unable to keep their footing, fell headlong.

Those behind fell over their prostrate forms, crushing and suffocating them. The scene was then a bedlam. Women and children were in the majority of the fighting crowd, and their shrieks of fear mingled with the groans of the injured and the prayers of supplicants to God.

Women seized their babies in their arms, frantically clung to them, beseeching ears that were deaf to entreaty to save them from the terrible fate impending. Had those appealed to been so disposed they could not have given the assistance so piteously besought.

In the last hope, born of desperation, scores of those in the balcony, climbed to the railing and leaped to the pit of the theatre, many feet below. Their bodies were found long afterward, when the smoke had cleared away and the firemen could grope their way with lanterns into the place.

The dense smoke quickly rose to the top of the building. To a score of those who had sought to jump from the gallery the smoke was kind, for it brought death quickly. Three women were found hanging over the rail, their faces distorted with agonies of death.

From a dozen sources the alarm went to fire headquarters, but before the vanguard of engines wheeled into Randolph street a dense crowd had gathered in front of the theatre. The firemen were quick to act, but hundreds of bodies were already motionless within the walls of the playhouse so recently opened.

An awe-stricken crowd stood fixedly as those who had escaped rest the door crushed out, [illegible] wild with fear. These yelled [illegible] top of their voices, and the [illegible] taken up by the crowd and [illegible] far into busy State street and the other avenues of commerce.

None realized at that minute what had occurred. Each man asked his neighbor if there had been loss of life or injury. Not until the first blackened and limp body was borne forth in the arms of a policeman did the importance of the disaster begin to dawn on those in the street.

In fifteen minutes nineteen dead bodies were carried out the Randolph street entrance. Then they came so fast that all count was lost.

Every hospital in the city hurried ambulances to the scene, and with them every surgeon who could be spared. They were as nothing, though, as compared to the need. Two and three, and in many cases even more, were huddled into the ambulance and hurried off to the hospitals, where kindlier attention could be given them.

The great majority of those who had occupied orchestra seats escaped with their lives, though scores were badly hurt in the rush. Some were knocked down, and with broken limbs were unable to rise.

They were left to die with a number of women who fainted from fright. With these bodies were found the corpses of those who had leaped from the balcony and gallery.

In the exits of the balcony and galleries the greatest loss of life occurred. When the firemen went to remove the bodies they found a hundred or more piled in a mass in each place. The clothes were torn completely away from some of the bodies. Here and there a jewelled hand protruded from the pile. All the faces were distorted with pain.

From beneath one mass there suddenly came the moan of a woman. Trembling hands plunged their way into the tangle of human forms, and with a mighty effort pulled to the surface the woman. The blackened lips parted, and a fireman bent over her to catch the words.

"My child, my poor little boy, where is he? Oh, do bring him to me."

Again the lips parted.

"Is he safe? Tell me he is safe and I can die."

"He is safe," the fireman muttered, and all knew his reply was best. She died, and her body was lifted with those of hundreds of others in that one spot.

The calamity was so overwhelming that the firemen and the policemen, who were the first to reach the upper parts of the house, could not realize its astonishing extent. They began by dragging a body or two from the terrible piles at the head of the stairways, as if they did not know the piles were made of human bodies.

Gradually the full significance of the catastrophe dawned upon them. All the lights of the theatre had been extinguished. The lanterns of the firemen cast only a dim glow over the piles of dead. From the bodies arose small curls of steam. The firemen had drenched the piles before they knew they were made of human corpses.

Then the work of taking out the inanimate forms began. There were constant appeals for more help. The bodies of little children, torn and bleeding, were tenderly lifted, each by a fireman or policeman, and carried to the street below. Two or three men were needed to bear the heavier burdens.

Every now and then a form faintly breathing was dragged out of the pile. These were handled with even more tenderness than the others as they were carried down the marble stairway of the gilded foyer. Now and then a faint groan was heard coming from the bottom of the pile. This was the signal for renewed and frantic efforts on the part of the rescuers to untangle the human mass.

In the balcony scattered about the aisles and among the charred seats, were found many bodies. One mother, clasping her child, was found kneeling as if in prayer, with her back to the stage, from which had come the death dealing sheet of flame. She had protected her child from the flames, but the little one was dead in the arms of its mother. As the work of rescue progressed dozens of blankets were brought, and the bodies were carried down in these.

The scene, immediately after the fire was got under control and the work of rescue began, was appalling. All the gilt and tinsel of the theatre, all the silks and plushes, all the rich hangings, all the frescoes, had been wiped out. The flames from the stage had swept the entire theatre and left their blight everywhere. The upholstery on many of the seats was still intact, though. But for the failure of some one to act, when action meant life for hundreds, only a few might have perished. The thin sheet of asbestos that could have saved all failed.

In a remarkably short time men whose wives and children had gone to see "Mr. Bluebeard" reached the scene. It was a hopeless task to try to find their loved ones. Through the tiers of dead and dying in the buildings all about men and women searched with frenzied faces. Now and again a searcher would find one for whom he looked. When the dead was found the searcher knelt in prayer.

One man pushed his way into the lobby of the theatre. His eyes were blinded with fear and he did not see the firemen pass out with unconscious forms. Before a group of men he stood for a moment. Then he asked if any one had been injured in the fire.

"My wife and boy were there," he murmured. "Did every one get out?"

Tears came to the eyes of the men in the little group. At that instant five firemen staggered down the stairs, each bearing a human form. One of the men pointed to them, and the husband and father fell to the floor.

Amid even such sad scenes the pickpockets were busy. The police kept watch as best they could, but the ghouls snatched many purses from the dead and dying, and wrenched rings from the fingers that could no longer offer resistance. Several of these men were caught in their work. They received at the moment punishment all too light for their crime. Only a few were arrested and taken to the police station, where they will be held to await the course of the law.

The chorus was compelled to dress in the cellar. Many of the women were in the dressing room when the fire started. Exit from the cellar was cut off by heavily barred doors. The men were forced to break them open. During this delay many of the girls received painful burns. The girls were forced into the street wearing tights. They took refuge in the Union Hotel and the Sherman House.

Viola MacDonald, one of the most beautiful chorus girls on the stage, was in tights when the cry of "fire" rang through the theatre. She turned to the girl next to her and said:

"I'll not go out on the street in these tights if I am burned to death."

She then ran down stairs to a dressing room to put on her skirt. She got into the skirt and then heard a crash overhead. She found her egress barred by falling and burning timbers. She was the last person to leave the stage part of the theatre without injury. She was hauled through a coal hole by three brawny firemen.

Father McDonald of the Holy Name Cathedral, in company with S. E. Carroll, came along Dearborn street, when the shrieks of the chorus girls who tried to get out of the theatre reached them. Father McDonald and Mr. Carroll rushed into the alley and saw four girls trying to get out through a coal hole back of the stage of the theatre. The priest and his friend rescued the four women, who were taken to their homes. Their names are Violet Young, Dora Selfe, Alice M. Bartlett and Dodie V. Goodman.

In the basement of the theatre when the fire started, Maggie Levine was in charge of twelve girls who were preparing to appear in the scene entitled "The Hunters." When Miss Levine heard the cries of fire and the sounds of the commotion following over her head, she shouted, "My God, girls what can be the matter?"

A moment later a panic stricken crowd of fifty or more chorus girls were struggling for their lives. Smoke rolled down through the trap doors in suffocating clouds and almost obliterated the dim lights from the incandescents. Doxie Marlowe, Dot Downing, Zaza Belasco and Marie Janette were knocked down and trampled by their sister chorus girls and the few men in the chorus. Doxie Marlowe was so much overcome by the smoke that she was unconscious for the time being and had to be carried out.

James Gallagher, a member of the men's chorus, took command of the frightened and half-suffocated girls and instructed them to take hold of one another's hands. He took the lead and grasping the foremost of the girls by the hand led the way through the basement from the stage to the front of the theatre building, where he reached the coal cellar under the sidewalk in Randolph street.

With a stick he forced the coal hole covers off and this sufficed to signal the firemen that help was wanted. Ladders were lowered and each of the fifty girls and their male companions were drawn out of the basement.

Some had sisters and all had friends in the blazing building. The bitter cold pierced them through and through for they were clad only in their thin stage gowns, with necks and arms exposed. Nevertheless, they had to be dragged from their station in the alley and into neighboring stores.

SCIENCE NOTES.

If a small quantity of radium is held against the forehead while the eyes are closed one will see light.

Microscopic experiments have shown that the electrically made steel is not different in any way from crucible steel.

Professor Dunbar of Hamburg claims to have discovered the poison in the pollen of flowers which causes hay fever, and also its antidote.

Successful experiments have been made in generating electricity to light railway trains by placing a fan on the front end of the locomotive. The pressure of the air revolves the fan and produces the power.

Many micro-organisms remain alive though frozen in liquid hydrogen. The temperature of liquid hydrogen is about one-quarter that of liquid air, just as that of liquid air is about a quarter that of the average mean temperature.

Indisputable evidence that the English race has deteriorated seriously in physique is found in a comparison of the measurements of the men selected for the army in 10 years, as shown by the report of the director-general.

The Russians are experimenting with a "water-clad" battleship, which has an upper deck of cork and a second deck of armor. The space between the two can be filled with water; then the ship floats a foot under the sea's surface.

The birds of Lapland are reported by H. Goebel to number 198 special. Of these 138 certainly breed in that country, 34 probably do so, 17 are stragglers and six winter visitors, one is an ocean species and seven are seen only in the Solovetski islands.

If an electron is represented by a sphere an inch in diameter an atom of matter on the same scale is a mile and a half. Or if an atom of matter is represented by the size of a theatre, an electron is represented on the same scale by a printer's full stop.

Animal foods, judged by bulk and weight, are more expensive, pound for pound, than vegetable foods. But, as a whole, vegetable foods are not more economical. Animal foods furnish more than six-tenths of the protein and nine-tenths of the fat of the total food consumed.

About a square mile of France has been worn away by the English channel in the last five years. In North Brittany has been noted a gradual subsidence of the land which has been in progress since 709, at which time the channel islands were joined to the coast by an isthmus.

Baseball a Popular Game in Alaska.

Baseball is popular in Alaska. The fans follow their favorite team from one town to another, even if the fare on the steamer sometimes amounts to $100. One is reminded of the fact that he is really in the land of the midnight sun when this poster confronts him: "Baseball — Championship series — Game called at 9 p. m." At the conclusion of the ball game the tennis enthusiasts, if they feel so disposed, may enjoy a set before dressing for the party.

In order to keep in touch with the world, two Alaskan newspapers, the Juneau Dispatch and the Skagway Alaskan, maintain a little press association of their own. They keep a man in Seattle, who reads the papers and cables in brief the most important news. They had extras out announcing the death of the pope an hour after the American papers were told of it. Considering that the commercial rate for a 10-word message to Alaska is $5.50, this is very commendable enterprise.

The newspaper men of the Klondike are equally progressive. The Dawson News has an excellent plant. It makes its own half-tones, runs a color supplement, and uses typesetting machines—all this in a place where it was thought nature never intended white people to live, and where they never would have lived if gold had not drawn them there. Some writer has remarked that the way to find the North Pole is to circulate the news that it is surrounded by a gold field and people will go to it, even if they have to crawl over swaying ice fields on their hands and knees. Many of them are already so far north that they must travel southward several months before they reach a place where mail is delivered once a year.

Noiseless Powder.

So many of our disasters in South Africa have been attributed to smokeless powder that it is rather alarming to hear that a German inventor named Berguel claims to have brought within range of practical use in warfare a gunpowder that explodes without making the slightest sound. He is stated to have spent £100,000 in experiments during the past five years, which have resulted in his discovery of the methods of making the deadly material. If there is really anything in this discovery it is to be hoped that we will become familiar with its uses before we enter on another campaign. —London Tatler.

The Love That Casteth Out Fear.

By Helen Oldfield.

UNDOUBTEDLY every one, man or woman ought to know ones own mind, but undoubtedly, also, there may be many who come short of their duty to themselves in this respect. Therefore it is scarcely surprising that the question should be mooted by one or another. "How is one to know for certain whether one is really in love or not?"

To those who ask such questions there is only one answer—either they are at a great distance from love, or already within its grasp while trying to persuade themselves that they are free. For it is not often that love does not make its presence plainly manifest, and the heart which he claims as his own cannot long ignore the sweet insistence of his rule.

Still, it is a fact that people—women more than men—frequently fancy themselves deeply in love when in truth they feel only a passing fancy for some one possessed of an agreeable manner.

To meet a stranger a few times, and then to discover to one's mingled joy and sorrow that that stranger is dearer than the tried and trusted friend of years; to be willing to forsake father and mother, and leaving all else, cleave willingly unto the beloved—this is scarcely a state of mind or heart that leaves much room for doubt upon the part of those who experience it.

What do we wish to know of any worthy person so much as how he has sped in the history of sentiment? And what fastens attention in the intercourse of life like any passage betraying affection between two parties?

Young girls not infrequently have an idea that having a lover and falling in love is a necessary part of their entrance into womanhood; the word "fall" suggesting a sort of predestined helpfulness. Should no such event take place within a short time after her debut she is restless and dissatisfied. She sees other girls of her own age, some of whom she is assured are not superior to her in either good looks or other charms, who become engaged and marry, while she is possessed of the mortifying sense of social failure.

In this strait she catches at the first straw which offers and fancies feelings which do not exist. She is apt to exaggerate any little attentions paid her, even the commonplace courtesies of the ballroom, into a positive avowal, and, worse still, she misconstrues the flutterings of vanity in her own heart for the emotions of real love.

This fictitious sentiment she feeds upon day dreams and novel reading. Sooner or later, however, the illusion vanishes, and the sense of emptiness which it leaves behind is magnified, perhaps, into a great sorrow, which is petted and nursed until it casts a shadow over all the after years. Or, perhaps, the dream is realized in so far as marriage is concerned, but with what security for happiness?

There may be sufficient congeniality of tastes and dispositions and enough natural amiability to prevent discord or open rupture, but the chances are all the other way, and little happiness can be expected for the couple who have married under such auspices.

"Falling in love" is usually a gradual process, a gentle descent more than a sudden plunge. Indeed, it ought not to be a descent at all.

True love should elevate rather than lower one's aims and ideals in life. And when true love comes, even though it be, as sometimes chances, like a thief in the night, instead of as a fairy prince with silver trumpet and golden drum, there need be no fear but that he will make his presence known, that he will give the countersign at sound of which the gates of the fortress must fly open.—Chicago Tribune.

CLANTON HIGH SCHOOL.

There has been a change made in the corps of teachers in the school. Miss Ida B. Horn, who had charge of the intermediate department under Professor H. T. Wallace, has resigned, and Mrs. W. F. Middleton was installed in her stead Tuesday. The measles have cut down the attendance for the past week, but in all other respects the school is doing well.

SENTENCE AFFIRMED.

Will Lucas, who was tried and found guilty at the spring term of 1903 of the murder of John Payne and appealed to the supreme court, will have to go to the penitentiary. The supreme court refused to grant him a new trial. The decision was handed down Monday. The sentence is fifteen years.

FARMERS' INSURANCE.

At the annual meeting of the Farmers' Insurance Association of Madison county January 6, 1904, the report showed all losses paid for the year at a total cost of $2 per thousand in assessments.

Thorsby, January 11, 1904.

Editor Union:

Thorsby is still on the L. and N. railroad and a good number of people coming in from the north, but I don't hear of any sales. Thorsby did herself up when they divided the school, just as was expected. Neither school is any good compared to what it was a year ago, and the wise men are in the saddle. What will be next can't be told, but I understand the blind tiger business is flourishing in this town. The good people done all they could to put a stop to this business, but the anti-license ticket had no chance, and so the retail will be continued and with the present administration we are powerless to knock the retail wine business out, but we will continue to hammer at it. With best wishes,

For Sale.--One horse, two horse, three horse and four horse farms for sale. Land lies level, near the railroad, well improved. Terms to suit purchaser. L. H Reynolds, Jemison, Ala

Professor Haman, an authority on the subject, says the total number of Jews is 10,000,000, of whom two-thirds are in Europe. Russia has 5,500,000; Austria-Hungary, 1,860,000; Germany, 568,000; Roumania, 300,000, and Great Britain, 200,000. The United States has 1,000,000, Asia has 250,000, Africa, 270,000, and Australia, 17,000. He says that not less than 200,000 Jews embraced the Christian religion in the nineteenth century.

Canada has one Pacific railroad, has arranged to build another and projected a third. In improved waterways the Canadians are a long way ahead. The Dominion, with only 5,000,000 peopls, is making a great record in providing transportation facilities.

SPORTING BREVITIES.

The New York Athletic Club made a profit of $70,000 in 1903.

The New York Americans have traded Tannehill for Hughes, of the Boston Club.

In the fourth consecutive year Cornell College team won the chess tourney for the Rice trophy.

The University of Pennsylvania track team will take part in the athletic meet in St. Louis, Mo., in February.

John E. Madden now owns the two-year-old Robin Hood, which was formerly the property of James R. Keene.

Exclamation, a cast-off from S. S. Brown's racing stable, won the New Year's Handicap at New Orleans, ridden by W. Hicks.

American automobile records were smashed at Daytona, Fla., when C. Schmidt, drove the "Gray Wolf" one mile in 50 2-5s.

The Pacific Coast League will indorse a two-season schedule for 1904, for eight months is pretty long for one championship race to run.

The Grand American Handicap for 1904 will be held on the grounds of the Indianapolis Gun Club, Indianapolis, Ind., some time in June, on dates yet to be selected.

The circuit of the American Baseball Association will remain the same as last year, with clubs at Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Columbus, Louisville, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Toledo.

Joe Corbett, who is being sought by several big clubs in the East, won twenty-four games for Los Angeles during the past season and lost seventeen. He ranked fourth in the batting list with a record of .337.

St. Louis promoters have arranged a world's championship pool tournament to be held in February. The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company will give a new trophy, and the cash prizes will aggregate $1000.

Betterment of The Community.

By Woodrow Wilson, President of Princeton.

PEOPLE have worked themselves into a state of worry over questions of no more importance than whether a man shall or shall not wear a gray tie at a morning wedding, or whether a girl may ask a man to come and see her if she likes him.

Let us neither underrate the value of detail, nor mistake the reason for rules of behavior. Rules makes social intercourse easier, but many rules which are excellent and necessary in a complicated society such as Washington or Newport are absurd if applied in smaller towns or country places, where life is simple and rules may be few. Because certain methods are in vogue at a court reception, it does not mean that these methods need be followed by the housewife who gives a party to her village neighbors. Perhaps everybody would be more comfortable with simpler ways. And so in most other matters of etiquette. What might be good for one place could be bad in another if it seemed forced and exotic. Manners should adjust themselves nicely to every society. You must in a certain sense, be your own law; you must act from within; you cannot read a book and become a lady.

It is a curious fact that an attempt to behave properly frequently interferes with behavior. To act simply and naturally is of more importance than to get every detail correct. It is better to shake hands at the wrong time (according to the book) if you do it heartily and honestly, than to pause and stare and show that you are in doubt as to what to do. Never despise rules if they are helpful; do not go out of your way to transgress acceptable ones; but, on the other hand, do not make laws of those laid down by people for other conditions. Be natural, and use common sense.

Thorsby, January 11, 1904.

Editor Union:

Thorsby is still on the L. and N. railroad and a good number of people coming in from the north, but I don't hear of any sales. Thorsby did herself up when they divided the school, just as was expected. Neither school is any good compared to what it was a year ago, and the wise men are in the saddle. What will be next can't be told, but I understand the blind tiger business is flourishing in this town. The good people done all they could to put a stop to this business, but the anti-license ticket had no chance, and so the retail will be continued and with the present administration we are powerless to knock the retail wine business out, but we will continue to hammer at it. With best wishes,

Professor Haman, an authority on the subject, says the total number of Jews is 10,000,000, of whom two-thirds are in Europe. Russia has 5,500,000; Austria-Hungary, 1,860,000; Germany, 568,000; Rcumania, 300,000, and Great Britain, 200,000. The United States has 1,000,000, Asia has 250,000, Africa, 270,000, and Australia, 17,000. He says that not less than 200,000 Jews embraced the Christian religion in the nineteenth century.

Canada has one Pacific railroad, has arranged to build another and projected a third. In improved waterways the Canadians are a long way ahead. The Dominion, with only 5,000,000 people, is making a great record in providing transportation facilities.

SPORTING BREVITIES.

The New York Athletic Club made a profit of $70,000 in 1903.

The New York Americans have traded Tannehill for Hughes, of the Boston Club.

In the fourth consecutive year Cornell College team won the chess tourney for the Rice trophy.

The University of Pennsylvania track team will take part in the athletic meet in St. Louis, Mo., in February.

John E. Madden now owns the two-year-old Robin Hood, which was formerly the property of James R. Keene.

Exclamation, a cast-off from S. S. Brown's racing stable, won the New Year's Handicap at New Orleans, ridden by W. Hicks.

American automobile records were smashed at Daytona, Fla., when C. Schmidt, drove the "Gray Wolf" one mile in 50 2-5s.

The Pacific Coast League will indorse a two-season schedule for 1904, for eight months is pretty long for one championship race to run.

The Grand American Handicap for 1904 will be held on the grounds of the Indianapolis Gun Club, Indianapolis, Ind., some time in June, on dates yet to be selected.

The circuit of the American Baseball Association will remain the same as last year, with clubs at Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Columbus, Louisville, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Toledo.

Joe Corbett, who is being sought by several big clubs in the East, won twenty-four games for Los Angeles during the past season and lost seventeen. He ranked fourth in the batting list with a record of .337.

St. Louis promoters have arranged a world's championship pool tournament to be held in February. The Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company will give a new trophy, and the cash prizes will aggregate $1000.

Betterment of The Community.

By Woodrow Wilson, President of Princeton.

PEOPLE have worked themselves into a state of worry over questions of no more importance than whether a man shall or shall not wear a gray tie at a morning wedding, or whether a girl may ask a man to come and see her if she likes him.

Let us neither underrate the value of detail, nor mistake the reason for rules of behavior. Rules makes social intercourse easier, but many rules which are excellent and necessary in a complicated society such as Washington or Newport are absurd if applied in smaller towns or country places, where life is simple and rules may be few. Because certain methods are in vogue at a court reception, it does not mean that these methods need be followed by the housewife who gives a party to her village neighbors. Perhaps everybody would be more comfortable with simpler ways. And so in most other matters of etiquette. What might be good for one place could be bad in another if it seemed forced and exotic. Manners should adjust themselves nicely to every society. You must in a certain sense, be your own law; you must act from within; you cannot read a book and become a lady.

It is a curious fact that an attempt to behave properly frequently interferes with behavior. To act simply and naturally is of more importance than to get every detail correct. It is better to shake hands at the wrong time (according to the book) if you do it heartily and honestly, than to pause and stare and show that you are in doubt as to what to do. Never despise rules if they are helpful; do not go out of your way to transgress acceptable ones; but, on the other hand, do not make laws of those laid down by people for other conditions. Be natural, and use common sense.

HOW THE INDIANS TELEGRAPH.

Long Before Science Brought the Electric Spark Signal the Redman Had Devised a System of "Far Writing" Almost as Efficient as We Have To-Day.

ONE windy, rainy morning I went to the tepee of old Hoo-sis-mox-mox (Yellow Hair), who had come to visit his friends among the tribes of the Umatilla Reservation at the time of their midsummer pow-wow. I had seen him and wanted to have a talk with this veteran Palouse chief, born over a hundred years ago.

The old man was not at home. Several young Indians lay in the dripping tepee, stretched upon their blankets. As I started to leave the shelter of the wigwam, one of the young fellows rose to his elbows and said to me:

"My friend, you had better not attempt to go until the storm is over. Besides, I fancy Hoo-sis-mox-mox will be back pretty soon. You will find (I learn you are a newspaper man) that he will tell you thrilling stories. He knows scarcely any English, but as I am familiar with both his language and yours I shall gladly act for you as interpreter."

"You will certainly be capable of doing that," said I to the young man.

"I suppose I should," he answered back. "Only a short while ago I held a chair at Che-ma-wa, the Indian College, you know, near Seattle.

"You see, I am just on a visit to some of my friends and relatives, who belong to the tribes of this reservation. I am a Yakima, yet I have here many kin folks. And there is a great pleasure sometimes in casting aside the conventionalities of civilization.

"This blanket? Oh, that is the most comfortable thing to wear, when one lives in a tepee. It serves for coat, [illegible] and cover. I lived the [illegible] four years once, but hadn't on a blanket for a long time until yesterday. Here, pull off your coat and try one."

I wrapped myself within the folds of the bright woolen.

"Now, take a cigarette, half close your eyes, dream and you will be an Indian veritably," said my new acquaintance.

Comfortably stretching out, I little cared for the rainstorm or the return of Yellow Hair. I learned from my companion, who name was Stonewall Jackson, that his father, soon after the Civil War, had come from Tennessee to the State of Washington, and, like many of our pioneers, married an Indian girl. My friend, then, was an educated half-breed.

"You have tried on, then, both the wild life and the civilized. Which do you like the better?" I asked.

"Why, certainly, I prefer the civilized life, but can you not see how those who have been reared close to nature's heart would choose the wild? It must have been some satisfaction to my mother's people to roam at will over this vast country and have no barbed wire fences in their way and no signs stuck about, 'Keep off the grass.' Their tribal warfare was only daring sport. And wait until you see the big parade! You will say that it equals a pageant of kings."

"At any rate, when the Indians were called upon by the whites to give up the larger part of their country—they fought."

"That was in the war of '55?"

"Yes; in what is known as the Yakima War, because it was led by Kami-a-kin, head chief of the Yakima Indians."

"Your mother's people?"

"Yes."

"Well, what was the cause of that war? I know that you can discuss it fairly, as you have in you the bloods of the two races."

"There were many causes. In the first place, I must say for the Indian that until he was badly abused he was always very good to the white man. Read the journals of early explorers and you will find that all the tribes in this country, with the exception of the Wishrams, were kind to the whites, giving them ponies, and, at times, dividing with them their scanty stores of food. The Indians were confiding, and traders among the pioneers took advantage of them, exchanging worthless trinkets for valuable furs. The missionaries tried to teach them that their inherited religion was false. Settlers poured in and occupied their lands. They stood everything but being driven from their pastures and hunting grounds. This was the culminating cause of the war.

"And it was a fierce war, too. All tribes from the Pacific to the Rockies acted in concert. They made their first and last great attempt to oust the Bostons—Boston man, you know, is what the Indian calls the white man, because the first expedition of whites to this country was from Boston. The Boston man then was gradually driving the Indians from their lands. The various tribes made simultaneous attacks at places many hundred miles apart."

"But how could they do this? They couldn't use telegraphic instruments," said I.

"Oh, yes, they could, literally, telegraph, meaning 'Write far.' The Indians have always had a method of signaling which is almost as quick as telegraphing. They do this by building fires that send up columns of smoke. For example, a fire left to burn two minutes, then put out and started again after two minutes is to the Indian what the clicking of the key is to the telegraph operator. When Custer was killed Indians told Mrs. Custer of it the next day after it happened. She was at Fort Lincoln—over 300 miles from where her husband was massacred."

"Are the Indians, then, always on the lookout for signals?" I asked.

"Oh, yes, continually when they apprehend war. They send runners from tribe to tribe of those allied and establish a signal code; they appoint signal stations. These are along the trails. The Indians, you know, away before the times of the whites, had a trail clear from the mouth of the Columbia to the Mississippi. They are always built high up on ridges. The Indians, fearing surprise, never travel in a valley."

"But didn't the whites sometimes interpret these signals?"

"Yes, sometimes. But they were unable to help themselves much, and they could not answer back. My father has told me that during this very war of which we speak a band of whites coming West were told by friendly Nez Perces away over in Idaho of the forthcoming battle of Walla Walla, in the State of Washington, several days before it took place."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Why He Stayed.

The chapel of a northern fishing village used to depend for its services on the occasional help of the clergy of the nearest town. One very wet Sunday the clergyman who volunteered to do the duty drove over in a fly. Tolling the chapel bell himself, he announced his arrival to the natives, but for a long time no one appeared.

At last one solitary person came in and took a seat at the very back of the chapel. The clergyman then found his surplice and conducted the service. That ended, he remarked to his audience of one that perhaps a sermon was superfluous.

"Oh, please go on, sir," was the flattering reply, and the clergyman mounted the pulpit.

In the course of his address he expressed the fear that he was wearying his hearer, and was gratified to be told that he could not be too long. The sermon, consequently, was lengthened out to some forty minutes.

When it was ended the preacher expressed a desire to shake hands with the gentleman who had listened to him with such evident appreciation. Imagine his consternation at discovering on a nearer view (for he was somewhat short sighted) that he had been preaching to the driver of his fly, who was all the while charging overtime.—London Tit-Bits.

Mechanical Umpire.

Following close on the invention of a pitching gun to supplant the star twirler of the diamond, says the New York Evening Sun, comes news from Canada for an invention to aid the umpire in making correct decisions on plays at first base. This new device, which has been patented, consists of an electric plate attached to the initial bag, and so arranged as to ring an electric bell if the first baseman touches the bag before the runner. On the other hand, if the batter reaches first base before it is touched by the baseman, the plate is so adjusted that the bell will not ring.

Assuming that the device is always in working order, the umpire may, if he wishes, turn his back and be sure of giving an accurate decision at first. If the bell rings, the runner's out; if it doesn't, he's safe; sounds simple.

Baseball people are now eagerly awaiting news of the invention of a batting machine which shall swell the average of every wielder of the wagon-tongue to the .300 per cent. mark.

Scholar or Athlete.

Statistics would tend to show that while the chance of the kind of distinction recorded in "Who's Who?" is about the same for the crew as for the average of the class and is much greater for the captains of the crew, it is for the football and baseball men far less than for the average graduate. Such a result cannot be attributed entirely to the fact that high scholars no longer play upon the nine or upon the eleven, for this is equally true of the crew. In fact, from 1861 to 1898 no member of the crew won a Bowdoin prize or stood in the first seven of his class, and only one took final honors in any subject; but the oarsmen proved in other ways that they possessed in as great a degree as the average of the class the qualities that make for distinction. Why should not this be true of the baseball and football men also?—Atlantic Monthly.

A Quick Change.

Walter A. Wyckoff, professor of sociology in Princeton, was once traveling, disguised as a tramp, in search of information. While on a railroad train out West they came to a very dark tunnel, and one of his fellows asked a passing train hand how long it would take to reach daylight at the other end. "Oh, about half an hour," snapped the man, as he hurried away. The traveler, as Dr. Wyckoff could dimly see, at once began fumbling with a grip which he had. In about three minutes the train shot into daylight once more and everybody saw that the traveler had intended to use the thirty minutes of darkness in changing his shirt. There he sat, thunderstruck, his coat, shirt, necktie and collar thrown over the next seat, as naked from the waist up as a man about to take a bath.

Always in Stock.

A chemist was boasting in the company of friends of his well-assorted stock in trade. There isn't a drug missing," he said.

"Come, now," said one of the bystanders, by way of a joke, "I bet that you don't keep any spirit of contradiction, well stocked as you pretend to be."

"Why not?" replied the chemist, not in the least embarrassed at the unexpected sally. "You shall see for yourself." So saying he left the group and returned in a few minuts leading by the hand—his wife.—London Tit-Bits.

PEARLS OF VENEZUELA

TWO-THIRDS OF THE WORLD'S SUPPLY FOUND IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Beds of Pearl-Bearing Oysters Found on Reefs Miles Long—Great Forces of Fishermen Constantly Searching for Them.

"At present two-thirds of the supply of pearls comes from South America," said B. C. Durall, who has but recently returned from a visit to tropical countries. "Off the coast of Venezuela great reefs of pearl oysters are found, in two to eight fathoms of water, and the natives, Spanish and Indians, descendants of the Aborigines, fish for pearls for a livelihood. About 600 boats with crews work most all the time. These boats consist of a crew of four men, dredging machinery, a net with sinkers to drag in the oyster shells.

"On an island which is off the coast away from the rain belt, and in shallow water, nothing is produced but fancy shells, coral and pearls. The natives go almost nude, and live on fish and fruit, but trade in pearls. They will show you strings of them, papers full of them. Almost everyone has them, some have fine specimens, others the small seed pearls. Pearls to these people are almost like money, and the natives will stop you on the street and offer you pearls at most any price, as pearls is their commodity, and the supply seems to be inexhaustible.

"It is the desire of Germany to purchase this lonely island as a 'coaling station,' as they want a foothold in the West Indies. The government decided to sell for about $60,000, but the United States refused to allow any foreign power to purchase it, and it remains a barren place, occupied by about 4,000 natives, a very few foreigners, and pearl fishing is the industry of the people.

"A British company employs 14 divers who work from boats launched at sea. In suits of rubber, the divers are lowered by a rope, air is pumped to them, and in the clear water they see the pearl oysters and pick them up and place them in sacks. In this way about 70 bushels of shells is secured each day, which produces about a half a pint of pearls, and worth from $1,000 to $10,000. The company's business averages $5,000 per day; sometimes one pearl will be found worth $6,000. The entire product of the company is sent to London for disposition.

"One diver can earn as much as two boats with crews," says Mr. Durall. "It takes 12 men almost all day to open the shells and take the pearls from the meat of the oyster. The pearl is almost invariably in the water meat of the oyster, but sometimes it is deposited in the shell, in which case it is not so valuable as it cannot be torn loose in perfect shape.

"Pearl fishing has its dangers, as in these waters are man-eating sharks, feeding upon the oyster beds, and woe to the diver who encounters a hungry shark. A sharp steel rod is carried, and generally the diver by a quick thrust can disable the shark and be pulled up, before the shark makes a lunge, but many hairbreadth escapes are related, and I saw widows and orphans whose husbands or fathers have been divers and lost their lives in the sea, most all eaten by sharks. Great walruses are in the sea, but they are not dangerous; they swim in twos and fours lined up like soldiers, with their bodies bent with the waves. It is a beautiful sight to see these great fish coming up and down in true military style.

"Pearls are found here in all shapes and sizes, mostly round, some oval and pear-shaped, in colors of white and yellow, but some are black and Oriental. I brought back some copper colored pearls; in price they vary from a few dollars up to the hundreds. You can buy them at all prices, the small ones as low as a few cents, but fine ones suitable for necklaces bring hundreds of dollars. From $100 to $500 each is the price for a pearl suitable for a necklace; I saw one that brought $10 there and would be worth in Paris $6,000.

"It takes from 40 to 50 pearls to make a suitable necklace, and it takes years to match them up, as a necklace is started with a large pearl, round or pear-shaped, then they gradually grow smaller, but match in shape and color. I saw a necklace in New York worth $50,000 that took 20 years to match; another worth $27,000 which for 15 years the jeweler had been collecting pearls. One New York millionaire is paying $314,000 for a necklace of 20 pearls."

Mr. Durall says that in these waters all kinds of valuable pearls are found. A very fine pearl with Oriental colors was found in the shape of the holy cross. It was sold for a small sum by a fisherman, and sent to London, where it brought £10,000. A nobleman was the purchaser and today it could not be bought, for of the gospel to pearls, when He says: "Neither cast ye your pearls before swine." In Revelation we read the destruction of the heavenly city, "whose twelve gates were twelve pearls. Every several gate was one pearl." The writer of the Revelation in describing Babylon compares it to a woman arrayed in purple and scarlet decked with gold, precious stones and pearls.

Cleopatra was extravagantly fond of pearls, and spent large sums accumulating the largest and finest in the world. It is related at a banquet given by her to a concourse of friends she dissolved in acid a very large pearl worth $39,000 and drank the liquid. In imitation of her act Tiberius did the same thing in Rome. Julius Caesar spent large sums in buying the most beautiful pearls. He presented to a lady a pearl necklace valued at $300,000. Every wealthy noble in Rome was dressed in costumes loaded with pearls. It is related of Lollia Paulina that when dressed for an evening party her jewels were estimated at $1,500,000, most all of which were costly pearls. Today most all kings wear pearls, the crown of Edward VII. contains 267 pearls, some formerly owned by Julius Caesar. One of the largest pearls ever found glitters in the sceptre of Nicholas II.

"The formation of the pearl begins when some foreign substance enters the oyster shell. Necrea is secreted around the substance, mullouse is formed and the pearl grows, which is an ulcer in the fish of the oyster, a silvery precious gem.—Portland Telegram.

THE FAIRY LAMPS.

The Little Bare-Legged Boy and the Fairy of the Woods.

There was once a little bare-legged, brown-limbed boy who spent all his time in the woods. He loved the woods and all that was in them. He used to look, not at the flowers, but deep down into them, and not at the singing bird, but into its eyes, to its little heart; and so he got an insight better than most others, and he quite gave up collecting birds' eggs.

But the woods were full of mysteries. He used to hear little bursts of song, and when he came to the place he could find no bird there. Noises and movements would just escape him. In the woods he saw strange tracks, and one day, at length, he saw a wonderful bird making these very tracks. He had never seen the bird before, and would have bought it a great rarity had he not seen its tracks everywhere. So he learned that the woods were full of beautiful creatures that were skilful and quick to avoid him.

One day, as he passed by a spot that he had been to a hundred times before he found a bird's nest. It must have been there all the time, and yet he had not seen it; and so he learned how blind he was, and exclaimed: "Oh, if I only could see, then I might understand these things! If only I knew! If I could see but for once how many there are and how near! If only every bird would wear over its nest this evening a little lamp to show me!"

The sun was down now; but all at once there was a soft light on the path, and in the middle of it the brown boy saw a Little Brown Lady in a long robe, and in her hand a rod.

She smiled pleasantly and said: "Little boy, I am the Fairy of the Woods. I have been watching you for long. I like you. You seem to be different from other boys. Your request shall be granted."

Then she faded away. But at once the whole landscape twinkled over with wonderful little lamps—long lamps, short lamps, red, blue, and green, high and low, doubles, singles, and groups; wherever he looked were lamps—twinkle, twinkle, twinkle, here and everywhere, until the forest shone like the starry sky. He ran to the nearest, and there, sure enough, was a bird's nest. He ran to the next; yes, another nest. And here and there each different lamp stood for another kind of nest. A beautiful purple blaze in a low tangle caught his eye. He ran there, and found a nest he had never seen before. It was full of purple eggs, and there was the rare bird he had seen but once. It was chanting the weird song he had often heard, but never traced. But the eggs were the marvellous things. His old egg-collecting instinct broke out. He rushed forth to clutch the wonderful prize, and—in an instant all the lights went out. There was nothing but the black woods about him. Then on the pathway again shone the soft light. It grew brighter, till in the middle of it he saw the Little Brown Lady—the Fairy of the Woods. But she was not smiling now. Her face was stern and sad as she said: "I fear I set you over-high. I thought you better than the rest. Keep this in your mind:

"Who reverence not the lamp of life can never see its light."

Then she faded from his view.—From Ernest Thompson Seton's "Fable and Woodmyth" in the December Century.

First Mixed Marriage in Australia.

The first recorded case of the marriage of a white man to a black "gin" has just occurred at Bamboo Springs, in western Australia. According to the local paper, the ceremony had the effect of completely paralyzing business in Bamboo Springs for that day, the whole township turning out for the wedding. Nevertheless, the "lucky" man, who is a well-to-do grazier, had some difficulty in even obtaining witnesses to sign the register, two old prospectors finally consenting when sufficient inducement was offered them.

Household Matters

Use For Old Waterproofs.

You housekeepers who happen to have stowed away in attic or closet one or more of those old waterproof capes in use twelve or fifteen years ago, will find them exceedingly serviceable as chair covers on sweeping day. To make them more convenient, sew up the slits in the covers which were used for armholes, and remove the hoods. Then see what a protection it is from the dust, which, however carefully a broom is used, is sure to lodge upon all upholstered furniture.

In the case of a large easy chair, which for some reason it may be inconvenient to remove from the room during the sweeping process, this rubber cover will prove a boon. Ordinarily it may be carelessly thrown over the back, arms and seat; but in case it may be found necessary to remove the chair to a sunny piazza or porch during cleaning time, this cover pinned securely around it will protect it from either rain or sunshine, as the case may be.

Another advantage which such a cover has over a shawl or other woolen covering is that dust does not cling to it, but a slight shake will remove it.

If you happen to own an old-fashioned square piano, with pictures and bric-a-brac [illegible] open covers, it is impossible to remove them and close the piano every time you sweep. A friend who owns one of these old waterproof capes often throws it over her open piano while sweeping, thus saving the trouble of closing it.—Helen F. Richardson, in Connecticut Farmer.

Men's Clothing.

The neck bands of men's white shirts frequently wear out before any other part. Wash the shirt to remove the starch, rip the old band off and press it carefully so it will retain its original shape. Cut a new band of linen interlined with muslin, baste it in place, stitch on the machine and work the usual number of buttonholes. Make other repairs that are needed and the shirt will be ready for the laundry.

If the silk ties are soiled, try cleaning them with gasoline. Pour a little in a cup or bowl, dip a clean cloth in it and rub the soiled places, dipping frequently. When the gasoline gets dirty get a fresh supply and proceed as before, until the ties are clean, then hang them up where no dust will fall on them until it has evaporated. This does not fade the color.

A suit of clothes is often improved in appearance by brushing them. Turn the pocket wrong side out and shake them. The coat collar often requires cleaning. Prepare a cleaning fluid by pouring a quart of boiling water over one-fourth pound of soap shaved fine and adding a heaping teaspoonful of borax. When dissolved, stir together so it will form strong suds. Dip a small brush in this and clean the collars flat on the table and scour until clean. Rinse with clear water and hang up until half dry, then cover with a cloth and press with a hot iron until dry. The borax is a great help in removing grease or soiled spots of any kind from a woolen garment, and is perfectly harmless. Vest and coat buttons may be purchased to replace those that are worn or lost, and if the binding is worn in places, rebind with new braid. If there are any places to be mended, place a piece like the garment under the worn place. Sew it down firmly, allowing as few stitches as possible to show on the right side, darn back and forth over the broken threads, catching it down to the cloth beneath. Then place a damp cloth on the place and press with a hot iron.—E. J. C., in American Cultivator.

Foamy Sauce—Take half a cup of butter beaten to a cream, with one cup of powdered sugar; add one teaspoonful of vanilla, two tablespoonfuls of currant jelly or grape juice, one-half cup of boiling water, the white of an egg well beaten. Whip all together until foamy and serve.

Potato Straws—Pare and cut raw potatoes into slices one-quarter of an inch thick; cut these into narrow strips or straws and soak in cold water half an hour. Dry on a cloth and fry in deep hot fat until crisp and well colored. Drain on paper and sprinkle with salt. Serve with chops.

Boiled Meat Puddings—Beat four eggs thoroughly, add three pints of sweet milk, one teacup fine chopped suet, one-half teaspoon salt and three cups yellow meal. Turn into a wet pudding bag and boil two and one-half hours in a kettle which should be half full of boiling water when the bag is plunged in. Eat with butter and maple syrup.

Lord Byron's Goose.

One of the stories concerning the traditional dish of roast goose on Michaelmas Day refers to Lord Byron, says an English newspaper. The poet always insisted in keeping up old customs in small things, such as having hot cross buns on Good Friday and roast goose on Michaelmas Day. This last fancy had a grotesque result when he was in Italy. After buying a goose, and fearing it might be too lean, Byron fed it every day for a month previous to the festival, so that the poet and the bird became so mutually attached that when September 29 arrived, he could not kill it, but bought another and had the pet goose swung in a cage under his carriage when he traveled.

Death on the Culm Bank.

No matter what form death assumes it is never welcome. The grim messenger makes his appearance in many forms in the anthracite mines of Pennsylvania, but only in one form is less and pleasant, and to only one victims go unconsciously. It is death of the burning culm bank.

Many times during the year is a death recorded when one of the great culm banks is burning. The is not seen in the daytime and at it shines only with a faint through the layers of ashes separate the live coals from the air.

To these burning banks tramps other unfortunates, forced to spend night in the open air, go when the nights grow chilly. The warm breath of the culm lures them on with a promise of a warm bed for the night, and they lie down to sleep in the comfortable atmosphere of the bank and never open their eyes again.

The noxious gases emanating from the bank wift over them so softly that they are soon asleep and in many cases they never awaken, being suffocated during their slumbers.—Detroit Free Press.

A Railroad to Mont Blanc.

The nearness to completion of the railway up the Jungfrau, in Switzerland, has put new heart into the old project of running trains to the summit of Mont Blanc.

The Jungfrau line has been opened as far as the Eigerwand station, the Eismeer, the Jungfraujoch and Jungfraukulm stations only remaining to be constructed. The Eigerwand, already opened, furnishes a view of the Alps, near and far only less magnificent than that from the summit.

The Mont Blanc project is planned to start from [illegible]es Houches and follow at first the [illegible]ellevue Pavillon path. The line would run by Gros-Bechart, the Aiguille [illegible] Gouter, the Dome du Gouter, the [illegible]os de Dromedaire and the final station would be at the Little Red Rocks, 300 yards below the summit.

It is figured that a ticket to the top of the highest mountain in Europe could probably be sold for $20. The present cost of an ascension is at least $50 for each of a considerable party, or twice that sum for a man going alone, not to speak of the labor.—New York World.

Struck by Lightning.

According to the Grant City [illegible] Star, lightning struck a haystack [illegible] Mrs. Allison's farm, on West [illegible] River, and set it on fire. The rick was not far from the house, and the boys, seeing the smoke, went to it at once. They found in the top of one end of the rick a small hole, from which the smoke was issuing, and, thrusting a wisp of hay into the hole, smothered the fire. When the end of the rick was cut off it was found that the lightning had burned a hole from the top to the bottom of the stack about two inches in diameter. The timely arrival of the boys [illegible] scene saved the rick from [illegible]

The U. S. Dept. of Agriculture

Gives to Salzer's Oats its heartiest endorsement. Salzer's New National Oats yielded in 1903 from 150 to 300 bu. per acre in 30 different States, and you, Mr. Farmer, can beat this in 1904, if you will. Salzer's seeds are pedigree seeds, bred up through careful selection to big yields.

	Per Acre.
Salzer's Beardless Barley yielded	121 bu.
Salzer's Home Builder Corn	300 bu.
Spelta and Macaroni Wheat	80 bu.
Salzer's Victoria Rape	60,000 lbs.
Salzer's Teosinte, the fodder wonder	160,000 lbs.
Salzer's Billion Dollar Grass	50,000 lbs.
Salzer's Pedigree Potatoes	1,000 bu.

Now such yields pay and you can have them, Mr. Farmer, in 1904.

Stones That Are Alive.

The most curious specimens of vegetable or plant life in existence are the so-called "living stones" of the Falkland Islands. Those islands are among the most cheerless spots in the world, being constantly subjected to a strong polar wind.

In such a climate it is impossible for trees to grow erect, as they do in other countries, but nature has made amends by furnishing a supply of wood in the most curious shape imaginable. The visitor to the Falklands sees scattered here and there singular shaped blocks of what appear to be weather-beaten and moss-covered boulders of various size.

Attempt to turn one of these boulders over and you will meet with an actual surprise, because the stone is actually anchored by roots of great strength; in fact, you will find that you are fooling with one of the native trees.

No other country in the world has such a peculiar "forest" growth, and it is said to be next to impossible to work the odd shaped blocks into fuel, because the wood is perfectly devoid of grain and appears to be a twisted mass of woody fibres.—Chicago Post.

FARMERS' CORNER

Fragrant Leaved Plants.

For the window garden we still prize the fragrant leaved plants, such as many of the pelarganiums, and such flowers as perfume the air daintily and not oppressively, says a gardening writer in Gardening. One should Olea fragrans and one of Daphne odorata we always keep in the window of the living room.

Why so Many Fail.

Many people never get to the front in the poultry business because they struggle and work from year to year only to be beaten again at the shows and by practically some beginner, but finally after losing five or ten years' time they find that their mistake was in always buying something cheap instead of paying a little more and getting good foundation stock. The quicker a man buys good birds to breed from the sooner he is started right in the fancy and the sooner he will get a share of the business.—T. B. King in American Poultry Journal.

Place For an Incubator.

The proper place to put an incubator is in a room or cellar where the temperature is not variable. The greatest trouble with a cellar is too much moisture. No matter if the temperature in the room is high or low, so it is not subjected to sudden changes. A little [illegible] not too moist is the best. A room having a sky above the room is not affected by the heat from the sun, and the thick brick walls do not cool off as quickly when it is very cold outside. A great deal of trouble can be avoided by having the incubator in a room of this sort. The room should be well ventilated so as to have a constant circulation of pure air. Do not put the incubator where it will be in a draft.—Connecticut Farmer.

Investing Surplus Money.

In some sections the crops for several years have enabled the farmers to pay off outstanding obligations and still have surplus money for investment. Much of this surplus money will be placed in savings banks and considerable invested in loans and mortgages, both good investments, as a rule. The farm is the best investment for any surplus cash one has and unless it contains everything that will go to help in increasing the profit, then one has no right to invest his surplus funds in other ways.

Is there a field that can be drained so as to materially increase its yield? Invest the surplus in this work. Are the cows scrubs? Raise the standard of the herd, the standard of the milk and butter by investing in high-bred cattle. There are a dozen places where the surplus cash can be placed on the average farm which will bring an increase in profit much greater than will come from the investment of the money in any of the ways recognized as reasonably safe.—Indianapolis News.

Orcharding.

To raise fruit the first thing is to plant the orchard properly. This requires a selection of the fruit trees, adapted to your soil, climate, etc., and trees that will answer the purposes for which you plant. If you plant for home use, you should consider the flavors of the fruit to get the best quality, and also the time when they ripen, so as to provide for the different seasons of the year. If your are setting for commercial purposes your location with reference to your nearest city or a cold storage should be considered. You can do well on summer and fall varieties if you are near a market. While if you are away from markets and storage you should plant varieties that will keep well, fruit that can be handled and stored without injury. Some varieties spoil easily in handling, and some scald and turn black in storage or soon after they are taken from it, as the Huntsman's Favorite and York Imperial, otherwise good apples.

Trees must be selected with reference to the time or age when they begin bearing, also with reference to quantity of fruit borne annually or semi-annually.

You should rely largely on your local nurserymen, they will try to provide you with the best varieties to suit your conditions. By buying near home you get fruit better adapted to your soil and climate, and that will usually prove healtier and hardier.—S. A. Hazeltine in Indiana Farmer.

Line Fence Questions.

There seems to be some difference of opinion, even among lawyers, but it seems certain that where the fence line has been laid out and a fence built each man must build and keep in repair his share. Should he neglect his part, or refuse to keep it in proper repair, and cattle break into his field over his part, he cannot recover from their owner for damages. If there is no fence now on the line, notice, giving 30 days' time, can be served upon him to build it.

If he refuses to build it and serves a notice on you that he elects not to build, you can build all, and use it, but he will have to pay for half the day he pastures or uses his land next to it. From this it seems that in some cases both men may be right.

Various circumstances alter the legal standpoint, and one should consult a lawyer—if he is bound to "look for trouble"—before he begins. In case cattle get out, and pass through the woods or "commons" and get into other fields on the other side of the unfenced part, the owner is liable; hence a man must take care of his cattle. In case of neglect to repair properly or build up existing line fences, no damage can be collected; hence a man need not care for his cattle. Neighbors had better spend more time than they think they ought to in keeping good fences, rather than to "law" it; and always bear in mind the maxim: a good fence makes good neighbors.—C. E. Chapman.

Fruit Culture.

Trees have naturally two methods of reproducing themselves—by buds and the seeds of the fruit. Every bud on a tree is an individual; indeed, it is not the twig or branch or tree, but the bud that is the unit of plant development.

Budding and grafting are only examples of vegetable production by bud development. When a tree is growing rapidly and producing a good deal of wood and very little fruit it is simply trying to reproduce itself by bud reproduction. On the other hand, if a tree is fruiting heavily it is trying to reproduce itself by seed. The wood growth and fruit growth of a tree stand in a sort of counterpoise to each other.

If a tree is growing vigorously it is not producing much fruit; and if much fruit, not much wood.

If we check the vegitative growth of a tree we cause it to form fruit; on the other hand, if we take the fruit off a tree before it is developed we stimulate wood growth. Vigorous pruning in summer when the growth is in full swing, will stimulate the production of fruit, but if the pruning is to vigorous the trees may be injured or even killed.

When pruning in summer to stimulate fruit production is not done intelligently, just the opposite effect is most likely the result.

The correct method would be to head back the most vigorously growing and not touch the small fruiting limbs on which the fruit would have been formed. The reduction of the foliage of a tree limits its nutrition and more or less strikes at the vitality of the tree.

Heavy pruning should only be done as a last resort. A safer method would be to stop cultivation or to seed down with a clover crop, or the plow might be run a little deeper, so as to cut off the surface-feeding roots and root prune the tree. Pruning for vegetative or wood growth is that which has been outlines for the growing tree. Cut out all dead, broken and deformed limbs and those which cross and rub one another.

Care should be taken to keep the tree from suckers, so that there is a free circulation of air through the tree and the sunshine let in sufficiently to give the fruit a good color.

Horticultural Notes.

The morning glories on the east and west sides of the house, have frequently remained open all day.

A screen of climbing nasturtiums on the south side of a porch has been a delight through out the entire summer, growing prettier each day.

In setting out or transplanting shrubs or roses, make the place prepared for it large enough so that the roots will not be cramped. And form the soil thoroughly.

Hydrangea paniculata is one of our best shrubs; perfectively hardy, with immense flower heads, coming into bloom when flowers are on the wane and lasting until heavy frosts.

The Cobœa Scandens is our favorite climber among the annuals; seeds must be started early, but the vine is attractive throughout the entire season and lasts in all its beauty much later than any other climber.

One of the hardy perennials which seems always satisfactory, is Perennial Pea. Kept from seeding, it blooms the entire season, seems to care little for extremes of wet or dry weather, makes a vigorous growth and is noteasily crowded out by grass or other pests. If given a trellis or support, the vines form a thick screen, but lacking this they will trail over the grass in beautiful confusion. The blossoms range in color through red, pink purple, lavender and white.

Tunneling for Water.

The citizens of Sweet Canyon county, Idaho, have a novel way of obtaining water for domestics and irrigation purposes, says the New York Sun. The water is dug out of the hillside, with wells run like tunnels, and dug down into the earth, as ordinary wells are dug. East of the town there is a bluff out of which sparkling mountain water can be produced almost anywhere by merely running a tunnel in from 20 to 40 feet.

At one point in town a stream sufficient to irrigate a fine orchard and garden, besides an ample supply for domestic use and for watering all the teams that pass that way, comes pouring out of the 40-foot tunnel. Neither the spring freshets nor the summer drought affect its flow.

Horseshoeing.

Robert Bonner was the man who started fancy prices for horseshoeing when he paid $100 for shoeing Dexter. There are expert blacksmiths who work only for owners of big stables, and who travel with crack racing horses wherever they go. Some of these blacksmiths get $12,000 a year and expenses, besides a liberal present if the owner has had a lucky year. The blacksmith of a crack stable is constantly asked for cast-off shoes from crack horses by persons who want to gild them and frame them "just for luck." Five dollars was recently paid for a shoe from Hermis

A NERVOUS CHILD'S TRAINING.

By Injudicious Treatment Such an One May Be Wrecked.

A child born with a nervous constitution is to be pitied or envied, according as he has parents who do or do not know how to treat him. Character is made or marred, even more than we are wont to believe, by the training which the child receives, and the future of no child is more absolutely in the keeping of its father and mother than that of the nervous child. By injudicious treatment such a child may be made to grow up a physical and moral wreck, at odds with all the world, while under wise management it may develop into one of the highest types of lovable man or woman—gentle, affectionate, sensitive intellectual and dependable.

The nervous child is often difficult to manage, especially if the mother is impatient with its despondency or its irritability. Scoldings only increase the tension of its nervous system, and more severe punishment, which the phlegmatic child takes with scarce a whimper and to its betterment, is often cruel in the extreme.

There are two types of nervous children—the active child, always on the go, inquisitive and acquisitive, but delicate as the mimosa leaf, shrinking back into itself at the first repulse or harsh word; and the pale, quiet, sensitive child, intelligent and thoughtful, but retiring. The child of the first type develops into the inventor, the active philanthropist, the promoter, the schemer, the adventurer, or the leader of criminals, according as his training has been wise and foolish. The child of the second type becomes the philosopher, the thinker, the man of letters, the poet, or the misanthrope, the sour recluse, and the plotter against society and government.

One great mistake in training a nervous child is to try to strengthen the nerves by opposition. A nervous child must be guided, not driven; if afraid of the dark it must not be forced to sleep in a closed room without a glimmer of light. It should not be laughed at for natural timidity, but should be gently convinced by argument of the groundlessness of its fears. At the same time its physical constitution should receive careful attention. Tonics, good, digestible food, an open-air life, avoiding long hours of study, frequent change of air and scene are all not only serviceable, but, one might say, indispensable in the transformation into the well-poised man or woman.—Youth's Companion.

I am sure Piso's Cure for Consumption saved my life three years ago.—Mrs. THOMAS ROBINS, Maple St., Norwich, N.Y., Feb. 17, 1900.

If poets are born their ancestors should be held responsible.

In a polling of popular American poems Thanatopsis leads all the rest. Its sonorous lines are unquestionably as good for purposes of youthful mouthing as any ever penned in any land; and if the content is a bit trite those who admire the poem most admire it probably the more on that account.

Moorish Women's Age.

Feminine Moors are generally absolutely ignorant of their age. Among Moorish women this is a point of honor, but it is usually no affectation, for as their birthdays are never celebrated in any manner the passage of years is far less noticed than with us.

Mrs. Fairbanks tells how neglect of warning symptoms will soon prostrate a woman. She thinks woman's safeguard is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Ignorance and neglect are the cause of untold female suffering, not only with the laws of health but with the chance of a cure. I did not heed the warnings of headaches, organic pains, and general weariness, until I was well nigh prostrated. I knew I had to do something. Happily I did the right thing. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound faithfully, according to directions, and was rewarded in a few weeks to find that my aches and pains disappeared, and I again felt the glow of health through my body. Since I have been well I have been more careful, I have also advised a number of my sick friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and they have never had reason to be sorry. Yours very truly, MRS. MAY FAIRBANKS, 216 South 7th St., Minneapolis, Minn." (Mrs. Fairbanks is one of the most successful and highest salaried travelling saleswomen in the West.)

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, bloating (or flatulence), general debility, indigestion, and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, "all-gone" and "want-to-be-left-alone" feelings, blues, and hopelessness, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine, for you need the best.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—For over two years I suffered more than tongue can express with kidney and bladder trouble. My physician pronounced my trouble catarrh of the bladder, caused by displacement of the womb. I had a frequent desire to urinate, and it was very painful, and lumps of blood would pass with the urine. Also had backache very often.

"After writing to you, and receiving your reply to my letter, I followed your advice, and feel that you and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have cured me. The medicine drew my womb into its proper place, and then I was well. I never feel any pain now, and can do my housework with ease."—MRS. ALICE LAMON, Kincaid, Miss.

No other medicine for female ills in the world has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

ST. LOUIS SELECTED

By National Committee For Democratic Convention.

Standing under a picture of Andrew Jackson, Chairman Jones at noon Tuesday called the national democratic executive committee to order at Washington. Five hours later St. Louis was selected as the place and July 6th as the date for naming the next democratic candidate for president and vice president. The committee then adjourned sine die and will not meet until immediately before the delegates to the convention assemble at St. Louis.

The selection came as a surprise, for it was generally thought Chicago would be selected.

Chicago offered $45,000 for the convention, but such money as was not used by the convention had to be turned back to the city. St. Louis, on the other hand, offered $40,000 with the understanding that the committee should have the entire amount.

ONE HALF HOUR OUT OF WHACK

But Uncle Sam Saves $7,000,000 in Clerk Hire.

The new order which went into effect Monday requiring all the departments in Washington to keep their employees at work until 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon instead of 4 o'clock will have a far-reaching result. There are about 30,000 clerks in the departments and while the new order will effect them it will also effect government employees elsewhere in the United States. It is estimated that the order will directly effect one hundred thousand government employes.

By increasing the working hours the government will gain fifty thousand hours of work every day, equivalent to 7,143 clerks ... only ... gain the wages a ...

The business houses ... have to keep open longer to accommodate their department customers. The street cars will have to change their schedule to meet the rush. The railroads will have to change their schedules to serve their commuter patronage. The baseball games in the summer will have to begin half an hour later. The time of afternoon concerts and entertainments must be changed. The boarding house keeper will have to start the pot to boiling half an hour earlier.

New Trial Granted.

Monday the Mississippi supreme court reversed the celebrated J. J. Harper murder case, appealed from the circuit court of Perry county, where it was carried on a change of venue from Jones county.

The opinion of the court was read by Associate Justice Jeff Truly, and was received with close interest by the large assembly of lawyers in the court room on account of the important legal points involved and the celebrity attained by the case during the memorable trial at Hattiesburg, lasting eight days. Harper is a physician who was convicted and given a life sentence for being an accomplice in the killing of a saw mill laborer named William B. Lawrence at a lumber camp. The shooting was done by a foreman named R. T. McCormick, who, according to the testimony of a woman who was the only eye-witness, was seen to fire two shots at Lawrence while he was either falling or trying to rise from the ground. Lawrence died on the morning following the shooting while under the medical care of Dr. Harper, and the latter was arrested for complicity in the crime. Justice Truly held that presence at a killing and silent approval thereof before or after the fatal shots are fired can not be construed as aiding or abetting the crime.

It Was Not a Blank.

Philip Scott placed what he thought was a blank shell in the gun and fired at the sleeping child. The side of her head was blown off.

It Went for Hanna.

In Ohio's legislature's vote for United States senator the house cast 86 votes for Hanna and 21 for John H. Clark, democrat, of Cleveland. In the senate Hanna received 29 and Clark 4 votes.

A statement from Florida's assessment rolls showing the gross amount of real and personal property, including railroads and telegraphs, for the year A. D. 1903, gives the total of $111,333,735, an increase over 1902 of $8,284,798.

AGRICULTURAL.

Planting Fruit Trees.

Whether or not fruit trees should be set in the fall or spring depends largely upon the conditions and location. It is now conceded by the most practical fruit growers that early spring is the best time to set them out. However, the trees should be purchased in the fall and secured early enough before they can be heeled in where they will be perfectly secure and protected during the winter months. The ground should be in thorough condition as early in the spring as possible, and the trees set out.

Lame Sheep.

Sheep so often die of what is sometimes mistaken for a sort of dry rot. And yet, on examination, the hoof is found in good condition, although the sheep have limped in almost helpless way, thus leading one to think it is the hoof disease. Closely examined, the cause of lameness will be found near the dew claws. Here you will find burrowing worms. These are the maggots of a fly with a name entirely too nice for it. It is death to the sheep if its progeny is not destroyed. Cut away the fleece and apply oil of tar to kill the maggots. Then cover the sore with lard and sulphur. Benzoated lard is considered best.—I. M. Shepler, in American Cultivator.

Dairy Notes.

It is not a good plan to feed co... milking time, as they are lik... hold up their milk if by any chan... feed is withheld. The best pla... feed before milking so as to mil... the cow is in a ruminant mood.

Keep on friendly terms wit... cows. The cow that exhibits ... desire to lick you while you are milking her will give the largest possible quantity of milk because she is not excited, nervous or afraid while you are around her.

Besides producing a calf, a good cow will yield her weight in ... solids in a year; that is, in fat, casein, albumen, milk sugar and ash. She will yield from five to ten times her weight in milk and one-half her weight in butter.

A German investigator made measurements on eighty cows whereby he divided them into groups. From the result obtained from these it was concluded that there was unmistakable relation between external form and the production of milk and butter. Those who do not believe there is such a thing a dairy type should not be too sure of their position.—Mirror-Farmer.

As to Spraying.

If a thing is worth doing it is worth doing well, an adage that applies to orchard operations as well as to other affairs of life. A tour of five months through orchard sections has convinced the writer that not one orchardist in a dozen does the work of spraying properly and thoroughly.

They seem to have an idea that the insecticide used is one which destroys the insect or scale with its fumes, when, as a matter of fact, it must come into direct contact with the scale to be effective. While most of the recognized formulas for sale are effective if properly used, the so-called cold application is preferable, for while most expensive in the matter of ingredients, much time is saved in its use.

Take twenty pounds of sulphur and thin to a paste with water. Slake forty pounds of lime, and when it is about half slaked stir in the sulphur mixture, using at the same time caustic soda ground and in the proportion of one pound to each pound of the sulphur. Add water and mix thoroughly, using sixty gallons of water in completing the mixture, including that used in slaking the lime and mixing the sulphur. Apply to the trees thoroughly, so that when the tree has been sprayed it will look as if covered with flour. This mixture leaves the bark of the tree clean and will destroy the scale if done thoroughly and in time.—Indianapolis News.

Light Feeding For Horses.

The writer has been taken to task because he insists that the majority of farmers do not feed their horses sufficiently heavy. It is understood that this applies to the horses that are expected to do heavy farm work only, although many of them are obliged to do such work and all of the road work besides. Statistics show that horses in cities are much better fed than those on the farm. For example, the average road horse in the city, the ... horse and the horse drawing loads ... about that weight are fed fourteen pounds of oats and ten to twelve pounds of hay daily; where corn is a portion of the ration the proportions are about fifteen pounds of corn, ten pounds of oats and fifteen pounds of hay.

The rations of the dray horse, whose work is nearer to that done by the farm horse, is at least one-half more than the figures given for the horses doing lighter work. Compare these rations with those fed by the average farmer. How many farmers feed oats as a part of the regular ration? How many of them feed hay? In too many cases the ration is corn for grain and corn stover for roughage. Is it any wonder that farm horses are quickly worn out?—Indianapolis News.

Keeping Winter Apples.

As a rule, winter apples are picked too early and, in a measure, this accounts for the rapidity with which they rot. Experienced growers make a practice of picking over each tree several times; that is, they will pick the fruit from the south side of the tree, where it ripens first, and go around and through the trees in this way. Such growers never think of packing windfalls in the same barrels with the hand-picked fruit, a failing of the less experienced grower. While it may be impracticable for apple growers to have individual cold storage houses, the plan advocated in this department some time ago of a number of large growers in a section combining and building storage houses, will yet come about. In the meantime there should be some plan of storage devised whereby at least the best of the crop can be cared for, so that it may go to market at a time when it will bring the best prices. What such a plan will ... must depend largely upon the facilities of the grower.

The main essentials in storing apples are that the fruit be kept cool and dry. If one has a fruit cellar, a good plan is to pack the apples in barrels as soon after they are picked as possible, seeing that each specimen is perfectly dry, and after setting the barrels on racks, so that there will be as near perfect ventilation as possible, cover the top with boards. The heads should not be put in until the fruit is prepared for shipment. It would be a good plan to try several methods of keeping apples this winter.—Indianapolis News.

The Farm Dairy.

Upon the country dairy output depends to a considerable extent, the supply of dairy products in small towns and villages. A strong local demand is favorable to good prices on all really superior articles. There are few instances in which the farm dairy cannot be made a profit producer. Care must be taken to put only the best on the market, as it is the uniformity of quality year after year that establishes one a reputation in any particular line of produce marketing. Butter should be placed in neat packages of uniform size and shape. Attractiveness aids more in selling an article than any one item, as one will pay more for anything edible, if it is tempting in appearance. Where one has regular customers in town it is an easy matter to work up a trade in cream, buttermilk, sweet skim milk and cottage cheese if one has an inclination for expansion in this line. Dairy by-products are very profitable, however, when kept at home and fed to pigs and hens.

There is a certain advantage in farm dairying not often taken into account, namely: The consumption of large amounts of cheaply grown forage and the conversion of the waste of same into humus making material to be returned to the land from which such crops have been removed. This constitutes one of the most paying items of the home dairying. The price of land is fast advancing, especially in the middle West, and portions of the East. It will only be a matter of time until every acre of land will be called upon by the wide-awake farmer to produce its utmost yearly. The farmer who keeps a moderate sized dairy herd will find this a great help in maintaining soil fertility.—C. B. B., in Indiana Farmer.

Farm Notes.

A pig in the mud never thrives.

Give the pig a dry floor to feed upon.

Teach the pigs to eat as early in their lives as possible.

With hogs, over-feeding is as unprofitable as starving.

In many cases it will pay to buy hay and stuff to feed to the pigs.

Mud and dirt breed vermin and produce skin diseases in the hog.

Early breeding of sows nearly always causes weakness of the pigs.

The best and cheapest pork is from hogs that have never been wintered.

A pig that is stunted early in life should never be used as a breeder.

If a sow is in good flesh she can be bred in a week's time after weaning.

The health of the hogs depends in a large measure upon the surroundings.

The quality of the pork may be much improved by careful and cleanly feeding.

In a majority of cases the litters improve in size and quality as the sow grows older.

Too early mating of brood sows is one of the reasons why pork raising is not profitable.

In most all cases hogs are easier kept thrifty if they have a free range than closely confined.

Pigs are often arranged to sleep ... the ground to feed on, when the ... should be the case.

It is important to have the boar well broken, so that he can be handled with care and moved without excitement.—American Farm and Orchard.

HOW TURKS MAKE COFFEE.

It Isn't So Easy, but the Product Is Delightful, Its Flavor Divine.

To make the perfect cup of Turkish coffee is, like many other things, very easy when the maker knows how to do it, but unless the art has been learned in Turkey it is difficult.

No one can make a perfect cup of coffee unless he has been to Turkey. There is as much difference between the ordinary cup of coffee and the exquisite and alluring beverage with all its subtle aroma as made by the artist as there is between horseflesh and the best English beef. The Turks' method is simple. They have many little pots of various sizes. If they want to make two cups only they use the smaller one, and if three cups a larger one. When the water has boiled they fill the little pot almost to the top with water, then put in three lumps of sugar and put the pot on the fire to boil. When it is hot they put in two teaspoonfuls of coffee ground very fine, and then stir it round until it is thoroughly mixed with the water.

The next step is to place the pot on the fire again and watch it very carefully until the coffee bubbles up to a froth, and before this froth excapee over the side you take the pot from the fire and tap the bottom gently on the stove till the froth goes down. Once again the coffee is allowed to bubble over the fire, and the process of tapping the pot on the stove is repeated three times.

When the froth rises to the surface for the fourth time the pot should be taken from the fire and the coffee should be poured first into one cup and then into another, so that each cup contains a portion of the froth on the top.

The Englishman cannot make coffee at all. He tries hard, but never succeeds either in making a perfect cup of Turkish or French coffee. The Frenchman, on the other hand, also tries hard to make a perfect cup of Turkish coffee, but he meets with little more success than the Englishman.

One thing must never be forgotten. The coffee must be freshly roasted and ground. It must not be roasted too black; a dark brown is the ideal color. Then the flavor is divine.—Boston Globe.

Japanese Terrapin.

The United States Fish commission has sent an expert to Japan for the purpose of studying terrapin culture as practised in that country, where they seem to have succeeded in breeding the turtles by artifice. It is true that the Japanese terrapin is not the same species as ours, but its habits are similar, and there is reason to suppose that like methods of culture might be successful in the United States.

The matter is of no small importance, inasmuch as our terrapin is on the verge of extinction. It used to be vastly numerous, especially in the neighborhood of the Chesapeake, and in 1850 diamond backs sold in Baltimore for 12 1-2 cents a pieces. But they have been literally hunted almost to the point of extermination, and at the present time they fech $60 a dozen.

The Japanese species, which is said to be equal to our own in flavor, is known as the "suppon," and like the American terrapin, is an inhabitant of tidal rivers and salt marshes. Artificial ponds with a muddy bottom are employed for rearing purposes, with a low fence to prevent the turtles from escaping. The pond is shallow, and at laying time, in early summer, the female climbs out on the bank, scratches a shallow hole and deposit their eggs finally covering them up and leaving them to be hatched by the the heat of the sun. Nets are spread to prevent birds from digging up the egg.

Dress of the Bashi-Bazuk.

Like each of the various clans of the Kurds the bashi-bazouks can easily be distinguished by his costume. His shoes, or "yemenys" (meaning leather), are red or black. His golf-like stockings, which leave the knee exposed, are elaborately embroidered in black, his short Turkish trousers are of homespun, while about his waist is a short sash of wool or silk, surmounted by a leather belt in rich colors and embossed in red. This is divided into three or four sections, in which he keeps his revolver, his chibouk or pipe, and his yataghan, always kept sharp. The bashi-bazouks never carry daggers, as the Circassians do. A cartridge box hangs from the side, as also a small silver snuff box. They wear two jackets, the under one with short sleeves and the outside one with long. At the elbow there is an opening in which they carry in a leather bag, written quotations from the Koran as a talisman to protect them from the bullets of the adversary. About the neck is a chain of silver coins, from which is suspended a powdered box.

Royal Etiquette.

In Oriental countries the touch of the sovereign is regarded as so great an honor that none of the natives would dream of seizing the royal hand, even when extended to them. Old Nubar Pasha, the most imposing and majestic looking Oriental statesman, would humbly bend to kiss the hem of the frock coat or stambuline or the squat, fat and vulgar looking little Khedive Ismail. In Japan the Mikado never offers his hand, and in former days he did not bow in response to the obeisance of the diplomatic corps, but preserved a motionless attitude, speaking straight before him in a kind of sing-song, monotonous one, without glancing either to the right or to the left.

A Dissertation on Manners.

By the Editor of the Woman's Home Companion.

IT is the singularity of our polity that it rests upon a common understanding for its objects, a common intelligence, a common morality, that each community carries, and carries virtually alone, its separate part in the great undertaking of self government. Each community is either self governed or self demoralized, self disordered.

Every man among us, therefore is put upon his honor to understand and serve the community in which he lives, and the only true patriotism is that which is local in its rootage.

This community will never awaken to its own betterment and best development through any abstract motive of duty, but only through a concrete image of its own life and interests, through a sort of ardent and enduring consciousness. You will find that there is mixed with all patriotic motive a certain pride in the past of the community, a consciousness of what it has been and is, and a desire for its distinction as a whole.

Distrust the patriotism of a man who is always spending his feeling on some distant object, whose energy does not seek the nearest duty, but the most remote. Every citizen who is thoughtful of the welfare of country should learn to see and understand his nearest duty and to do it with all thoughtfulness and yet without impatience.

Patience is, indeed, though one of the most difficult, yet one of the most indispensable virtues in a polity like our own, for the essence of that polity is consultation, movement not singly or in chosen groups but in the mass and multitude, so that in whatever we think or purpose we must carry masses of men with us; and so we need the sort of patience which is full of hope and equally full of patience.

The Invention of Smokeless Powder.

By Sir Hiram Maxim, C.E., M.E.

IN 1886 I commenced a series of experiments in Scotland, with a view of producing a high explosive which might be safely used as the bursting charge in large projectiles. These experiments were continued into the beginning of 1887, and, as often occurs, led to discoveries which were not at first anticipated. These experiments demonstrated that a slow-burning compound could be made from two of the most violent explosives, namely, nitro-glycerine and guncotton. I succeeded in making the violence of one explosive wipe out, as it were, the violence of the other. The nitroglycerine and guncotton together formed a hard plastic compound which could be spun out into threads by placing the material in a powerful press and forcing it through small holes. Thus early in 1887 I made the first cordite, and probably the first smokeless powder ever made in Great Britain.

About the same time the French government experimented, with a view of developing a suitable smokeless powder to be employed in the "Lebel" rifle. The first French powder was pure guncotton. I did not at first avail myself of the discovery which I had made, as it was generally understood that no government would look at a smokeless powder which contained nitroglycerine. So in 1888, on resuming my experiments in England, I first produced a smokeless powder from pure guncotton with a small percentage of castor oil, and in 1889 made a very successful smokeless powder consisting of seventy-three per cent. guncotton, twenty-five per cent. nitroglycerine, and two per cent. castor oil.—Harper's Weekly.

JEMISON.

J. O. Honeycutt is home for a short time. He has been in Virginia for some months, helping lay the new double track on the Southern railway, 600 miles in length, his share of the work being 53 miles.

Misses Lily and Madge Armstrong are stopping with their uncle, L. H. Reynolds. The young ladies will reside in Birmingham for the future.

The event of the past week in Jemison was the dinner given by the Hon. L. H. Reynolds to celebrate his tenth anniversary in Jemison. Ten years ago he was elected manager of the Alliance store in Jemison, and the guests of honor at the banquet were the old directors of the alliance, who were G. W. Shaw, W. G. J. Dorminy, W. H. Conway, Newt Martin, T. J Collins, Joe Smitherman, H. Driver, R. M. Honeycutt, Alex Glasscock, Y. O. Freeman, B. E. Collum and Ben Veazey. They are all customers of Mr. Reynolds now, having perfect confidence in his business foresight and push. The weather was delightful and 46 were dined (exclusive of Mr. Reynolds' family), including Will and Charles Reynolds, with their families; Mrs. Moon, of Colima, and Miss Avers, of Thorsby, who gave some delightful music, both vocal and instrumental. All in all, it was a time to be remembered with pleasure, and we all hope Mr. Reynolds will make it an annual occurrence. So mote it be.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION.

Promptly at 10 a. m. Monday Professor J. W. Moore called the applicants for license to teach to order, and the following names composed the class, viz.: Miss Bettie Dennis, Cooper; Miss Flossie Margaret Moore, Montevallo; Miss Della Wambem, Thorsby; Miss Zella Mims, Clanton; Miss Lily Slaton, Jemison; Miss Lottie Pearl Johnson, Stanton, and Messrs Cliff Moore, Montevallo; Willie Mims, Thorsby; G. B. Wheeler, Clanton; Oscar B. Young, Jumbo; J. M. Calloway, Clanton; W. J. Atchison, Maplesville; L. D. Riggins, Jemison; S. B. Powell, Cooper, and L. E. Byrum, Clanton. The colored applicants were: K. N. Draper, Clanton; I. S. A. Bracey, Jemison, and Leannie C. Allison, Maplesville. The examination will continue three days.

COUNTY COURT.

There was a special session of the county court on New Year's day to try Newt Vinson on the charge of "assault with a knife." He pleaded guilty and was fined $10 and costs, $17.50 in all. Charley Sullivan, who was cut, is still under the doctor's care.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

The regular first Sunday services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. C. Swindall, of East Lake. The congregation was much smaller than usual owing to the extreme cold weather, but those attending were well repaid. The pastor announced that Dr. J. P. Montague, president of Howard college, would officiate at the evening service on the first Sunday in February, and extended an earnest and cordial invitation to all our people to come out and hear him. Dr. Montague is famed for his eloquence and Clanton people should not miss this golden opportunity to hear him.

The Baptist Sunday school held its annual election for officers and teachers and all were re-elected except W. A. Candler, who resigned his class, and Brother E. B. Deason was the unanimous choice of the boys of the class. Brother E. B. Deason is a man who can not fail to do good both by example and precept. Brother W. I. Mullins is superintendent. Brother J. Watts Moore, assistant superintendent, and Brother Joan Renfroe Mullins, secretary and treasurer. Let the good work go on and make the year 1904 a memorable one in our Sunday school annals for attendance. The Sunday school is the right arm of the church.

The New Jersey World's Fair Commissioners have decided to make October 5 New Jersey Day at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition covers two square miles—1240 acres. It is larger than the Chicago, Omaha, Buffalo and Paris expositions combined.

A model police station will be one of the St. Louis exhibits in the ideal city which will be built at the fair by the twenty-five largest American municipalities.

The British national pavilion at the World's Fair will be a reproduction of the Orangery, or banquet hall, of the Kensington Palace, in Kensington Gardens, London.

The St. Louis Fair appropriations in the States and Territories amount to $6,107,500, or $707,969 more than the total from similar sources at the Chicago Exposition.

The Chamber of Deputies of Paris has unanimously adopted a credit of $40,000 to permit the French labor organizations to participate in the World's Fair at St. Louis.

THE STORM.

'A hush extends o'er field and hill,
The woods are silent, still the stream,
The bird forgets its note to trill,
The bee its bud, and hurries home.

'A gathering gloom pervades the sky,
Expectant nature pauses, stays,
While cloud on cloud is piled on high
And dark the storm his host arrays.

Now slow advancing, gloomy, broad,
The army of the sky spreads far
Its huge embattled front takes head,
Its banners flare and signal war.

'A blinding glare of livid flame Leaps from its black and Now roars the thunder, roars the storm
And wild the wind and torrents rage.

The swaying oak a hundred years
Has braved, defiant, many a blast,
But now the storm in triumph roars
And hurls it down headlong at last.

The reedy marsh, the meadows green,
Flat, level, unresisting lie,
While o'er the upland, through the glen,
The tempests surge, the storm drives by.

Above the uproar, through the storm
The thunders crash, the lightnings glare,
All nature joins in wild alarm,
Involved in fierce, convulsive war.

Its rage is spent, with muttering peal
...flen, slow, away,
...sky reveal,
Again ... fills the day.

An Interrupted Elopement.

A LOVE STORY OF THE TEXAS BORDER.

NELLY WARDEN was the belle of James County; there could be no doubt of that. Some said of the whole of Texas; but that was more problematical.

No one denied, however, that she was one of the prettiest little maids that ever stepped—laughing blue eyes, roguish red lips and a skin with just the least touch of brown where the fiery Texas sun had kissed it. And there wasn't a boy in that section that wouldn't have given his right hand for that same privilege. But she would have none of us, though goodness knows we hung round the Warden ranch in a most disgustingly obvious manner.

Her three big brothers never wanted for chums, and her poor old father positively couldn't move without having some of Nelly's suitors buzzing about him, for, you see, we were all so keen on getting her that we couldn't afford to let the other fellows steal a march on us by making friends at court. But in spite of all our efforts Solomon himself couldn't have told which one of us she favored—if she favored any one at all.

She had a laugh and a smile for every one of us—but as to a preference! Some of the married men, just to worry us, used to say that the right man hadn't arrived yet, and we boys would feel for our pistols and hint that if he wasn't a born and bred James County man the stranger would find things unhealthy for him.

There were, I should say, about eight of us boys who wanted to marry Nelly Warden, and, in spite of our rivalry, we were all pretty good friends. With one exception. He was Juan Sola, a Mexican from over the border—a regular fiery Spanish "greaser" of the old style. He was a magnificent horseman, and to see him come thundering up to the Warden ranch—big silver spurs, silver-worked saddle and bridle, and jaunty hat—made us fellows green with jealousy when we thought of our sorry steeds and string and leather equipment. Still, Juan didn't get on any better than the rest of us. He was always welcome; so were we. He stopped to dinner or tea; so did we. And he went away no forrarder.

But as time went on we noticed that the Mexican was not exactly contented with the progress he was making in his wooing. His was one of those impetuous natures which brook no obstacles, and it galled him to think that he, Juan Sola, owner of a big ranch, the handsomest man on the border, who could have had any dark-eyed Mexican senorita he chose for his wife, could not make headway with the little blue-eyed Nelly Warden. And we saw that he scowled blackly at times as he rode home over the border.

And so the days passed away, until one night Jim Warden—that was Nelly's eldest brother—came to my shanty in a high state of excitement.

"Dick," said he, dropping into a chair and mopping the perspiration from his face, "I've got a most extraordinary ... of news for you. Juan Sola is going ... with Nell!"

"... with Nell!" I roared. "You ... g to marry him? Has ...

"Steady, old man," said Jim, with a smile. "Perhaps I didn't ought to have put it that way. But now listen. I'm serious. I was down at San Roca about some horses to-day, and who should I meet there but Pete, one of Sola's servants. You remember him? The man I dragged away from that mad bull last year."

I nodded.

"Well, the old chap seemed confused at seeing me, and it seemed to me somehow that he'd got something on his mind. At first, when I asked him what was amiss, he tried to pass it off, but then he suddenly turned to me and told me that he wouldn't have it on his conscience to deceive a man who had saved his life. Of course I asked what on earth he meant about deceiving me. Then out came his whole budget. I promised him I'd see he didn't suffer, and came straight on to see you about the business. To put it in a nutshell, what he told me was this: His master has got tired of hanging round Nelly without result, and he has resolved to kidnap her, take her across the border to one of his estancias in the mountains, and there get ... priest to marry them while we're ... g around for our poor girl."

"Heavens!" I cried, for although ... took place on the border, ... dreamt of anything quite ... "And when villain knows, and the job can be done as easy as winking."

"She mustn't stir out, that's all," I said, hastily. "Great Scott! what can we do to the fellow?"

"My dear chap," said Jim, "if we simply content ourselves with keeping Nelly safe under lock and key we can do nothing to him, because we lack proof. But I've got a scheme."

He broke off and chuckled.

"Out with it, man!" I cried, for his merriment nettled me.

"We must go through with the kidnaping business, that's all!" he said, becoming suddenly sober.

"What! Let Nelly get taken!" I cried.

"Yes, and no!" said Jim, his eyes dancing with merriment at my bewilderment. "Juan shall kidnap somebody, if he can—but it won't be Nelly. See?"

"I'm hanged if I do!" I said. "Who should he take, if not Nelly?"

"We'll provide some one," said Jim. "You blockhead! Don't you understand? Somebody must play Nelly, for this occasion only. Then when our gay Mexican rides up to start his girl-lifting lay, we chime in and trot out our part of the play. And, by Jove!" he added, grimly, "I've got some mighty pretty lines in my act!"

Dawn was now breaking in upon me.

"But who was going to pretend to be Nell?" I asked. "It's going to be a mighty unhealthy part. Sola's not a man to stand any monkey tricks, and he's very handy with his guns."

"I know," said Jim. "He's a dead shot, and he's more than likely to get mad when he realizes he's been fooled and won't be able to show his nose this side of the border again. It can't be a girl, Dick, it's too risky. She'd be just as likely to stop a bullet as one of us, if I know anything of the greaser."

"Yes," said I, "that rather beats us, doesn't it?"

"Not a bit of it," replied Jim. Then he looked at me critically. "I've got it!" he cried. "You shall play Nelly, Dick!"

"Me!" I said, and my voice was so strange that Jim roared again.

"Yes—you," he continued. "You've got a slight, girlish figure, my boy—don't hit me!—your face is innocent of hair, and you'll make an A1 girl when we've done with you. We'll borrow one of Nell's gowns and her big flop hat, and a wig out of the box we had for the theatricals last spring, and your own mother wouldn't know you."

"Don't talk rubbish, Jim!" I said, hotly. "Do you think I am a fool? What sort of a freak should I look got up like that?"

"We're playing for a big stake!" said Jim, becoming grave again; "and if we come out all right you ought to stand in for something. I like you, Dick, and I should like to see you get our Nell. Don't you think if you and I pull this through it'll send you up in her estimation? You do as I tell you, my boy, and I'll be your best man yet."

From that moment I was as wax in his hands.

The time had come. Miss Nelly Warden, otherwise Dick Travers, attired in her pretty blue print gown and her big flop hat, which effectually concealed her face, set out on her black mare to ride to the house of old Ma'am Morrell, who gave music lessons. Miss Nelly rode side-saddle—but, between you and me I found it uncomfortable, and my own wouldn't set straight somehow around about where I had got my two six-shooters tucked.

I didn't feel happy. I knew that away down the trail somewhere Jim and Tom Warden were waiting, their pistols on the cock. The old servant told Jim pretty exactly the spot where the ambush would be laid, and Jim and Tom had arranged so as to be on hand when wanted. Still, things might go wrong, and if so I stood to get a couple of leaden pellets through my head instead of leading Nelly Warden to the altar. For Juan Sola had a way of shooting on sight when he got mad, and then his vicinity became distinctly unhealthy.

Hark! What was that? A scurry in the underbrush, a rush of men and horses, and a cloak had been thrown over my head and I was dragged backward off my horse to the ground. Some very unladylike exclamations which I let drop as I struggled to escape were fortunately lost in the confusion.

Then came the thud of hoofs, and I heard Jim's voice demanding what was amiss. For answer came an oath in Sola's voice, ... sta... out of ... Tom Warden fired on Sola, but missed, and I began to think it was time to assist in the fighting. I was lying on the ground entangled in the horse cloak, and as I struggled to rise Sola suddenly seized me by the arm with the intention of pulling me to my feet. In the darkness he had not yet discovered the deception.

I threw off his grasp and sprang to my feet, drawing my revolver as I did so. A strange figure I must have looked, standing there in my blue skirt. My big "flop hat" hung round my neck by its ribbon, and my wig had fallen off.

One searching glance the Mexican threw at me, then he realized the truth.

"Fooled!" he shrieked, and let drive a bullet at me. I had ducked at the flash, but a hot, tearing pain in my left arm told me that his aim was good. I fired at him, but missed him badly, and in a second he had mounted and turned to flee, his two servants riding beside him.

"Mount and after them," roared Tom, who was fat and heavy. "I must look after my brother."

I needed no further incentive. I leaped on to my horse—Nelly's horse—and in a moment I was after them. My mare was fresher than theirs, and I gained rapidly on them. Suddenly, in obedience to an order from Sola, one of the servants turned back and rode at me, but a bullet from my Colt took him in the shoulder, and he rode off howling in a direction at right angles to that in which we were galloping.

The second servant was apparently in a terrible panic, and at last he swerved off and left his master alone. Sola, seeing this, turned in his saddle and fired after him, making the silent woods ring with oaths. And all the time I was gaining on him. I knew that if he once got behind a rock there he could pick me off at his leisure, and so I strove my hardest to come up with him, paying no heed to my burning wound. Just as he turned to the corner, and stood outlined for a second against the blue night sky, he turned and fired on me, and our bullets crossed. He took me just above the knee, but mine hit him somewhere under the breastbone, and he pitched out of his saddle heavily. I rode cautiously up, but when I saw his face I knew that the danger was past. Juan Sola was dead!

Quite how I got back to the town I do not know. I must have fainted from pain and loss of blood many times, but the good old horse pulled me through and carried me safely to the Warden ranch, where Tom, carrying his badly wounded brother, had arrived long before. By the time I arrived the whole story of the frustrated elopement was public property, and great was the rejoicing when I turned up alive, though damaged, the general concensus of opinion having been that when I set out to pursue the Mexican and his two servants I had gone on my last ride.

So poor little Nelly had her hands full, with two great invalids to look after. Jim got better sooner than I did, having only a bullet track across his ribs, but that was to my advantage, seeing that when he got better she was free to devote more time to me. She made me tell her all about my chase and how I felt in her gown and hat. I told her a good deal more, too, a good deal that wouldn't interest you, perhaps. But when we told Jim the result of our conversation, of course the silly fellow must slap me on the back, and roar out: "I told you so, Dick! I told you you stood to get something good out of the business!"

As I often tell little Nelly, I did.—New York News.

A World's Parliament.

It was only 700 years from the authorization of trial by jury in land disputes in England till private war was wholly abolished in England, and the parliament which did this came into existence 100 years after trial by jury was authorized, says Gunton's Magazine. Already the nations have authorized trial by jury in all controversies. Remembering that when wager of battle was abolished the county seats in England were further from London than the capitals of the nations now are, it is hard to estape from the conclusion that an international parliament will come into existence, as England's parliament did, much more speedily as time for travel and communication diminishes, and that this parliament will do, in say 100 years, under twentieth century conditions, what it took the English parliament 600 years to do under ancient conditions. But whether this reformation according to the nineteenth century revelation in political affairs takes 100 or 200 years for its realization, it seems almost proved that the world will be included in this union ... it is formed.

Thought He Was Killed.

A workman in a big building company's yards nearly died of fright a few days ago. The foreman heard a yell and much commotion among a lot of carpenters in the yard and rushed to the scene. He found one of the men on the ground with a two-inch bit apparently sticking through his side, white as a ghost, and practically out of his mind. His fellow-workmen had sent for an ambulance and were about as badly frightened as he. The foreman took out his knife and slit the man's jumper and shirt down the back. The bit came away with the shirt, tightly rolled up in it, and the man ... uscratched ...

THE HORSE THE MOST STUPID DUMB BRUTE.

By H. C. MURRAY.

MEN who are accustomed to dealing with animals and who have them in charge agree that the horse is one of the stupidest of all quadrupeds. The trainers in the circuses and zoological gardens make the statement. This fact doubtless causes surprise to the average mortal, whose conception of the horse's intelligence is founded on sentiment and tales of fiction. Romance, the poet and the well-meaning but unenlightened though enthusiastic members of the S. P. C. A. have done much to strengthen this impression, but those who desire proof of this lack of intelligence may easily find it.

Take, for instance, the comparison between the horse and the elephant. The elephant possesses a sense of proportion, a thing of which the horse is absolutely devoid. It is a common sight in India to see elephants piling teak-wood logs that they have brought from the river in the spring, when the logs have been floated down from the uplands. Many of the elephants so engaged, without driver or directions, will take their head and "true" the end of the timbers; that is, push them all even so that they present a uniform surface when piled up. It would be absolutely impossible to give a horse such a sense of proportion.

Again, if an elephant wishes to grapple anything with his trunk, he will not reach out for it until the object is within reaching distance. In other words, he is able to measure accurately the distance, and makes no futile attempt. The horse, on the other hand, can be seen stretching his head through a fence for food that he cannot reach, and will launch out with his hind hoofs for an object which he wishes to strike ten feet in the rear.

The elephant, before stepping on a bridge or other structure that he has cause to doubt, will first test its strength. The horse, on the other hand, will take the most rickety bridge at full gallop, trusting blindly to his master to save him from calamity.

In the matter of counting almost any animal is superior to the horse. Even the crow, as has been demonstrated, can be made to count accurately as far as five. Repeated tests with the horse in this particular have failed.

It is true that an educated horse in a circus will do a great many things that on the surface appear highly intelligent, but investigation shows that they have simply been taught one or two things which they do in rotation, and are unable to exercise any mental faculties in the rendering outside of those called for in the performance of the duty already planned and mapped out and impressed upon his mind by years, possibly, of careful training.

The horse in his native wilds possesses no more intelligence than his domesticated brother. The elephant, the rhinoceros and the hippopotamus, all of whose bulk is many times larger than that of the horse, will move noiselessly through the forest, whereas the horse, whenever in rapid motion, will crash blindly ahead, attracting the attention of every carnivorous beast within hearing. He is absolutely devoid of the instincts governing self-preservation, his only protection being to launch blindly forth with his hind legs at any danger which threatens.

Again, as an example of the horse's mental limitations, is the fact that most of those dangers are fancied. How often you see a horse shy at a piece of white paper in the road or at some large rock in the side path, which a dog would pass by without a glance.

Many stories are told of the homing instincts of the horse; how, when his rider is lost upon the plains, and drops the reins upon his horse's neck, his "gallant steed" brings him safely through the storm to warmth and shelter. Now, any old fox hunter will tell you that if a fox be run through a country strange to both horses and hounds, the hounds will find their way home, each and every one, without any direction, even if it be raining hard and the back scent be destroyed. Cast your horse loose, however, and he will be utterly unable to find his way home, and wander over the country for weeks, until somebody takes pity on him and leads him home, with drooping head.

It is true, however, that a horse, when being driven, if left to guide himself, will frequently return home, provided that he has been going in the same direction since he left the stables. It is believed, in this case, that the horse takes the sun for his guide, as do most other animals. If, when he starts his journey, he is facing the rising sun and continues all morning long to face it, he will turn his back to it to return home, but drive him through a strange country, where the sun is now in front of him, now behind him, now on one side of him and now on the other, and he becomes so confused and loses his bearings so completely that in more than one instance horses have been known to fight for their head, and, when they were given it, have started out on a hard trot in exactly the opposite direction from their homes.

The average horse, also, is devoid of ... fection. He will run to the bars ... ad because he expects food ... short time ... will recognize his ... years of absence.

How to Do Without Servants.

It behooves all house mothers to meet the question of how to do without servants. And in order to keep up the standard of mental, spiritual and physical excellence in women, they must be willing to consider that it would be better to live on plainer food, to have fewer ornaments to dust in their homes, to wear less elaborate gowns, and to have more time to read with their children, to walk out under the beneficent skies of this fair land and ... reflect on ... that are

THE OLDEST MAN IN AMERICA

Tells How He Escaped the Terrors of Many Winters by Using Pe-ru-na.

MR. ISAAC BROCK, BORN IN BUNCOMBE CO., N. C., MARCH 1, 1788

His age is 115 years, vouched for by authentic record. He says: "I attribute my extreme age to the use of Peruna."

Born before the United States was formed.
Saw 22 Pesidents elected.
Pe-ru-na has protected him from all sudden changes.
Veteran of four wars.
Shod a horse when 99 years old.
Always conquered the grip with Pe-ru-na.
Witness in a land suit at the age of 110 years.
Believes Peruna the greatest remedy of the age for catarrhal diseases.

ISAAC BROCK, a citizen of McLennan County, Texas, has lived for 115 years. For many years he resided at Rosque Falls, eighteen miles west of Waco, but now lives with his son-in-law at Valley Mills, Texas.

A short time ago, by request, Uncle Isaac came to Waco and sat for his picture. In his hand he held a stick cut from the grave of General Andrew Jackson, which has been carried by him ever since. Mr. Brock is a dignified old gentleman, showing few signs of decreptitude. His family Bible is still preserved, and it shows that the date of his birth was written 115 years ago.

Surely a few words from this remarkable old gentleman, who has had 115 years of experience to draw from, would be interesting as well as profitable. A lengthy biographical sketch is given of this remarkable old man in the Waco Times-Herald, December 4, 1898. A still more pretentious biography of this, the oldest living man, illustrated with a double column portrait, was given the readers of the Dallas Morning News, dated December 11, 1898, and also the Chicago Times-Herald of same date. This centenarian is an ardent friend of Peruna, having used it many years.

In speaking of his good health and extreme old age Mr. Brock says:

"After a man has lived in the world as long as I have he ought to have found out a great many things by experience. I think I have done so.

"One of the things I have found out to my entire satisfaction is the proper thing for ailments that are due directly to the effects of the climate. For 115 years I have withstood the changeable climate of the United States.

"I have always been a very healthy man, but of course subject to the little affections which are due to sudden changes in the climate and temperature. During my long life I have known a great many remedies for coughs, colds and diarrhoea.

"As for Dr. Hartman's remedy, Peruna, I have found it to be the best, if not the only, reliable remedy for these affections. It has been my standby for many years, and I attribute my good health and extreme old age to this remedy.

"It exactly meets all my requirements. It protects me from the evil effects of sudden changes; it keeps me in good appetite; it gives me strength; it keeps my blood in good circulation. I have come to rely upon it almost entirely for the many little things for which I need medicine.

"When epidemics of la grippe first began to make their appearance in this country I was a sufferer from that disease.

"I had several long attacks with the grip. At first I did not know that Peruna was a remedy for this disease. When I heard that la grippe was epidemic catarrh, I tried Peruna for la grippe and found it to be just the thing."

In a letter dated January 31, 19 Mr. Brock writes:

"I am well and feeling as well as I have for years. The only thing that bothers me is my sight. If I could see better I could walk all over the farm and it would do me good. I would not be without Peruna."

Yours truly,

Isaac Brock.

A MILLION-DOLLAR CLOAK.

By R. I. GEARE.

FROM the standpoint of uniqueness the Hawaiian war cloak shown in the accompanying illustration, which is valued at $1,000,000, and is now on exhibition in the National Museum, can hardly be surpassed. It is certainly without a superior in ethnologic interest and excellence of workmanship. In 1839 this remarkable object (technically called "Mamo") was in the possession of His Majesty, Kanikeaouli, who inherited it from his father, the celebrated Kamehameha, in whose reign it was completed.

At one time it belonged to Kekua-skalani, one of the highest chieftains of the Sandwich Islands. After the abolition of idolatry in 1819, he rebelled against the King and attempted to reestablish the ancient religions. In a bloody battle the chieftain was slain and this cloak, which he was then wearing, fell into the hands of the conquerors and thus passed into the possession of King Kamehameha III. (The Solitary or Lonely), by whom it was presented to Captain J. H. Aulick, of the United States Navy.

Some idea of the amount of work expended in making this war cloak may be gathered from the fact that the time required for its manufacture extended through the eight reigns preceding that of King Kamehameha. It is four feet long, and has a spread of eleven and a half feet. The ground work is coarse netting, made of olona, a native hemp from the fibre of the hau tree, and to this the feathers, which are exceedingly delicate and very small, are skillfully attached, overlapping each other and forming a perfectly smooth surface. The feathers around the border are reverted, and the whole presents a bright and beautiful appearance, as of a mantle of gold. The upper and lateral borders of the cloak, which are corded with a string of the olona, are decorated with alternate tufts of red, black and yellow feathers. The body is decorated with alternate figures, generally crescent shaped, composed of either red or yellow feathers. The inner surface is without lining and shows the olona network and the quill ends of the feathers. The cord of the upper margin is prolonged to form a fastening at the throat.

The yellow feathers are those of the rare bird Oo, or Uho, Mohoa nobilis, while the red feathers are taken from the body and neck of the Drepanis coccinea, one of the most abundant birds inhabiting these islands. It is the yellow feathers, however, that are of such great value. They were at one time used by the natives in payment of a poll tax to the King. Only two of these yellow feathers are obtained from under the wings of each bird, so that the number of birds captured from which sufficient feathers could be obtained to make this cloak must have been very great.

The capture of these birds is effected with great care and toil. Long poles, smeared with some adhesive substance and well baited, are placed in the vicinity of their haunts. The bird alights on the pole, and, being unable to disengage itself, is caught. The two so much desired feathers are plucked, and the bird is then set at liberty. At one time three of these feathers were worth seven and a half francs, and it is upon this basis that the value of this particular cloak has been estimated. Until recent years cloaks of this kind were counted among the most precious of the royal treasures of the kings of the Sandwich Islands, but since European dress has been adopted, they are now rarely or never seen.

The cloak which forms the subject of this article has been deposited in the United States National Museum by Mr. Richmond Ogston Aulick, of New York City.

The Girl and the Sweater.

Indiana school girls may wear "sweaters" to school, provided they tuck the garment inside the skirt, according to a decision of the school trustees of Jeffersonville. It is encouraging to see this grave educational problem grappled and roped and tied at last. The sweater has flaunted itself too long in the face of intellectual progress. No girl can master the mysteries of quadratic equations or elucidate the biasness of the pons asinorum when her mind is struggling with the question of whether she shall wear her sweater habitbacked, or gathered at the waist with two rows of pleats and a shirr at the collar, or wherever they put shirrs. If this ruling, that sweaters shall be tucked into the skirt, does not at once result in a tremendous advance in the intellectuality of Indiana womanhood, the school authorities should meet again and come to a final conclusion as to whether the sweater shall go over the head or be stepped into.—Chicago Tribune.

It is reassuring to know that any one who wishes to buy radium can now procure it at a cost of $3000 per gram. All radium of higher activity than 7000 has until recently been retailed for the experiments of Professor and Madame Curie and their associates, says a writer in Harper's Weekly, but information has now been received from Director Boulay, of the Societe Centrale, that they expect shortly to put upon the market a preparation of radium, chemically pure, or nearly so, at the cost per gram mentioned above.

How to Protect the Bluebirds.

THE CATS CAN NOT REACH IT.

Th... provi... from ... red squirrel is the worst offender. In May and June he scours every tree in the woods, and even comes around the houses. The bluebirds are hard pressed to find any kind of nesting place at all, and when they do the chances are against them. The bird-house shown here is perfectly safe, and within two hours after I made it the bluebirds were making their nest in it.

It is a very simple matter. Get a hollow limb or make a box of weather-beaten boards, close both ends, rain-tight, and make a two-inch opening near the top. The cavity inside should be about three inches across and four or five inches deep. Nail or wire the box to a post set securely in the open where no squirrel or cat can jump down on it from above. Then stop everything from coming up the post by a sheet of tin or an old pan that encircles the post. This result is best accomplished by cutting an "X" in the tin and shoving the post through; then nail down the flaps of the "X" to the post.

Monday Suicide.

It is stated that there are more suicides Monday than any other day, but no attempt is made to give a reason for this fact. Somebody points out that Monday is usually wash day, and it should be added that a boiled dinner usually goes with it. The clothes line may, perhaps, suggest the fatal rope, and the clothespin nasal asphyxiation. There are blue Mondays, too, and it may be possible that the suicides have their own peculiar ideas about starting the week right.

The Cray watershed, in Wales, which gives Swansea its water, must come very near to being the wettest spot on the globe. Exactly 175.54 inches of rain, or nearly five yards, were registered there between January 1 last and October 24. In October alone twenty-seven inches fell on the watershed.

FOR WOMEN

A Boston physician's discovery which cleanses and heals all inflammation of the mucous membrane wherever located.

In local treatment of female ills Paxtine is invaluable. Used as a douche it is a revelation in cleansing and healing power; it kills all disease germs which cause inflammation and discharges.

Thousands of letters from women prove that it is the greatest cure for leucorrhœa ever discovered.

Paxtine never fails to cure pelvic catarrh, nasal catarrh, sore throat, sore mouth and sore eyes, because these diseases are all caused by inflammation of the mucous membrane.

For cleansing, whitening and preserving the teeth we challenge the world to produce its equal.

Physicians and specialists everywhere prescribe and endorse Paxtine, and thousands of testimonial letters prove its value.

At druggists, or sent postpaid 50 cts.

A large trial package and book of instructions absolutely free. Write The H. Paxton Co., Dept. 25 Boston, Mass.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation."

IMPORTANT TO VOTERS.

In answer to an inquiry from Tax Collector T. J. Hubbard, the following letter was received, and we publish it for the benefit of all concerned:

"State Auditor of Alabama, Montgomery, Ala., January 6, 1904.

Mr. T. J. Hubbard, Tax Collector Chilton Co., Clanton, Ala.

"Dear Sir:

"Yours of the 5th inst. received. I am of the opinion, and the attorney general concurs with me in this opinion, that a young man who became of age after the 1st of October, 1903, is NOT subject to poll tax for 1904.

Yours very truly,
"T. L. SOWELL.
"State Auditor."

The meeting of the republican executive committee of the county held Monday developed more "Referee Aldrichism." His pie brigade was out with all they could muster in the county, with the typewritten instructions from their boss in their pockets. They wanted to have a convention to meet at Thorsby instructed to name delegates to the "Rump District" convention which W. F. Aldrich has called to meet at Calera. The republicans wished to meet at Clanton and name delegates to the regular district convention which is called to meet at Talladega on February 23, 1904. It was about a stand off, and when a proposition was submitted (as a substitute) calling a convention at Clanton on February 13, 1904, which did not specify either the regular or Rump district conventions, it went through with a rush, thus referring the question to the voters of the county, as is eminently proper. This county committee was elected almost two years ago and was supposed to represent the white republican sentiment in Chilton county, but since September, 1902, some of the members have been seduced from the principles they PROFESSED to hold at that time. Some have been bought with place by the referees, some have been bought with promise of retention in the office from which the patrons of that office sought to have them removed for misconduct, some are living on expectations; so they do not truly represent the republicans of Chilton county, and it is now up to the voters to name a committee that will do so. The "continuous, irrevocable proxy" which W. F. Aldrich holds the [illegible] its appearance before the committee, purporting to be signed by Scott Caverno, of beat 9, but unfortunately for the pie schemers it was shown that Mr. Caverno was not a lawful member of the committee, as at the time of his election to a place on the committee he had NOT acquired citizenship in Alabama, not having resided in the state the two years required by the new constitution. In justice to Mr. Caverno it should be stated that he was not present at the convention of September, 1902, but that his name was put in nomination by a man of his beat, who presumably was ignorant of the laws of his state.

In bright contrast to the republican meeting it was a positive pleasure to look in on the populist gathering, composed of able, sincere men who were attending to the needs of their county, all working together in harmony, each one only seeking to give his best service to his people. There were no strings tied to them of which the other end was pulled in Montgomery or any other place. We say all honor to the populists of Chilton; they are practical men who will do their best for their county wherever they are put; either in the ranks or at the head, true service they will give.

Keep all federal office holders off your delegations and committees hereafter. Don't give them a chance to sell you out for a postoffice or deputy marshalship. Some men would sell their souls as well as their principles for a "mess of pottage" at the referees' bargain counter.

It is now up to the republican voters of Chilton county for settlement. Come to the convention at Clanton February 13th and determine for yourselves whether you will have republicans to represent you or the black and tan followers of the referees. It is up to you; make your choice.

There were 835 votes cast for a republican governor in 1902 in Chilton county. They are all eligible to take part in the Clanton convention February 13th.

We are willing to go on record with this prediction: Theodore Roosevelt will NOT be the next president of these United States. See!

REPUBLICAN COUNTY COMMITTEE

There was a meeting of the Chilton county republican executive committee on Monday, January 11, 1904, in the office of the UNION. Chairman J. B. Downs called the meeting to order and Secretary A. G. Dake called the roll of the members, when the chairman announced that, a quorum being present, the committee would proceed to business: Two proxies were offered, one from W. H. Foshee, member from beat 7 by F. O. Dudley, of beat 4, and one from Scott Caverno, of beat 9, by B. G. Burnett, of beat 9. Dudley was admitted to represent Foshee, but Caverno's proxy to Burnett was thrown out, it being shown to the committee that Mr. Caverno was not a registered citizen of Alabama in September, 1902, he not having been a resident of the state long enough to entitle him to register at that time, and was therefore not eligible to be put on the committee by the convention of September, 1902. Mr. Caverno did not register until December 16, 1902. A motion was made by Secar Harris for a county convention to be held at Thorsby on February 13, 1904. A substitute for same was offered by H. A. Wilson, naming Clanton as the place of meeting on the same date. The substitute was not carried and the committee took a recess for dinner. On reassembling in the afternoon H. A. Wilson offered a substitute for Harris' resolution, as follows:

"Be it resolved, That this committee do and hereby instruct the chairman to call a mass convention of the republicans of Chilton county to meet in Clanton on Saturday, February 13, 1904, for the purpose of electing delegates to the republican state and district conventions and to transact such other business as may be necessary."

This motion was adopted by a viva voce vote.

A motion to adjourn was then made and carried, and the committee adjourned.

J. B. DOWNS,
Chairman.

A. G. DAKE,
Assistant Secretary.

It has repeatedly been charged that the black and tan faction in Chilton county are exerting themselves to elect a democratic ticket in the county. Such charges seem to be well founded in view of the action of the black and tan faction after the adjournment of the regular committee. They went up in the court house and got up a string of resolutions, and then took them to the Banner, a democratic sheet, for publication. That shows what sort of republicans they are.

The postmasters from Clanton, from Thorsby, from Verbena, etc., ad nauseam show what the black and tans are composed of. If the postmaster of Clanton would show the attention to his office that he gives to his referee boss he would not make so many mistakes in delivering mail. He violates the postoffice regulations in closing up his office before 7 o'clock p. m. when the mail is late, and he should open his office by 7 o'clock in the morning the same as the business houses instead of 8 o'clock. We call on the postmaster general for an investigation.

The situation in the Far East is interesting. Signs multiply that the Japanese mean to make an effort to civilize Chinamen along the lines of Oriental civilization by which the Japanese have been developed. The influence of Japan upon China is the most serious factor with which Russia has to reckon. Already the Chinese are arming, organizing and preparing to resist the encroachments of Russia. If Japan is given a little time to discipline Chinamen and to inspire them with Japanese energy and aptitude for new ideas, the world will see the Muscovite overwhelmed in his attempt to possess the Far East.

Dr. Hutchinson divides the child's life into six play-stages, corresponding to primitive civilization, which he calls the "root-and-grub, the hunting, the pastoral, the agricultural and the commercial." The root-and-grub stage is the first, when the infant chiefly shows its interest in life by clutching at bright objects. A little later, the rolling spool or ball attracts him exactly as it attracts the kitten. From this he passes into the hunting stage, where he hides himself, jumps out at people from behind doors, and peoples his environment with imaginary wild beast. Last, he emerges into the commercial stage, when he trades in marbles, and fills his pockets with schoolboy merchandise. "In short, the school of play, in 15 short years, has brought him from the root-digging cave-man to the 'bear' of the stock exchange, the modern captain of industry."

A great educational work is going on in France. In every city, and even in some small villages, educational clubs are being organized among the people. "We want to know the truth about science and government and industry," is the motto of these clubs. They are in every case self-supporting. Not one has been assisted by government or by any wealthy man. In most cases the dues are 10 cents a month. Lectures are given by professors, newspaper men and wage-workers. All classes of people mingle in these clubs. The names which many of them adopt are peculiar. One is called the "Ideal Spirit," another the "Cooperation of Ideas," another the "Coming of the People," another the "Emancipation." The first of the clubs was organized less than four years ago, yet it has at the present time 5,000 members. A description of the new movement is given in the Independent by Professor Steeg, of Paris.

To prevent overcrowding of street cars in London the police are now arresting the passengers who do the overcrowding, comments the Buffalo Courier. That wouldn't be popular here. Most Americans prefer to hang on to the straps and take the risk of having ribs broken rather than wait a few minutes for more comfortable transportation.

Women are employed on the gardening staff at Kew Gardens, England, on condition that they work in male attire. A young woman is in charge of the herbaceous and Alpine plant department at the present time. The women gardeners go through a two-year course of study at Kew, and in the intervals of spadework, barrow-wheeling and practical flower culture, attend lectures in the various sections of the gardens.

The preparations now going on for the cane crop of 1904 are being conducted so far under more than ordinarily favorable weather conditions, and great activity is prevalent everywhere throughout the sugar district. Cotton and rice seem to be encroaching on the cane acreage to some extent, but, considering the attractive prices which these two crops, especially cotton, have brought of late, there is some cause for surprise that this encroachment is not even greater. The general cane crop situation for 1904 is thus far quite satisfactory.

In Porto Rico.

The last session of the second biennial legislature of Porto Rico is open. Governor Hunt's message will be read on Tuesday.

The better class has assured the house of representatives that it will support the measure for a loan of $5,000,000 for the farmers. The Americans in the council are opposing the measures on the ground of economy, and the house threatens retaliation by killing all the American measures, including the general appropriation.

MINOR EVENTS OF THE WEEK

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

President Roosevelt has pardoned Robert F. Ashley, serving a two-year sentence in the Southern Illinois penitentiary for passing counterfeit money.

APPEAL TO CARNEGIE.

To Establish Rural Libraries All Over the Country.

A movement is on foot to ask Andrew Carnegie to donate a sum of money for the establishment of libraries in the rural districts of the United States. It is thought several thousand signatures will be secured to the petition in Alabama, when the list will be sent to Washington, where, with the petitions from other states, it will be prepared for presentation to Mr. Carnegie. The petition reads:

"Appreciating the great work that you have done and are doing for the cities of the United States, we most earnestly ask that you take steps at your earliest convenience, to investigate the crying need of more than sixty million people who are in rural districts and small towns, beyond the reach of city libraries.

"From these country communities have come most of the great men of our nation: the young people who live in such communities appreciate fully what is being done for them. They have time to read and build into their minds the contents of good books that are placed in their hands.

"We, the undersigned, believe that the result of your investigation along you will demonstrate that the maximum return may from the minimum invest-

A RETIRED OFFICER

Will Be Placed in Charge of the Alabama State Guard.

The war department has written Governor Jelks, of Alabama, asking if the governor has any personal preference in the selection of a retired army officer to be detailed in charge of the Alabama state guard under the provision of the Dick militia bill.

The governor has not yet responded to the secretary's letter. In case he has no one whom he personally prefers for the place the department will select an officer. Only retired officers will be detailed, as the department can not spare the services of those on the active list.

The new dispensary law of Walker county, Alabama, is to be tested, a suit having been filed Saturday. It is said that the regularity of the journals of the legislature will be attacked, it being alleged that the bill was not enacted as required by the state constitution.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUARY 4TH.

The senate's first session following the holiday recess was devoted entirely to Panama. President Roosevelt sent a message on the s... Discussion continued through the day, speeches being made both in defense of and against the policy which has been pursued. Mr. McComas defended the president and asserted that his action would stand if tried in court. He maintained that even without recognition the new republic of Panama would have been established and maintained indefinitely.

Mr. Morgan stated his preference for the Nicaragua route, and maintained that the present course of the administration was breaking down the established policy of the United States regarding neutrality. He said the president now desired the assistance of three democratic senators to maintain his policy. He predicted that even though the government of the United States should undertake the construction of the canal, a canal would be built over the Nicaragua route because of its superior feasibility.

He referred to President McKinley's attitude toward the canal routes, and declared that "Nicaragua has a better friend in the grave of William McKinley than Panama has in the present head of the American army and navy."

In the house a privileged resolution offered by Mr. Hay, democrat, reciting that certain statements contained in the Bristow postoffice report reflected on the membership of the house, provided for an investigation by a committee to be appointed by the speaker. The vote developed no quorum and the house adjourned.

The resignation of Mr. McClellan, of New York, was announced at the opening of the session.

The Sisters Have Met.

Mrs. C. W. Taylor, residing at Bluff Springs, Fla., was so badly burned Thursday night that death resulted.

The accident is a particularly sad one. Mrs. Taylor was in the room where lay the corpse of her sister, who had expired that day. During the night Mrs. Taylor, who was much affected by the death of her sister, went into the room where lay the corpse. She was standing near the fire, when her dress caught in some manner. She was not aware of this until she was nearly enveloped in flames. Before assistance arrived Mrs. Taylor was severely burned. The remains of the two sisters were placed side by side in the room where, the day previous, there had been but one to mourn.

John Alexander Dowie started on his trip around the world Saturday. Dowie will first go to New Orleans, where he will remain for a week. Then he will proceed to San Francisco. He will embark for Australia January 21, going by way of Honolulu.

EASY TO KEEP HOUSE.

No Problem at All in the Jungles of the West Indies.

The negro housewife in the West Indian jungle finds housekeeping very easy. Fruit and vegetables grow wild all about the hut, and the river abounds with fish.

On wash day all she has to do is to pick a few of the berries of the soapberry tree, take her clothes to the river, and use berries as she would use ordinary soap. Even her cooking pots grow on the trees, the calabash cut in halves being used for this purpose. Calabashes are used also for bowls, basins and jugs for carrying water from the river, while the small ones make excellent cups.

In the afternoon, when she is ready for her cup of tea, the negress picks half a dozen leaves from the lime [tree] at her door, boils them, [adds] juice from a sugarcane [and] sweetening, and the cocoanut supplies milk. Thus she has a delicious cup of tea without depending on the grocer for it.

She makes the mats for her floor from the dried leaves of the banana, which are dyed and sewn together, as the old country people in this country make their rag mats.

LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE.

Vincent Benedict's Declaration as to His Infant Son.

A man—we'll call him Brown—was last year receiving congratulations because of the fact that he had at last succeeded in finding a member of the opposite sex who was willing to cook and make his bed for him for the consideration of a wifely title.

Brown was last week being congratulated because of the arrival of a son and heir.

Now, Brown, by the way, was thirty-nine years of age when he married, and consequently was well qualified to give his opinions as to the state of matrimonial affiliation.

"When do you think is the proper time for a man to marry?" he was asked one day this week.

Brown looked wise. "Twenty-one," he replied. "Look at all the years of happiness I've missed. Great Scott! if that son of mine does not get married when he is twenty-one I'll horsewhip him."

In such channels run the thoughts of newly made parents!

How to Do Without Servants.

It behooves all house mothers to meet the question of how to do without servants. And in order to keep up the standard of mental, spiritual and physical excellence in women, they must be willing to consider that it would be better to live on plainer food, to have fewer ornaments to dust in their homes, to wear less elaborate gowns, and to have more time to read with their children, to walk out under the beneficent skies of this fair land and to reflect on those things that are so abundantly set before the citizens of the twentieth century; that will make for an elevation of class, an entire leveling of conditions that depend on the grade of mind that meets them.—Florence Jackson Stoddard, in Sunset Magazine.

Brown Knew.

Professor Bacon of Georgia has for [years] taught by the natural sciences, in which he is unusually well versed.

He was talking one day about the effect of heat and cold, explaining with great thoroughness the rule that "heat expands and cold contracts."

Suddenly he smiled. "I am reminded of a story," he said. "There was a boys' class in physics before which this rule came. The rule was discussed in its various aspect and bearing, and finally the teacher said:

"'Brown, suppose you give me a good example of the rule. Can you do it?'

"'Yes, sir,' said Brown. 'In the summer, when it's hot, the days are longer; and in winter, when it's cold, the days are short.'"

On Our Knees.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What burdens lighten! what temptations slake!
What parched grounds refreshed, as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all the distant and the near Stand forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak!—we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong?
That we are ever overborne with care—
That we should ever weak or heartless be—
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy, and strength, and courage are with Thee.

Fair Play in Business.

It is of vast importance to the future manhood of this country that scorn of unfairness should be universal. Above all, let it be applied strenuously to unfairness in business. We are a commercial people. Our boys must go into commerce. Our professions are so mingled with commerce that it is often hard to distinguish [them] they be professions. If we are to [have] unscrupulousness in commerce become a race [that] is dead [to] honor.

Triumph of Little Chemist.

When electricity was first being put to commercial uses, the Carnegie Steel company invested in electric traveling cranes to the extent of $250,000. After the cranes had been delivered and paid for, the discovery was made that they wouldn't work. As a result, the men who had talked Mr. Carnegie into giving his approval to the purchase of the cranes sat up nights trying to find a way to make them travel, and incidentally wondering what would happen to them if they did not discover the way.

While these lieutenants were thus occupied an unostentatious chemist in the Edgar Thompson works, who has recently come from Germany, spent his spare time in making a mysterious set of plans. When he had finished, he rolled up his work, placed it under his arm, went to Mr. Carnegie's office, and sought admission.

"Mr. Carnegie," he said, after he had introduced himself, "I can make the electric cranes go."

Mr. Carnegie looked at his visitor in astonishment.

"You make them go!" he said, incredulously. "Do you know that the best electrical experts in America can't make them go?"

"I do," was the reply, "but I make them go, just the same."

"Then tell me how," said Mr. Carnegie, impressed by his employe's earnestness.

With that the little chemist, who had not been given credit for knowing anything beyond the range of his tar and tubes, unfolded his blueprint plans and started to explain his scheme. Before he had got fairly started it was evident to Mr. Carnegie that the German had hit upon a right idea. He turned to his desk while the man kept up his story with the English language, he [laid] out this order:

"Mr. ——— is to have any material and any men that he deems proper at his disposal until further notice."

"Take that," he said, as he handed the paper to the German and broke off the interview; "and if you make the cranes go I shall be pleased."

A month later the chemist again obtained an audience with Mr. Carnegie.

"They are working," he said.

To-day the man is living in Germany, where he is running a vineyard. He bought it with part of the $250,000—the cost of the cranes—that Mr. Carnegie allotted him of the stock of the Steel company.—Boston Post.

Working Off a Grouch

John was grouchy and cross and found fault with his dinner. His wife surveyed him calmly.

"I know there is some reason for your—your—what shall I call it? Well, for your unhappy frame of mind," she said. "Probably things have gone wrong at the office, but why should you come home to work off your anger on me? I'm not to blame in the slightest. It's a curious trait of human nature that when one has been whipped he at once wants to turn around and whip somebody else."

"I suppose that trait was left out of your nature," remarked John sarcastically.

"No, indeed," replied his wife. "When things go wrong in the kitchen I am rather inclined to scold the children. If you reprimand me for extravagance my impulse is to fuss with the first person I meet. If I have been out calling and return home late to dinner I feel very much inclined to rate you for coming home so early. I've watched the same trait in children. When I scold Alice she always finds occasion to shake Maud on the sly. If you spank Jim he generally goes out and makes faces at the little girl across the way. If the children come home from school saying 'teacher was awful cross to-day,' I jump to the conclusion that the principal has been criticising the teacher. If you tell me I'm not economical I know you have just suffered from a slump in the stock market, and I suppose after you and I have had a little heated discussion you go down to the office and make things unpleasant for the clerks."

"To be frank with you, Mary," said John, "I do not often find you guilty of working off a grouch on me. Tell me what you do instead."

Mary smiled demurely. "I wait until you go out of the house, then I run for my room, lock the door, throw myself on the couch, burrow my head in the pillow and have a good cry."

Big Cannon of the Turks

Mahommet II. is stated to have used at the siege of Constantinople, in 1453, cannon of an immense caliber, and stone shot.

When Sir J. Duckworth passed the Dardanelles to attack Constantinople, in 1807, his fleet was dreadfully shattered by the immense shot thrown from the batteries. The Royal George (of 110 guns) was nearly sunk by only one shot, which carried away her cutwater, and another cut the mainmast of the Windsor Castle nearly in two; a shot knocked two ports of the Thunderer into one; the Repulse (74) had her wheel shot away and twenty-four men killed and wounded by a single shot, nor was the ship saved but by the most wonderful exertions.

The heaviest shot, which struck our ships was of granite, and weighed 800 pounds, and was 2 feet 2 inches in diameter. One of these huge shots stove in the whole larboard bow of the Active; and having thus crashed this immense mass of timber, the shot rolled ponderously aft and brought up abreast of the main hatchway, the crew standing aghast at the singular spectacle.

One of these guns was cast in brass in the reign of Amurath; it was composed of two parts, joined by a screw at the chamber, its breech resting against massive stone work. The difficulty of charging it would not allow of its being fired more than once; but as a pasha said, "that single discharge would destroy almost a whole fleet of an enemy."

The Baron de Trott, to the great terror of the Turks, resolved to fire this gun. The shot weighed 1,100 pounds, and he loaded it with 330 pounds of powder. He says: "I felt a shock like an earthquake at a distance of 800 fathoms. I saw the ball divide into three pieces, and these fragments of rock crossed the strait and rebounded on the mountain."—London Mirror.

FOR SUNDAY

LESSON BY THE REV. [DR.] GODDELL.

Good With Doubt—Do Right With It. Only Continue to Want the Light You Need It Free You.

Sunday morning, in [the] E. Church, the Rev. [Dr.] Goodell preached on "A Doubt." The text was [John] 7: 16, "And I have known canst make interpret[ers] solve doubts." Dr [Goodell] said:

We to-day, with his [faculties] unimpaired and [mind] be the busiest and yet ours is no [better] than any other [age]. There was infidelity [and] in our universities [and] ism among educated [men] now quite outgrown. [It] ain true that every [man] its own doubts, [and] de up of the indi[vi]questions of the soul [of] s. They must be [fought] most part by indistruggle. There are [many] receive greater em[phasis] given time. In one [age] hilosophy seems to [be] nosticism is at the [moment] now passing has [been] battles of evolution [and] that its theory is [true] the Christian faith, [and] battles on the field [of] Positions once held [as] s have been proven [to] odox party by giv[en] it be defended has [been] nger than ever be[fore].

I wish to refer and [not] to scatter as speci[fic] not so much of the [theo]actical sort. They [are] ke stout men weak, [and] upward movements [of] nerve of personal [life].

unresponsable that [we] s. We begin life [as] e journey in the [dark] t every step. We [are] nent and question. [Ma]erial brought from [the] d the structure [of] ee, and in doing [so] hich masters us. It [is] life has become a [bur]nt, and our journ[ey]ery. We sail into [the] One is a fair har[bor] another a stretch [of] nd we are fortu[nate] again to sea; while [on] the mouth of a [har]de we go to glor[ious] electable country, [we] cannot stop his [ears] mocked by it and [are] some adventurous [one] climb he must [go] st.

little thing to do, [and] a great thing to [do]

" that we are driv[en] oo short to know [the] ered at that our [Lord] ves chiefly with [the] e very nature of [the] supernatural. It [is] o, as beyond, our [ken] e not like the ax[iom] he whole field of [the] lm of the senses [and] herefore, it is to [be] all when we find [a] ation and doubt [in]

There is another fact to be considered which Horace Bushnell states admirably: 'Our faculty is itself in disorder. A broken or bent telescope will not see anything rightly. So a mind wrenched from its true lines of action, discolored and smirched by evil, will not see truly; but will put a blurred, misshapen look on everything. Truths will only be as good as errors and doubts as natural as they."

In view of all this, let us have done with abusing those who doubt. Doubt properly pursued is only knowledge in the raw, and Dr. Parks was right when he said: "Infidelity is the ultimate result of checking the desire for expanded knowledge." Let us frankly tell our young people that doubt is not a final condition save to a dishonest mind. Through the doubt of to-day they will come to the knowledge of to-morrow, and let us also remind them that what they hold as the truth to-morrow should have great expansive power, so that coming days will give more light and add to the proportions of the truth.

"I have heard of thee that thou canst make interpretations and dissolve doubts," was the King's greeting to the Hebrew. This same Daniel had stood before the King's father when he, too, was sore burdened with mystery. He did not claim for his own unaided wisdom the power to settle doubts, but stoutly and honestly owned the source of his power, saying: "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets." It may be said truthfully that the only sure method for the solution of life's problems and the dissolving of its doubts is by entering into right relations with Him. If it is objected that one of the great doubts of life relates to His very existence the answer is, Every man is conscious of the great ethical imperative, I ought. This relates him to some great law, and hence to some great law giver. It would not seem to be a very exalted prayer, "Oh God, if there be a God, enlighten my soul, if I have a soul," and yet even a prayer like that, with an honest purpose to follow each faintest ray of light, would not be unavailing.

In the matter of dissolving religious doubts, the ultimate purpose is everything. No man ever comes to the truth by being simply curious. Speculation for speculation's sake leads nowhere. The mind is filled with conflicting arguments. It is a poor cause which has not something plausible about it, and so the mind chases itself from sophistry to sophistry, from controversy to controversy, darkening counsel and coming out nowhere.

The first thing for an honest seeker after truth to do is to pledge himself to abide by the truth as he finds it. To play fast and loose with one's convictions is the first and second death. To fail to use the light we have to refuse to live up to that we know is right, is to put one's self into the darkness of eternal doubt. Plato was right when he said: "Atheism is a disease of the soul before it becomes an error of the understanding." French atheism was a foregone conclusion when one considers the condition of French morals. Why should a man believe in God when his life was one long rebelling against Him? Why should he not cry "after us the deluge" when conscious that nothing but an unfathomable sea could cover the putrefaction of his life? When a man has made up his mind to give himself to the sensual and the material, it is a hollow mockery for him to profess a desire to know the truth. The truth abides with no man who will not [obey]. On the other hand, if he be [honest] of heart and [purpose] memory of William Wo[rds]worth philosopher and poet, w[hose] gift and calling of A.mig[hty] he discoursed on man or [nature] to lift up the heart to [God] not of maintaining the [truth] and simple and so in p[oetry] raised up to the chief mas[ter] of noblest poesy, but of lofty and sacred truth."

Before you seek any further for the dissolving of your doubts ask yourself honestly the question: "Am I altogether given over to sight and sense? Am I ready to obey the voice within me as steadfastly as Socrates obeyed his daemon, though it should cross my plans and bring bitter losses?"

It will be easy to believe in myself when we have learned enough to [know] Who dwells [in] the [heart] of God to give ours [the] perfect [life] eternal.

One [of] the [things] we must [learn] is the [secret] of [prayer]. Do you [ever] go God's [throne] with [your] doubts? Do you [ever] when [you] matter is [settled] who never [doubts] you ever [have] ten. You [have] er God talks [to] pew for years [and] you've [heard] without [a] great [deal] of the Christian [faith] you have [not] you find [yourself] ty. Why is [it] with you? [Is] be [that] yours [is] a [struggle] of [faith] the trouble [is] thing to [do] [with] no Bethel [in] his life, no [one] has faced God and [said] [anoth]will" to the [Divine] and his Peace [is] [with] ley his Will [as] ing to the [goodness] of [God] is a story [told] of a [certain] one of the [disciples] who [had] His reasoning [was] never to be [lost]."

Do not be [content] with [doubts] only be sure that [you] the light you [have] but what we are [doing] stand, but whence we [came] we go—these are the [questions] which we should be concerned.

The fruit of the tree of faith [must] be plucked too soon and it is then valueless. It takes a full season to ripen the best of nature's products, and there are some things in faith which only years and frost and storm will bring to maturity.

It has been said that one of the greatest talents in religious discovery is the finding how to hang up questions without being anxious about them. Look at them now and then as they hang and by and by, when you turn some corner of thought, you will be delighted and astonished to see how quietly and easily they open their secret and let you in. I know a great teacher of mathematics who always kept some hard problems by him. He would work on one awhile and put it back in his pocket still incomplete. After weeks or months the problem would be solved and another take its place in his thought. There are many who say with easy assurance: "Lord, I believe," but they have never thought enough to have any doubts. They have no sympathy with those who die for a man or a cause. They could believe anything that seemed to be necessary for a good position in society and a comfortable income. The man who is honest must adjourn some of his questions and not be impatient. I expect to carry some of my questions with me into that larger life toward which all men move, but that fact does not trouble me. Some things I have settled and others can wait until the day when all mystery shall be made clear.

One of my parishioners some years ago taught me a great lesson. She was a lady of culture and refinement. She had been at the head of a great school for many years. Her eyesight at last failed her and she became totally blind. I saw her at the close of a service feeling her way up the aisle from pew to pew, that she might shake hands with me. The thought of her great suffering and loss overwhelmed me and I said with tears as I clasped her hand: "It will be yonder and you will know why God permitted this great affliction in your life." She lifted a face radiant by ineffable peace and said: "I am so happy as to get to heaven, I count all sorrows gones be bygones and shall not trouble the Lord for any explanations." Such a spirit like that, whatever doubts [may] can wait.

Remember finally that there are a few things that are absolutely vital to Christian faith. Be sure that you have them, whatever the price demanded may be. Do not try to make a backdoor, safe and pleasant course. That is sinful mocking of the truth. But when settled the great problems be assured you need not be greatly troubled by the lesser ones. Men have set up questions which God never ordained.

We have multiplied dogmas and doctrines to the confusion of the mind and fear to the loss of the soul. What if all men have forgotten that right is more important than right views? We have burned heretics to get rid of heresy, and have banished good men because they disagreed with them. Patience with other men that they may have patience with you. Let your life mend your creed. Right opinions will avail us no more than they avail the devils and his angels unless we hold them in the golden chalice of a pure and honest heart. The great truths of life are not simply intellectual truths and the method by which they are revealed are not chiefly intellectual. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness.

Doubt which is in moral earnest is the servant of God to bring the truth. It always preceded all great reforms in the individual and in the community. A faith which has been forged out through the agony and heat of doubt is the only kind that ever comes an anchor to the soul. It is what is going through the fiery furnace to come out "like the form of the Fourth."

The conviction which honest doubt leads to is the conviction which has all the world. Do not scorn any man, and [doubt] of all the truth he holds. Keep the purity of your mind. Think honestly, seriously, for life's questions are solemn questions.

Do not be obstinate and refuse to open to new truth which contradicts some position you once held. Above all things, realize that the truth is the only thing that can make you free from an evil life. The verdict of the ages and the verdict of the facts is that the truth is to be sought in a personality and not in a theory, and no one has arisen to dispute His words who said "I am the truth." It is to Him that we all come. Well may you say with Thomas, "I have heard of Thee that Thou canst make interpretations and dissolve doubts."

What Better?

It is not, of course, the highest [motive] for Christianity, but it is always well to ask one who is refusing Christ as substitute he has for Him. Upon what is he relying to escape from His sin? What sure comfort has he for his sorrow? What evidence has he of immortality? What has he gained certainty as to the character of God? What unholds and inspires his work in the world? Where does he get power to conquer temptation? [Where] can he be made [strong]

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUAR. 5TH.

Practically the entire session of the senate was devoted to a speech by Mr. Lodge on the isthmian situation. He discussed the abstract question of the right of the president to recognize the independence of a new nation, and concluded that such a prerogative pertains exclusively to the office of the chief executive.

He also contended that there had been a general expectation of an uprising on the Isthmus and the failure of the Panama people to do so did not relieve the president of the necessity of action. He declared that the president could not have done less than inform himself of the prospect. Mr. Lodge argued that our intervention in Panama had been only in the interest of peace and contended that the president had not gone a step beyond what the proprieties called for.

Senator Gorman introduced a resolution that the president be requested if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest to inform the senate of the circumstances under which the United States intervened with a military force in the internal affairs of New Grenada or Colombia and of kindred matters. Mr. Hale introduced a resolution requiring the commissioners of the District of Columbia to report the conditions of theaters in Washington. It was agreed to without debate.

The privileged resolution proposed by Mr. Hale, of Virginia, providing for an investigation of certain statements in the Bristow postoffice report reflecting on the membership of the house, was referred.

The naval appropriation bill was taken up by the house committee on naval affairs. Rear Admiral Taylor, chief of the bureau of navigation, urged that 30,000 additional enlisted men be provided for the navy, this number being necessary to man the new naval ships. He added that on account of the new system of target practice invented by Lieutenant Sims, the efficiency of the men behind the guns had been greatly increased during the past year.

JANUARY 6TH.

When the senate met Wednesday Mr. Morgan's resolution declaring that the president has no power to declare war was read, but at his request it went over for the day.

Alleged irregularities in the postoffice department constituted the only theme for discussion. The question came up on a motion first made by Mr. Lodge, and afterwards by Mr. Penrose to refer the Carmack resolution looking to a senatorial investigation of the postoffice department to the committee on postoffices and postroads.

The democratic members resisted the motion and contended that the country would not be satisned with an investigation of a department made by the department itself.

An agreement was reached to postpone further discussion until Friday night, and at 2:45 p. m. the senate adjourned.

The only measure considered in the house was a bill introduced by the delegate from Hawaii to ratify an act of the Hawaiian legislature authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power on the island of Oahu, territory of Hawaii. Owing to the objection made to the bill in the form presented, it was recommitted to the committee on territories and the house at 2:15 adjourned.

JANUARY 7TH.

Mr. Morgan occupied the time of the senate in a reply to the speech of Mr. Lodge, delivered Tuesday. Mr. Morgan again criticised the president and the attitude of this government in connection with the Panama republic. He introduced numerous newspaper extracts to bear out his contention that the revolution was assisted by officers and citizens of the United States.

Mr. Morgan said that if the United States should withdraw from the isthmus Colombia would quickly drive out the few revolutionists and their supporters.

Mr. Morgan in opening said he proposed to have the ayes and nays on various propositons advanced in his resolution; that the debate on the resolution had not controverted any of these propositions, nor had the debate been directed to any question touching upon the merits of the resolution.

The senate in executive session ordered the printing of the testimonial introduced before the military affairs committee in the investigation of charges against the confirmation of Brigadier General Wood to be major general. The brief made by Senator Foraker, setting forth the views of the majority, also will be printed.

The senate decided not to make the documents public.

Senator Fairbanks presented to the senate the favorable report of the committee on foreign relatons on the extradition treaty between the United States and The Netherlands.

The house was in session but twenty minutes. Mr. Hemenway, chairman of the committee on appropriations, obtained unanimous consent that one hour be devoted at the opening of tomorrow's session to the consideration of a bill amending the act appropriating $500,000 for the eradication of foot and mouth disease among cattle, so as to make $250,000 of that amount available to meet the emergency caused by the Mexican boll weevil. The bill was favorably reported today.

JANUARY 8TH.

Alleged postoffice frauds were under discussion in the senate, the subject being opened by a set speech by Mr. Simmons, of North Carolina, who insisted there should be an investigation by the senate into the charges. Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, denied that the republicans were trying to cover up any wrong in the postoffice department.

The republican contention was that there had been a thorough investigation by the postoffice department, and that a senate investigation was now being pressed by the democrats for partisan purposes. The democrats insisted that there were facts and charges that the republicans were trying to smother.

The senate adjourned until Monday.

When the senate met Mr. Scott, of West Virginia, offered a joint resolution providing for an investigation of the Darien canal route. He made a brief speech in support of the proposition for a sea level canal, stating that such a waterway would be only thirty miles in length.

The house made available the sum of $250,000 to be used to meet the emergency caused by the ravages of the cotton boll weevil and other insects, and diseases affecting cotton. The measure was adopted without division, meeting general support. The sum is to be diverted from the half million dollars appropriated last year to eradicate the foot disease among cattle.

One hundred and fifteen bills were passed in twenty minutes.

TESTIMONY ABOUT GEN. WOOD.

Gen. Wilson Says He Was Not At San Juan.

Testimony offered in the hearings before the senate committee on military affairs concerning the nomination of Brigader General Leonard Wood to be made major general has been furnished to all the senators. The document is of 893 printed pages.

General Wilson stated that General Wood was not at the battle of San Juan and told the committee that he had informed the president, then governor of New York, of this fact. This evidence was refuted by Secretary Root who stated that Gen. Wood not only was at the battle of San Juan, but that his division commander had reported him for conspicuous bravery, and for handling his troops so well that he desired to recommend him for promotion. The secretary further said that Gen. Wood was at the "Bloody Ford" in the hottest and heaviest fire that our men had to endure, where the men were falling all around them.

General Reyes Will Return.

Gen. Rafael Reyes, the Colombian agent's, determination to depart from Washington is understood to have been caused by a sharp exchange of correspondence between him and Secretary of State Hay.

Reyes, being unable to accomplish anything for his government, wrote Hay on Friday asking that his correspondence be made public, with that of the secretary. The letter was not worded very diplomatically and is said to have offended Hay, who replied in a curt note to the Colombian.

Reyes, therefore, cabled his government that he had failed to bring about any change in the situation and would return as soon as his health would permit. It is thought probable that the Colombian government will now start its troops for Panama and attempt to win back the seceding state.

Preparing for Business.

Between four and five hundred men have been working double time since the Ensley, Ala., steel plant closed down. The open-hearth furnaces have been renovated from bottom to top. New connecting pipes have also been installed in the producers. The new mixing machine that is building in the plant is expected to facilitate the manufacturing of steel. The Tennessee company is the first in the south to adopt this mixing machine. Its special feature is that it will diminish the quantity of scrap iron in making steel.

Hon. W. J. Bryan has returned from Europe.

Tom Armour Killed.

An attempt at arrest of both Tom and Harrison Armour was made in a house near Boaz, where the men were at breakfast. Tom jumped behind a chimney corner and opened fire on the officers, who riddled him with buckshot. During the melee Harrison escaped. He was tracked for three miles, but not overtaken.

Tom Armour, wanted on a charge of killing William Little at Morris, Ala., several months ago, was killed at Boaz Monday afternoon by a deputy sheriff who was attempting to arrest him. Warrants for Harrison and Tom Armour, charged with the murder of Little, have been out for some time and rewards of $250 for the capture of either of the men were offered.

The sale of the foundry plant of the Bates Metal company, of Birmingham, Ala., to the Ajax company of Philadelphia for $72,169 has resulted in a confusion of reports concerning an alleged leakage from the storekeeping department of the Southern railway. No such shortage exists, it is claimed.

Santos Dumont has arrived in the United States and will contest for the world's fair prize of $100,000 for an air ship.

Admiral Evans, who commands the Asiatic squadron, has been ordered from Guam to the Philippines. The official explanation is that the step is taken in order that the absence of the American war ships from northern Asiatic waters may serve as evidence of the strict neutrality of the United States in any conflict between Russia and Japan.

Cuban Senate.

On Monday the Cuban senate, after cleaning up legislative business and being in readiness to adjourn until spring, rushed the ratification of the so-called parliament treaty with the United States. There was no debate and the vote was taken by a show of hands.

The treaty includes all the provisions of the Platt amendment verbatim. This was the proposition of the Cuban government made because of the desire to eventually eliminate the amendment from the legislation and so remove the cause of the constant criticism of the makers of the constitution for accepting such an amendment from the United States.

AN EVENTFUL YEAR

In Railroad History: 5,700 Miles of New Track.

Complete statistics show the year just closed to have been an eventful one in the history of American railroads. During 1901 and 1902 railroad mergers had been carried through on an unprecedented scale. The result was that in the matter of railroad consolidations 1903 proved a far less important year than either 1901 or 1902.

About 5,700 miles of new railroad were construucted in the United States in 1903 or about 175 more than was built in 1902. Most of the new milage represented extensions and new branches. If the extension of the Wabash into Pittsburg is excepted there was no parallel railroad building during the year. The most important single piece of work accomplished was the Southern Pacific 40-mile cut-off across Great Salt Lake.

Never in the career of railroads were rates better maintained than in 1903. The railroads in every section of the country had all the traffic they could possibly handle and there was no incentive to the cutting of rates.

In the matter of gross receipts the railroads broke all previous records in 1903, Having made an increase of something like $150,000,000 over the figures of 1902. In the matter of net earnings, however, the roads did not make quite so favorable a showing. The increase in wages and the increase in the cost of practically all materials that enter into operation and maintenance increasedd operating expenses heavily and reduced net earnings.

In a financial way the Pennsylvania far outstripped all the other roads. Early in the year it sold $75,000,000 of new stock for $90,000,000. This was followed by the sale of over $100,000,000 of stocks and bonds on the subsidiary properties.

John Kopman, the Birmingham boy who was hurt by being shot about Christmas time by a little girl in a tussle for the possession of a gun, and who was supposed to have been fatally hurt, is now said by his physicians to be on the road to recovery.

The city council of Bessemer, Ala., have decided to issue $35,000 in bonds to build school houses.

Blanche Bois, a follower of Carrie Nation, with an ax smashed the large picture of "Custer's Last Charge" hanging in the state capitol at Topeka, Kans., last Saturday. Her objection was that under the picture was a line explaining that the painting had been donated by a beer firm. Miss Bois was arrested and taken to jail.

A canning factory for molasses is to be started at Collins, Miss.

The commerce of the Hawaiian Islands for 1903 is given at 26 million dollars of exports and 14 million of imports. On imports, over 10 million dollars is stated as from the United States.

Gen. George Gillespie, who has been since May 1st, 1901, chief of engineers, succeeded Gen. Chaffee as assistant chief of staff with the rank of major general. This is the first time that an engineer officer has been in the line of supreme command of the army in eighty years.

Chas. Scott, president of the Interstate Mississippi River Improvement and Levee association, has appointed a committee with Governor Heard of Louisiana as chairman to prepare a memorial for congress.

Representative Wiley, of Alabama, says that he thinks Senator Morgan is wrong in opposing the Panama canal treaty.

A mimic naval warfare is to be part of the practice off Pensacola by the vessels assembled there.

Nine miles of the Alabama Central railway between Booth station on the Mobile and Ohio railroad and Autugaville have been graded. This line goes through a pine and hardwood section.

Work will soon commence on the $150,000 federal building at Anniston, Alabama.

Election Trouble.

The climax to a sensational municipal election at Memphis, Tenn., came when twenty-five men broke into the ninth ward polling place, where the count was in progress, with drawn revolvers and began firing.

During the excitement the lights were extinguished, the ballot box seized, burst open and the ballots burned.

One man was shot in the hand and a stray bullet struck another man, inflicting a slight wound.

Maryland has 60,000 negroes 25,000 of whom are said to be illiterate.

20,000 STAR ROUTES

Postal Service Shows Large Increase in 1903.

Postmaster General H. C. Payne has submitted his annual report, which is in part as follows:

Ordinary postal revenue, 1902, $119,958,229.40; 1903, $131,984,535.

Receipts from money order business, 1902, $1,889,817.86; 1903, $2,239,908.24.

Total receipts from all sources, 1902, $121,848,047.26; 1903, $134,224,443.24.

Total expenditures for the year 1902, $124,785,697.07; 1903, $138,784,487.97.

Excess of expenditures over receipts, 1902, $2,937,649.81; 1903, $4,560,044.73.

An increase in the deficit over the previous year of $1,622,394.92, which is, however, $1,042,183 less than the estimated deficit for the year.

At the close of the last fiscal year there were 20,613 star routes, the length of which was 249,364 miles, and the cost $6,614,999.95 per annum.

In Hawaii there were ninety-one routes, aggregating 14,770 miles in length, costing $96,243.38 per annum.

In Porto Rico at the close of last year there were forty-nine routes of all kinds, the total length of which was 3,498 miles, at a cost of $80,203.03.

The demand for stamps in book form continues very large, the increase in the number issued last year being 2,735,966 books, 38.58 per cent over the previous year.

There were 4,462 postoffices discontinued during the year, being 403 more than during the preceding year.

The principal cause for the large increase in the number of postoffices discontinued has been the extension of the rural free delivery service, which resulted in the discontinuance of 2,163 postoffices during the year, the salaries of postmasters of said offices aggregating $121,332.

On June 30, 1903, at the close of the fiscal year, there were 74,169 postoffices in the United States.

Anent the investigation of postoffice affairs the report concludes:

"The investigation has resulted in a complete reorganization of some of the bureaus of the department, and it is hoped has eradicated all dishonest, irregular and criminal practices which the investigation has developed as having been in existence for several years.

"I can not too strongly commend the zeal, vigor and fidelity which has been shown by the fourth assistant postmaster general, who has been in immediate charge, and the inspectors who have been detailed to assist him in the investigation."

The vanguard of the Italian colony which is to be located near Mobile, Ala., has arrived. A tract of land comprising 6,700 acres is to be settled. Bee culture and dairying will be the principal industries.

C. C. Buchannan, of Pulaski, Tenn., was accidently shot at Birmingham by the dropping of a pistol. The wound is serious but not fatal.

J. M. Ragan is confirmed as postmaster at Anniston, Ala.

After several months' idleness over 4,000 men have returned to wor at the South Sharan, Pa. mills.

T. D. Kline, general manager of the Central of Georgia, died Sunday morning very suddenly.

Examination has been completed of the books of the agricultural schools at Evergreen, Sylacauga, Abbeville and Jackson and they are pronounced correct.

Senator W. I. Bullock, of Russellville, Ala., died Sunday in a Memphis, Tenn., hospital.

James Thomas, aged 29, a trimmer employed by the Knoxville, Tenn., Electric Light and Power company, was instantly killed while trimming a street lamp.

The Tradesman's twenty-fifth annual number is a magazine of 268 pages and full of industrial news and data.

After retiring from office Governor Longino, of Mississippi, will resuume law practice at Greenville, Miss., and also devote considerable time to looking after his planting interests in the delta.

The Stickland Machine company has secured rom Tuscaloosa, Ala., a twenty-eight year lease on several acres of land where they will erect at an early date a well equipped machine and foundry plant.

M. J. Coniff, who was murderously assaulted at Bessemer Thursday night, died Saturday from his wounds.

Reports are current of a smoking volcano in Kentucky.

...TY IN JEWELRY

...AMENTS WHICH ARE VERITABLE WORKS OF ART.

Oddity and Originality Are the Things Most Sought For—Every Form of Design Employed for Picturesque Adornments.

The arts and crafts movement has had a marked influence upon fashionable jewelry, and the shops to-day are supplying ornaments, in metals, enamels and semi-precious stones, which are veritable works of art.

Oddity, originality, beauty of workmanship, rather than intrinsic value are the things sought in the so-called nouveau art jewelry, and while some of the results of the movement are merely bizarre and hideous, more are exceedingly beautiful. Not every woman can afford a buckle, a pendant, a clasp, a chain wrought by Salique, or even by one of the lesser masters of the art, but at least one can to-day find, for a comparatively moderate sum, jewelry that is artistically lovely.

The Celtic jewelry—so named because for inspiration its originators resorted to the carvings upon the roadside crosses and monuments found wherever the Celts have passed—is charming in form and coloring. The illuminated missals and Bibles of early days, also, have furnished designs and suggestions for these ornaments, and the semi-precious stones have been united with the varying shades of metals into beautiful color schemes.

The flattened and twisted dull silver and gold bands of the settings hold cabochon stones, dull pink; or green tourmalines, now in high favor; turquoise matrix, Mexican fire opals or opal matrix, beryls, amethyst, peridot, chrysoprase.

Hatpins, necklets, pendants, brooches, buckles, girdles, etc., are made in these Celtic forms. Outside of the Celtic class are hundreds of odd and beautiful designs carried out in the same fine metal work and semi-precious stones.

Flowers, fruits, conventional scrolls, insects and everything else holding lines of beauty have been called upon to furnish ideas for this new jewelry, and the exquisite transparent enamels are used to carry out color harmonies where stones fail.

Upon large and somewhat barbaric pendants fastened to short chains made of very large flat links of dull metal, and meant to be worn outside of the high-necked frocks, the designers seem to have lavished some of their most original and effective ideas, and though these ornaments are a passing fad, they are really beautiful, and when not of solid gold or silver are not too expensive to be bought, even though they may be worn for one season only.

At one of the stores where is to be found a particularly choice collection of the nouveau art jewels in inexpensive quality is one of these chains with pendants which, though costing only $15, has actual art value. The great links of the chain are of dull greenish yellow gold, far from sterling standard, but quite as effective as the real thing.

The pendant takes the form of a large butterfly, or, to speak more accurately, suggests the form of a butterfly, the body being formed by a remarkably well-modeled and graceful feminine figure lightly draped. The upper line of the wings is made by the extended arms of the figure, and the extended draperies falling lightly from these curving arms form the wings.

The figure is wrought in dull gold shades, from palest greenish yellow to dark brownish green, and the drapery, or wings, is of transparent enamel in delicate green lightly veined by threads of the metal.

But description is hopeless. One must see the new jewelry to understand.—New York Sun.

MAN HAS PIG'S SKIN.

Doctor Grafts 225 Inches of Porker's Cuticle on Patient.

Dr. Hamilton Browning, teacher of clinical surgery in the University of Virginia hospital, has succeeded in grafting the skin of a two months old pig upon a large surface of one of the patients under his charge.

As a general rule, grafting is made by taking the skin from the body of the person upon whom the graft is to be made, or from the bodies of the generous persons who are not afraid of a little pain. Dr. Browning, however, could use neither of these methods, as the surface to be grafted covered 225 square inches of area on the thigh of the young man patient, who had been injured in a railway accident.

Two weeks elapsed before the wound was ready for the operation. The treatment to which the pig was subjected was thorough if no more. First the animal was shaved and washed with warm water and green soap. Then it was rewashed in the same way and a thick coat of the green soap was allowed to remain upon it for four hours. Next it was given another thorough scrubbing with green soap and alcohol. After this its body was inclosed with a strong bichloride of mercury poultice, which was left on for ten hours.

On the day the grafting began the pig was chloroformed and thin shavings of skin were taken from it and gently pressed upon the patient's wound by a nurse. The whole operation required several days, but the result was perfect. Within a few months the young man had a whole skin, had passed a rigid examination for life insurance and had resumed his work.

Animal Lays Eggs.

"Echidna hystrix," a quaint little creature from New Zealand, is one of the exceptions to the animal rule, as it lays eggs. These are carried in a pouch, where in due time they are hatched by the heat of the parent's body.

Music Taught by 'Phone.

A pupil of a Utica cornet player, who lived many miles from that city, broke his leg and was unable to leave his home. The teacher determined that he would give his pupil in town his usual lessons and proceeded to transmit his musical instruction over the telephone. The experiment worked most satisfactorily, the notes of the cornets of both instructor and pupil were heard distinctly at the receiving end, and whatever verbal suggestions the professor had to make were sent, of course, just as readily over the wire.

Forced Into Happiness.

Seymour, Conn., has a bachelors' club, the members of which draw lots once a year to see who will get married, and the one getting the red ticket must marry within a year or pay the wedding expenses of the next victim. Recently W. F. Kerstin was chosen as the unwilling sacrifice, and all the members of the club thought he would refuse to pay the penalty, but a few days ago he disappeared and now announcements of his wedding at Madison, N. Y., have been received by his friends.

Oldest Horse in Maine.

Penobscot county claims the oldest horse in Maine, if not in the country. His name is "Tommy Foskett." He is 42 years old, and there is no question about his age.

Healthy and Active at 92.

Mrs. Abigail M. Webster of North Sandwich, N. H., is 92 years of age and so active that she recently walked two miles to visit her great-granddaughter.

KNOWS NAUGHT OF KISSES.

Thirty-two-Year-Old Massachusetts Man Has Unique Record.

In North Scituate, Mass., Alfred Herbert Mott has lived for thirty-five years and never yet has succumbed to the seductions of the red, ripe, cranberry-colored lips of Cape Cod maidens, he says.

He believes he has received a divine mission and has decorated his lawn and house with inspiring messages, by means of which he hopes to lead the wayward to see light. As yet, however, he has not succeeded in gathering around him a congregation, for the hard-headed Cape Cod residents are not easily gulled.

There is a dim suspicion in the minds of some that the new prophet is making a virtue of necessity, for one of his texts reads:

"Whosoever findeth a wife, findeth a good thing."

By which it would appear that opportunity is all the young prophet requires.

His father, Otis Mott, with whom he lives alone, has not adopted his ways of thinking. The old man, hale and hearty at 84, has had a varied matrimonial experience. He has outlived four wives.

THREATEN GRAVE OF DRAKE.

Proposal to Disinter Remains of Author of "The American Flag."

The little graveyard at Hunt's Point, on the Westchester shore of Long Island Sound, New York, lies directly in the line of two streets which it is proposed to cut through the old Hunt estate as a means for throwing open the property for building purposes. In this cemetery are buried many members of the Hunt and Tillou families, whose descendants have owned all the land on the point and most of that on the neck until within a few years; and there also is buried Joseph Rodman Drake, author of "The American Flag." It has been suggested that Drake's body be disinterred and laid beside that of Fitz Greene Halleck, his bosom friend and literary contemporary, at Guilford, Conn.

The people of The Bronx who live in that vicinity are much opposed to the plan for removing the poet's bones.

Railroad Ties of Leather.

The invention of a leather crosstie, designed to take the place of sleepers made of wood, is attracting attention in railroad circles.

F. W. Dunnell of West Warren, Mass., is the inventor. In the manufacture of his crosstie, which weighs 125 pounds, the scrap leather from shoe shops is taken into a disintegrator, ground fine, subjected to a refining process and molded.

The tension of the molding machine can be so regulated that ties hard enough to take a spike or ties through which a spike cannot be driven can be turned out.

Good Market for Ferns.

The industry of picking ferns in New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and shipping them to the Boston market has grown wonderfully. The ferns command one cent a stock there, and are used in thousands by the leading florists. The demand is always ahead of the supply, and for this reason many families who have ferns on their farms and pasture lands have a market always awaiting them.

Hunting for the Interesting Part.

"What on earth do you find interesting in that stupid book?" her friend asked.

"I haven't found anything worth while in it so far," the beautiful girl replied, "but after mamma had read it she tried to hide it from me."

Acreage of Sisal Hemp.

Not more than 350 square miles of territory is under cultivation in henequin or sisal hemp, yet on this small area is produced the fiber that literally binds the wheat harvests of the world. It is used alike in Minnesota and Argentina, in Siberia and Egypt.

"Beyond the Hills."

"I can hear the drums as the army comes
From beyond the hills," he said.
And he leaned and smiled like a happy child
As he shook his snowy head.
And he clutched his cane while the far refrain
Came in murmurs to his ears.
But they whispered low: "He has dreamed it so.
And it is no drum he hears."

"I can hear the fife as it leaps with life,
And the drums roll madly, too,"
Was the old man's sigh, as with kindling eye
He would hum the warsongs through.
"It is Jimmy Shea—that is how he'd play
When the road was hard and long;
And it's Billy's drum that is calling, 'Come!'
As it keeps time with the song."

And his fingers slim beat a tattoo grim
On the stout arm of the chair,
While his lips grew stern and his eyes would burn
With the fire that once was there.
"O, the bugle call, and the drums and all!"
He would say. "Their music fills
All the night and day; I can hear them play
In the march beyond the hills."

"I can hear the drums, and the army comes
From beyond the hills," he said.
With his eyes aglow he saluted slow
And he touched his snowy head.
Then his eyes were closed as if he but dozed,
And his day of days had dawned,
For the low drum beat had allured his feet
To the hills—and far beyond.

Thrifty Woman.

In order to save 28 cents an Italian woman of Ashland Heights, West Manayunk, Pa., carried a 100-pound bale of hay, a bag containing two bushels of oats and a 24-pound sack of flour in two trips from a Manayunk flour and feed store to her home, more than a mile away, chiefly up a steep hill.

On the first trip she placed the bale of hay on her head and walked off. On the second trip she placed the bag of oats on her head and carried the sack of flour under her left arm. Her husband owns a horse and cart, but was too busy doing hauling to go to the store, and his wife chose to carry the feed home rather than pay 28 cents to have it delivered.

Fish "Walks" on Land.

Mr. H. C. Robinson, who has spent two years in scientific investigation in the Malay peninsula, recently exhibited to the zoological section of the British association a specimen of a fish known as the "mud hopper," which, by means of strong fins under its body, is able to move about on land for distances of at least twenty yards from its watery nests in the swamps.

Pointer on Curing Hams.

Six years ago Mr. Wildman of Keal, Eng., cured a large ham and resisted the temptation to eat it until some weeks ago. He then buried it in the ground, and after leaving it to mature for three weeks he dug it up and boiled it for twelve hours. The result is said to have been one of the tastiest hams ever eaten.

Snails as "Wild Animals."

A man in Louisville, Ky., had a barrel of snails sent to him from Italy. It was detained by the custom house officials, who could not make up their mind under what heading to levy duty. At length the owner, fearing further delay might damage the snails, offered to pay duty for them as "wild animals," and this suggestion the officials accepted.

Went Off at Wrong Time.

A ludicrous incident occurred during the last act of a play at a Biddeford (Maine) theater last week. Just when the audience was giving its closest attention to the stage, a loud pop was heard down in front. It was evident that a bottle had "gone off" in somebody's pocket, and it set everybody into a snicker.

Has Newspaper of 1800.

H. J. McNally of Burlington, Vt., has an interesting souvenir in the way of a newspaper printed Saturday, Jan. 4, 1800. The periodical, besides giving the congressional news of that time, publishes an account of the burial of George Washington.

NEW IDEA IN SUBMARIN... DA...

Calcium Carbide Supplies Gas Raise It From the Bottom.

A new use for calcium carbide is for raising and sinking a submarine boat in Germany.

The boat is supplied with an ordinary gas generator and a water tank, the upper part of which is connected with the gas reservoir of the generator. The tank and the generator have pipes at the bottom opening into the sea water. The upper parts have vertical pipes for the escape of the gas.

If the reservoirs (the tank and the reservoir of the generator) are filled with water the boat sinks. After the introduction of a carbide cartridge into the gas generator an immense quantity of gas is formed at once, which forces the water through the lower pipe into the sea. After opening the cock in the connecting pipe the gas enters the tank and fills it by forcing out the water.

The boat now rises to the surface, remaining there until the gas is allowed to escape from both reservoirs, which causes them to be again filled by sea water.

If the boat has sunk deeper than desired the introduction of a carbide cartridge into the generator will make the boat rise to the proper level. The apparatus is quite simple and works reliably, doing away with air and water pumps.—Consular Reports.

Serial Postcard.

When the postman hands one a card containing an incomprehensible fragment of a drawing the recipient is naturally mystified. This feeling is only intensified on receipt of the second of the series, and not until the third, fourth or fifth card completes the picture is the veil lifted.

Potatoes Grew Above Ground.

It is stated that scientists have produced tomatoes and potatoes on the same stalk—potatoes in the ground and the tomatoes on the vine on top. In the garden of Mrs. F. J. Ault, above Nisbet, Penn., where she had planted some "stray beauties," one of the vines, without any manipulation from the hands of scientists, was found hanging full of potatoes from the ground to the top, there being about a dozen of them, and they were as red as a tomato could be. The same stalk had also its full quota of potatoes in the ground.—New York Journal.

Carving 1,000 Years Old Found.

A remarkable piece of antique Indian carving, which must be nearly a thousand years old, was dug up in making an excavation in the center of Vancouver, B. C. The carving is of brown sandstone, and the work must have been done with a sharp piece of flint or slate. It is in two sections, one being a bowl and the other a bear's head. It was found under the decayed stump of an immense cedar tree, and may have been placed there before the tree began to grow and long before Columbus had any thought of discovering America.

Monument to Tropic of Cancer.

The Mexican National Railroad has erected a monument, with suitable inscription, marking the point where the globe is crossed by the Tropic of Cancer. This very curious picture shows the monument. It is of wood, twelve feet high and twenty-four feet long. On the top there are two arms pointing out the two zones. It is situated on desert ground a few miles south of Catorce.—New York Herald.

Cape Cod Oysters Popular.

Cape Cod oysters are gradually finding their way into the Connecticut market, where, for years, the home product has had little or no competition. A New London firm has planted 1,000 acres of oyster ground on Cape Cod.

FOLLOWED BEAR TO WEALTH.

Prospectors Have Wild Chase and End by Discovering Gold.

Two prospectors named Phillips and Buschman, while prospecting in a canyon in the San Bernardino mountains, had their camp raided by a bear, which grabbed a sack containing their supply of bacon and made off.

The men gave a chase and succeeded in wounding the animal, which dropped the bacon. Observing by the blood upon the trail that the animal was badly wounded, the men followed him.

Two miles up the canyon they came upon the beast dead. He had sought a small stream to quench his thirst, and lain down and expired.

While examining the animal one of the men caught the glitter of something in the stream. Investigation showed it to be gold. Some of the gravel was panned and yielded big returns. The men are now taking out $100 a day with the pan.—New York Herald.

A Rattlesnake in His Pillow.

Most persons will agree that a live rattlesnake would not make a very desirable pillow, and George Peck of San Bernadino, Cal., who recently actually had such an experience while on a hunting trip, does not attempt to dispute the commonly accepted opinion. Night overtook Peck in a lonely canyon several miles from his town, and he sought refuge in a rude shelter that he found there. The night being warm he removed his coat and placed it under his head.

In the morning he found that a six foot rattlesnake had crawled into one of the sleeves of the coat and had coiled up in the center of the improvised pillow. Peck killed the reptile, and now has its nineteen rattles as a memento of his unusual experience.

Lifeboat Pulpit.

In one of the seamen's missions in London a pulpit has recently been installed in exact imitation of a ship. The pulpit is built of oak and is constructed exactly like the prow of a ship. The design follows the line of the ships of the ancient Vikings. The pulpit is the gift of the commodore and officers of the flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers which are used as a schoolship at Medway, England.

Is Glad His Horse Died.

Austin Wheeler of Lee, Me., is glad that his old horse died last week, even though he had not the money to buy another. He carted the carcass of the horse down to the back pasture, intending to bury it there the next day. That afternoon he went out to shoot crows, and noticed something moving near the dead horse. He fired and killed a black fox, the pelt of which he sold to a traveling fur buyer for $150—about six times the value of the old horse in its last days of usefulness.

Wonderful Head of Hair.

An extraordinary head of hair is possessed by Mercedes Lopez, the wife of a poor sheep-herder in San Vincente, Mexico. Her height is five feet, and when she stands erect her hair trails on the ground four feet eight inches. The hair is so thick that she can completely hide herself in it. She has it cut very frequently, as it grows so quickly, enabling her to sell large tresses to hair dealers every three or four months.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUARY 14TH.

Immediately after the senate was called to order Mr. Pettus, from the committee on military affairs, reported the bill extending till 1906 the time for the settlement of claims of states for the equipment of troops for the Spanish-American war. The bill was passed.

At the request of Mr. Hale the consideration of resolutions touching the postoffice department was postponed until Monday morning next.

The senate on Thursday listened to speeches by Mr. Newlands and Mr. Depew on the Panama canal question and to a speech by Mr. Latimer in advocacy of the adoption of a plan for the improvement of the public wagon roads of the country.

When the house convened the senate resolution authorizing the erection of a monument in memory of the late President Benjamin Harrison on land owned by the United States in the city of Indianapolis was passed.

Representative Underwood, of Alabama, has introduced in the house a bill to exclude certain aliens from admission to the United States under the immigration laws. The bill provides that admission to the United States shall be denied to persons over sixteen years of age who cannot read the English language or some other language; but an admissible immigrant now in or hereafter admitted into the United States may bring in or send for his wife, his children under eighteen years of age, and his parents or grandparents over fifty years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to write or not.

Representative Robinson introduced a bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into the union as the state of Oklahoma.

JANUARY 15TH.

Today's session of the senate began and closed with the passage of a number of bills on the calendar.

The intervening time was given over to a speech by Mr. Teller on the Panama canal question. Mr. Teller contending that the course of the president in connection with the revolt of Panama had been contrary to precedent, and in contravention of international law.

The senate adjourned until Monday.

The Gorman Panama resolution was laid before the senate. Before any one was recognized to speak on the question Mr. Gorman offered a number of amendments, striking out the word "intervention" wherever it appears, thus modifying the resolution so as to make it an inquiry of the president concerning the use of American military forces in the isthmus of Panama.

The house held no session Saturday.

JANUARY 18TH.

The postoffice inquiry resolution and the Panama canal question divided the attention of the senate. The first half of the session was given up to the inquiry, Messrs. Hale and Gorman being the speakers. The question went over until tomorrow.

The discussion of the Panama canal question was conuned to the continuation of Mr. Teller's argument that the course of the United States in the recent revolt of Panama was contrary to international law and sound morals.

Resolutions looking to an investigation by congress of the postoffice department was laid before the senate before the opening of the session.

The house devoted a brief session to the District of Columbia business. While in committee of the whole on one of the bills the postoffice scandal was discussed.

When the house convened the speaker announced the resignation of Mr. Griggs, democrat, of Georgia, from the committee on coinage, weights and measures, and Mr. Hardwick, democrat, of Georgia, from the committee on revision of the laws and the appointment of Mr. Hardwick to the committee on coinage, weights and measures; Mr. Garber, democrat, of Ohio, to the committee on revision of the laws, and Mr. Currier, republican, of New Hampshire, as chairman of the committee on patents.

Some irregularities in the postoffice department were discussed, the discussion being precipitated by a letter from M. W. Lewis to Representative Bartlett, of Georgia.

JANUARY 19TH.

The senate required less than a minute to dispose of the motion to refer to the committee on postoffices the various resolutions looking to an investigation of the postoffice department. The question had been previously debated for hours at a time, but when the motion was put no senator manifested any disposition to discuss it further, and it was adopted without negative vote.

Mr. Quarles announced his advocacy of a sea-level canal, saying he thought that such a canal should be constructed regardless of the time required in construction or the expense to be incurred.

The house considered the Hepburn pure food bill, but did not complete it. When the house was ready to adjourn, on motion of Mr. Hepburn, a recess was taken until 11:55 tomorrow morning. This course will retain the bill before the house without interruption for consideration tomorrow.

Canada's Big Canal.

Canada will have within one year a new waterway that will shorten the distance between the great lakes and the Atlantic 300 miles, revolutionize the enormous carrying trade between the northwest and the seaboard and render the Dominion more independent of the United States commercially.

The canal, when completed in 19[illegible]—will connect Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario, will have Midland harbor as its western terminus and Trenton harbor its southern. The canal will be eight feet in depth, but can be made fourteen feet at a slight cost.

At present fifty-three huge dams have been completed and 160 miles of canal built. The greatest natural obstruction to the project was the fall of sixty-six feet in four miles in one of the rivers used for the canal route. To overcome this mammoth hydraulic lifts were erected, and thus thirty-six feet of the drop has been overcome. The other thirty feet is cared for by two huge locks. Lake Simcoe, half as big as Lake Erie, was the greatest help to the canal. It is used for fifty miles, and dredging was unnecessary.

Already the work has used up $8,000,000, and will cost $2,000,000 more.

Fighting Boll Weevil.

Secretary Wilson is arranging the details of the campaign authorized by congress to be waged against the cotton boll weevil.

A number of government entomologists and scientists already are en route to the ravaged Texas fields and to the Sabine river valley in Louisiana, the pest having been reported from three places in that section. There will be thirty or forty scientists at work against the pest before long.

They will organize the farmers to fight the weevil and will educate them in the best methods of attack. Secretary Wilson expects to make another trip to the districts involved while the fight is on.

On motion of Senator Daniel the senate adopted a resolution calling on the secretary of state for detailed information concerning the Red Cross society. It asks whether the state department has made inquiries of foreign governments concerning the society and whether this government appoints any of the officials and directors and what financial support it gives to the society. Inquiry is also made respecting the equipment of the society for field work, how its accounts are kept and audited and whether the society has the confidence of the leading people of the country.

Representative Bartholdt, of Mississippi, introduced a joint resolution extending an official invitation on the part of congress to the inter-parliamentary union for the promotion of international arbitration to hold its annual conference, which takes place in September next, at St. Louis. An appropriation of $5000 is made to defray the expenses of the meeting.

A request for an immediate appropriation to defray the expenses of the diplomatic service of the United States in the republic of Panama was transmitted to the house from the state department. The draft of an act accompanies the request. This fixes the salary of the minister at $10,000 annually, and that of the secretary of the legation at $2,500.

The national board of trade met Tuesday at Washington for its thirty-fourth session with about seventy-five delegates representing approximately thirty commercial organizations in different parts of the country out of a total membership of forty-seven bodies.

The Panama treaty as amended by the committee on foreign relations was read in executive session of the senate. No discussion was had and it was announced that debate on the treaty will begin tomorrow.

The senate in executive session confirmed the nomination of James A. Toler, marshal for the northern district of Mississippi.

Senator Quay introduced a bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state.

Ex-State Senator C. S. Lee, of Evergreen, Ala., is dead.

INAUGRAL ADDRESS

Of Mississippi's Newly Elected Governor.

The inaugural address of Governor Vardaman, delivered at his inauguration, is largely a reiteration of the speeches he made during his campaign when the race question was made the issue and he took the flat-footed position that the negro was born inferior to the white man and should be kept in that position as incapable of making advancement along with his white brother.

He does not like the present school system as an injustice to the white people, contending that the negro has been given too much learning without improving him and that the way to better him is by teaching his hand and his heart.

He wants the rural schools given [illegible] rights before any more city [illegible] that [illegible]ant than [illegible].

He does not want the [illegible] for building the capitol paid by this generation, but recommends a bond issue to cover that burden, so that it will be borne by successive regimes and generations.

He wants the public roads of the state improved by the use of the convicts on them.

In part the address reads:

"That the negro was created for some good purpose, time has demonstrated; but that good purpose is not participation in the government of white men. The crime of all the ages against civilization was committed when, in the 'agonizing spasm of infuriated men' just after the civil war the north expressed its hatred of the white people of the south in the amendments to the federal constitution which invested the negro with all the rights and privileges of citizenship.

'A well disciplined militia,' properly maintained, our best reliance in peace and to the first moments of war;' to extend the appointive power of the governor and enlarge the elective privilege of the people—the surest means of preserving democratic institutions and promoting honest government. I believe there is less danger in the possible mistakes of the people than in the assumed inerrancy or supreme wisdom of the chief executive. The present primary election law perfected by eliminating the electoral and plurality features—prescribing the severest punishment for the improper use of money and other fraudulent methods to control the elections; the maintenance of a system of free public schools, which will afford equal opportunities to all of the children of the state to receive instruction necessary to equip them for the duties of life and the performance of the functions of citizenship.

"One of the most rational and profitable duties of a free government, it seems to me, is to educate its children.

"If the state will place at the door of all of her children an opportunity to obtain even a common school education—such as is given in the best graded public schools—she will have done well. I want to impress this truth as I see it, that it is of much more importance to start the child on the road to an education—to lay the foundation in a well directed common school than it is to finish it in a government-supported university or college.

"The state for many years, at great expense to the tax payers, has maintained a system of negro education which has produced disappointing results, and I am opposed to the perpetuation of that system. My idea is that the character of education for the negro ought to be changed. If, after forty years of earnest effort and the expenditure of fabulous sums of money to educate his head, we have only succeeded in making a criminal out of him and impairing his usefulness and efficiency as a laborer, wisdom would suggest that we make another experiment and see if we can not improve him by educating his hand and his heart. There must be a moral substratum upon which to build, or you can not make a desirable citizen. The negro as a race is devoid of that element.

"The matter of school books calls for consideration at the hands of the legislature. The purchase of books has become an oppressive burden upon the poor. The great number and variety of books demanded in our latter-day common school curriculum indicates that we are proceeding upon the theory that the child was created in the interest of the school book publishers, rather than that the books are made for the child.

"Separate sleeping and dining cars for the races—and a strict enforcement of the law as a means of preventing conflicts and promoting harmony between the races.

"I would suggest that the executive mansion be sold or devoted to some other use than that of a state provided home for the governor. It would be a matter of economy both for the state and for the governor, for the state to increase the salary of the governor and permit him to live as do other public servants at the capital. I do not like the idea of the executive mansion. It is a relic of royalty and has the odor of that effete aristocracy which is a curse to every country where it flourishes.

"A liberal system of pensions for indigent and helpless confederate soldiers is a matter which should command the most ardent support of every patriotic Mississippian. Aside from considerations of humanity, a sense of profound gratitude should move the people of this state to provide for these old heroes—to drive from the door of poverty and old age the ravenous wolf of want, whose discordant growls make hideous the twilight of their honorable lives."

Louisiana's First Primary.

A general democratic primary to nominate a state ticket to be voted for in April next was held in Louisiana Tuesday. It was the first test ever made in the state of the primary method of direct nomination.

There were two candidates for governor, and the indications point to the nomination of former Senator N. C. Blanchard over his opponent, General Leon Jastremski, consul to Peru under Mr. Cleveland and former commander of the Louisiana division of the confederate veterans.

Senator Murphy J. Foster and former Senator B. F. Jones were candidates for the nomination for United States senator for the term beginning in 1908. Senator Foster carried New Orleans by a heavy majority and his nomination is also indicated.

John T. Michel, for secretary of state, and Professor J. B. Aswell, for state superintendent of public education, were unopposed.

Mississippi Bank Robbed.

A long distance telephone message has been received telling of the robbery of the Bank of Jonestown, Miss. The safe was blown open and about $1,200 in silver and currency secured.

Mississippi new railroad commission elected following officers: S. D. McNair, president, and T. R. Maxwell, secretary. As he retires Captain John A. Webb, secretary for the past four or five Mr. McNair is the new member commission from the lower dis an experienced railroad man.

Governor Vardaman's daughter occupied the speaker's seat by side of her son in the inaugural ceremony. Governor Vardaman was visibly affected, tears being in his eyes as prayer was being delivered.

United States Senators A. J. McLaurin and H. D. Money were elected by both houses of the legislature to succeed themselves in the United States senate.

Illinois has passed a bill appropriating $225,000 for a monument to be erected in the Vicksburg, Miss., national park.

General John C. Black has resigned as a member of the Illinois-Vicksburg military park commission.

During the past ten years the consumption of alcohol in France has increased [illegible] alarming proportions, while England and the United States have progressed toward temperance.

Liverpool has closed one-third of its saloons during the past ten years and so decreased her police force in consequence as to have made an economy of $40,000 yearly.

The general abstemiousness of the people is now regarded as one of the principal causes of the increasing commercial supremacy of the United States.

LUMBER SUPPLY SHORT.

Increase In Consumption of Lumber Throughout the South Because of High Cotton Price.

The Southern Lumber Manufacturers' Association is in fourteenth session in New Orleans.

Concerning the outlook for the lumber trade, President McLeod said that on account of inability to obtain transportation facilities and that there is an actual shortage in the retail yards of over 30,000,000 feet, and that it will take the movement of that amount before the retail yards will have a normal stock, it will be seen that there is an actual shortage of lumber on hand, and that the conditions of supply and demand are favorable to the manufacturer.

Referring to production of lumber, Secretary Smith said:

"Reports from 365 mills for 1902 showed 4,536,655,682 feet produced. These same mills with thirty additional show 4,362,791,778 feet, an increase of 226,000,000 feet. We estimate this to be between 80 and 90 per cent of the six states in which located, viz., Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama.

Held Open Session.

The Panamanian constitutional convention met Tuesday. It was originally intended to have the session a secret one, but Senor Obarrio, minister of war, announced that there was no business before the convention which it was needful to hide from the country, and consequently the session was public.

Senor Obarrio said the Panamanian army was ready and prepared to defend the independence of Panama and the reported invasion of the Panamanian territory by the Colombians which lacked confirmation. He reported upon the number of Panamanian garrisons throughout the Darien country and upon their states of preparedness. The constitution committee will report tomorrow.

About sixty mechanics in the Louisville and Nashville shops at New Decatur, Ala., were laid off Tuesday. The majority of them were axle makers. Some time ago the Louisville and Nashville purchased a quantity of steel when it was up in price with the hope of selling axles to other roads. Now that steel has dropped in price it is said the Louisville and Nashville is unable to sell the large supply of axles which it now has on hand at a profit and has decided to use these axles. This is said to be the reason these men were laid off.

Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson, the naval hero, who recently announced his candidacy for congress in the sixth Alabama district, may not achieve his ambition. It is asserted that Captain Hobson failed to register and he can not now qualify until after the primary for his nomination.

In the circuit court at Nashville, Tenn., [illegible]nt for $4,000 has been entered against the Louisville and Nashville railroad for injury to adjacent property by smoke of locomotives in the company's yards. Other similar suits are pending.

The wholesale grocers of Alabama will meet in annual convention in Montgomery Thursday. It is expected that about seventy-five members of the association will be in attendance.

Annoyed by the frequent ringing of his door bell, Edward Landis, one of the foremost chemists in the country, who was almost insane from asthma, shot his wife and then turned the pistol on himself.

United States Senator J. W. Bailey, of Texas, says that he "will retire from public life before dishonoring the state and party" by voting for the ratification of the Panama treaty.

The Hollins, Heflin and Sylacauga railroad has completed an extension from Wildwood to Woodbine, Ala., 3 miles, and is building from Woodbine on to Rockford, twenty-four miles.

It has been stated in the London newspapers that carrier pigeons have crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and this is said to have taken place in the year 1886, when according to the account, three out of nine American carrier pigeons set free in London returned to their home lofts on this side of the water. A writer in the London Nature asks for more specific information about this alleged fact. Did or did it not happen? If such a flight took place it must have created more or less of a sensation among carrier pigeon fanciers and records of it must exist. Is anything known of this matter on this side of the water?

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUARY 14TH.

Immediately after the senate was called to order Mr. Pettus, from the committee on military affairs, reported the bill extending till 1906 the time for the settlement of claims of states for the equipment of troops for the Spanish-American war. The bill was passed.

At the request of Mr. Hale the consideration of resolutions touching the postoffice department was postponed until Monday morning next.

The senate on Thursday listened to speeches by Mr. Newlands and Mr. Depew on the Panama canal question and to a speech by Mr. Latimer in advocacy of the adoption of a plan for the improvement of the public wagon roads of the country.

When the house convened the senate resolution authorizing the erection of a monument in memory of the late President Benjamin Harrison on land owned by the United States in the city of Indianapolis was passed.

Representative Underwood, of Alabama, has introduced in the house a bill to exclude certain aliens from admission to the United States under the immigration laws. The bill provides that admission to the United States shall be denied to persons over fifteen years of age who cannot read the English language or some other language; but an admissible immigrant now in or hereafter admitted into the United States may bring in or send for his wife, his children under eighteen years of age, and his parents or grandparents over fifty years of age, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are so able to write or not.

Representative Robinson introduced a bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory into the union as the state of Oklahoma.

JANUARY 15TH.

Today's session of the senate began and closed with the passage of a number of bills on the calendar.

The intervening time was given over to a speech by Mr. Teller on the Panama canal question. Mr. Teller contending that the course of the president in connection with the revolt of Panama had been contrary to precedent, and in contravention of international law.

The senate adjourned until Monday.

The Gorman Panama resolution was laid before the senate. Before any one was recognized to speak on the question Mr. Gorman offered a number of amendments, striking out the word "intervention" wherever it occurs, thus modifying the resolution so as to make it an inquiry of the president concerning the use of American military forces in the isthmus of Panama.

The house held no session Saturday.

JANUARY 18TH.

The postoffice inquiry resolution and the Panama canal question divided the attention of the senate. The first half of the session was given up to the inquiry, Messrs. Hale and Gorman being the speakers. The question went over until tomorrow.

The discussion of the Panama canal question was conuned to the continuation of Mr. Teller's argument that the course of the United States in the recent revolt of Panama was contrary to international law and sound morals.

Resolutions looking to an investigation by congress of the postoffice department was laid before the senate before the opening of the session.

The house devoted a brief session to the District of Columbia business. While in committee of the whole on one of the bills the postoffice scandal was discussed.

When the house convened the speaker announced the resignation of Mr. Griggs, democrat, of Georgia, from the committee on comage, weights and measures, and Mr. Hardwick, democrat, of Georgia, from the committee on revision of the laws and the appointment of Mr. Hardwick to the committee on coinage, weights and measures; Mr. Garber, democrat, of Ohio, to the committee on revision of the laws, and Mr. Currier, republican, of New Hampshire, as chairman of the committee on patents.

Some irregularities in the postoffice department were discussed, the discussion being precipitated by a letter from M. W. Lewis to Representative Bartlett, of Georgia.

JANUARY 19TH.

The senate required less than a minute to dispose of the motion to refer to the committee on postoffices the various resolutions looking to an investigation of the postoffice department. The question had been previously debated for hours at a time, but when the motion was put no senator manifested any disposition to discuss it further, and it was adopted without negative vote.

Mr. Quarles announced his advocacy of a sea-level canal, saying he thought that such a canal should be constructed regardless of the time required in construction or the expense to be incurred.

The house considered the Hepburn pure food bill, but did not complete it.

When the house was ready to adjourn, on motion of Mr. Hepburn, a recess was taken until 11:55 tomorrow morning. This course will retain the bill before the house without interruption for consideration tomorrow.

Canada's Big Canal.

Canada will have within one year a new waterway that will shorten the distance between the great lakes and the Atlantic 300 miles, revolutionize the enormous carrying trade between the northwest and the seaboard and render the Dominion more independent of the United States commercially.

The canal, when completed, commenced in 19[illegible]—will connect Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario, will have Midland harbor as the western terminus and Trenton as the southern. The canal will be eight feet in depth, but can be made fourteen feet at a slight cost.

At present fifty-three huge dams have been completed and 160 miles of canal built. The greatest natural obstruction to the project was the fall of sixty-six feet in four miles in one of the rivers used for the canal route. To overcome this mammoth hydraulic lifts were erected, and thus thirty-six feet of the drop has been overcome. The other thirty feet is cared for by two huge locks. Lake Simcoe, half as big as Lake Erie, was the greatest help to the canal. It is used for fifty miles, and dredging was unnecessary.

Already the work has used up $8,000,000, and will cost $2,000,000 more.

Fighting Boll Weevil.

Secretary Wilson is arranging the details of the campaign authorized by congress to be waged against the cotton boll weevil.

A number of government entomologists and scentists already are en route to the ravaged Texas fields and to the Sabine river valley in Louisiana, the pest having been reported from three places in that section. There will be thirty or forty scientists at work against the pest before long.

They will organize the farmers to fight the weevil and will educate them in the best methods of attack. Secretary Wilson expects to make another trip to the districts involved while the fight is on.

On motion of Senator Daniel the senate adopted a resolution calling on the secretary of state for detailed information concerning the Red Cross society. It asks whether the state department has made inquiries of foreign governments concerning the society and whether this government appoints any of the officials and directors, and what financial support it gives to the society. Inquiry is also made respecting the equipment of the society for field work, how its accounts are kept and audited and whether the society has the confidence of the leading people of the country.

Representative Bartholdt, of Mississippi, introduced a joint resolution extending an official invitation on the part of congress to the inter-parliamentary union for the promotion of international arbitration to hold its annual conference, which takes place in September next, at St. Louis. An appropriation of $5000 is made to defray the expenses of the meeting.

A request for an immediate appropriation to defray the expenses of the diplomatic service of the United States in the republic of Panama was transmitted to the house from the state department. The draft of an act accompanies the request. This fixes the salary of the minister at $10,000 annually, and that of the secretary of the legation at $2,500.

The national board of trade met Tuesday at Washington for its thirty-fourth session with about seventy-five delegates representing approximately thirty commercial organizations in different parts of the country out of a total membership of forty-seven bodies.

The Panama treaty as amended by the committee on foreign relations was read in executive session of the senate. No discussion was had and it was announced that debate on the treaty will begin tomorrow.

The senate in executive session confirmed the nomination of James A. Toler, marshal for the northern district of Mississippi.

Senator Quay introduced a bill providing for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state.

Ex-State Senator C. S. Lee, of Evergreen, Ala., is dead.

INAUGRAL ADDRESS

Of Mississippi's Newly Elected Governor.

The inaugural address of Governor Vardaman, delivered at his inauguration, is largely a reiteration of the speeches he made during his campaign when the race question was made the issue and he took the flat-footed position that the negro was born inferior to the white man and should be kept in that position as incapable of making advancement along with his white brother.

He does not like the present school system as an injustice to the white people, contending that the negro has been given too much learning without improving him and that the way to better him is by teaching his hand and his heart.

He wants the rural schools given [illegible] rights before any more city [illegible] that [illegible] ant than [illegible]

He does not want the [illegible] for building the capitol paid by this generation, but recommends a bond issue to cover that burden, so that it will be borne by successive regimes and generations.

He wants the public roads of the state improved by the use of the convicts on them.

In part the address reads:

"That the negro was created for some good purpose, time has demonstrated; but that good purpose is not participation in the government of white men. The crime of all the ages against civilization was committed when, in the 'agonizing spasm of infuriated men' just after the civil war the north expressed its hatred of the white people of the south in the amendments to the federal constitution which invested the negro with all the rights and privileges of citizenship.

'A well disciplined militia,' properly maintained, our best reliance in peace and to the first moments of war;' to curtail the appointive power of the governor and enlarge the elective privilege of the people—the surest means of preserving democratic institutions and promoting honest government; I believe there is less danger in the possible mistakes of the people than in the assumed inerrancy or supreme wisdom of the chief executive. The present primary election law perfected by eliminating the electoral and plurality features—prescribing the severest punishment for the improper use of money and other fraudulent methods to control the elections; the maintenance of a system of free public schools, which will afford equal opportunities to all of the children of the state to receive instruction necessary to equip them for the duties of life and the performance of the functions of citizenship.

"One of the most rational and profitable duties of a free government, it seems to me, is to educate its children.

"If the state will place at the door of all of her children an opportunity to obtain even a common school education—such as is given in the best graded public schools—she will have done well. I want to impress this truth as I see it, that it is of much more importance to start the child on the road to an education—to lay the foundation in a well directed common school than it is to finish it in a government-supported university or college.

"The state for many years, at great expense to the tax payers, has maintained a system of negro education which has produced disappointing results, and I am opposed to the perpetuation of that system. My idea is that the character of education for the negro ought to be changed. If, after forty years of earnest effort and the expenditure of fabulous sums of money to educate his head, we have only succeeded in making a criminal out of him and impairing his usefulness and efficiency as a laborer, wisdom would suggest that we make another experiment and see if we can not improve him by educating his hand and his heart. There must be a moral substratum upon which to build, or you can not make a desirable citizen. The negro as a race is devoid of that element.

"The matter of school books calls for consideration at the hands of the legislature. The purchase of books has become an oppressive burden upon the poor. The great number and variety of books demanded in our latter-day common school curriculum indicates that we are proceeding upon the theory that the child was created in the interest of the school book publishers, rather than that the books are made for the child.

"Separate sleeping and dining cars for the races—and a strict enforcement of the law as a means of preventing conflicts and promoting harmony between the races.

"I would suggest that the executive mansion be sold or devoted to some other use than that of a state provided home for the governor. It would be a matter of economy both for the state and for the governor, for the state to increase the salary of the governor and permit him to live as do other public servants at the capital. I do not like the idea of the executive mansion. It is a relic of royalty and has the odor of that effete aristocracy which is a curse to every country where it flourishes.

"A liberal system of pensions for indigent and helpless confederate soldiers is a matter which should command the most ardent support of every patriotic Mississippian. Aside from considerations of humanity, a sense of profound gratitude should move the people of this state to provide for these old heroes—to drive from the door of poverty and old age the ravenous wolf of want, whose discordant growls make hideous the twilight of their honorable lives."

[illegible] United States, [illegible] ky than [illegible] less than [illegible] capita of alcohol.

The following table, showing the annual quantities of alcohol consumed per capita in the several countries, places France at the head of the list:

Country.	Consumption per capita Gallons
France	4.81
Switzerland	3.3
Italy	2.7
Germany	2.44
England	2.35
United States	1.37
Canada	.51

During the past ten years the consumption of alcohol in France has increased in alarming proportions, while England and the United States have progressed toward temperance.

Liverpool has closed one-third of its saloons during the past ten years and so decreased her police force in consequence as to have made an economy of $40,000 yearly.

The general abstemiousness of the people is now regarded as one of the principal causes of the increasing commercial supremacy of the United States.

Louisiana's First Primary.

A general democratic primary to nominate a state ticket to be voted for in April next was held in Louisiana Tuesday. It was the first test ever made in the state of the primary method of direct nomination.

There were two candidates for governor, and the indications point to the nomination of former Senator N. C. Blanchard over his opponent, General Leon Jastremski, consul to Peru under Mr. Cleveland and former commander of the Louisiana division of the confederate veterans.

Senator Murphy J. Foster and former Senator B. F. Jones were candidates for the nomination for United States senator for the term beginning in 1908. Senator Foster carried New Orleans by a heavy majority and his nomination is also indicated.

John T. Michel, for secretary of state, and Professor J. B. Aswell, for state superintendent of public education, were unopposed.

Mississippi Bank Robbed.

A long distance telephone message [illegible] been received telling of the robbery of the Bank of Jonestown, Miss. The safe was blown open and about $1,200 in silver and currency secured.

Mississippi [illegible] new railroad commission elected [illegible] following officers: S. D. McNair, president, and T. R. Maxwell, secretary. [illegible] retires Captain John A. Webb, [illegible] secretary for the past four or five [illegible] Mr. McNair is the new member [illegible] commission from the lower district, [illegible] an experienced railroad man.

Governor Vardaman's [illegible] occupied the speaker's seat by [illegible] side of her son in the inaugural [illegible] mony. Governor Vardaman was visibly affected, tears being in his eyes [illegible] prayer was being delivered.

United States Senators A. J. McLaurin and H. D. Money were elected by both houses of the legislature to succeed themselves in the United States senate.

Illinois has passed a bill appropriating $225,000 for a monument to be erected in the Vicksburg, Miss., national park.

General John C. Black has resigned as a member of the Illinois-Vicksburg military park commission.

LUMBER SUPPLY SHORT.

Increase In Consumption of Lumber Throughout the South Because of High Cotton Price.

The Southern Lumber Manufacturers' Association is in fourteenth session in New Orleans.

Concerning the outlook for the lumber trade, President McLeod said that on account of inability to obtain transportation facilities and that there is an actual shortage in the retail yards of over 30,000,000 feet, and that it will take the movement of that amount before the retail yards will have a normal stock. It will be seen that there is an actual shortage of lumber on hand, and that the conditions of supply and demand are favorable to the manufacturer.

Referring to production of lumber, Secretary Smith said:

"Reports from 365 mills for 1902 showed 4,536,655,682 feet produced. These same mills with thirty additional show 4,362,791,778 feet, an increase of 226,000,000 feet. We estimate this to be between 80 and 90 per cent of the six states in which [illegible] located, viz., Missouri, [illegible]sas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama.

[illegible] clearing house summary [illegible] compiled from 203 mills [illegible] 3,108,000,000 feet cut showing [illegible] crease over the 175 mills in 190[illegible] 446,000,000 feet cut."

Held Open Session.

The Panamanian constitutional convention met Tuesday. It was originally intended to have the session a secret one, but Senor Obarrio, minister of war, announced that there was no business before the convention which it was needful to hide from the country, and consequently the session was public.

Senor Obarrio said the Panamanian army was ready and prepared to defend the independence of Panama and the reported invasion of the Panamanian territory by the Colombians which lacked confirmation. He reported upon the number of Panamanian garrisons throughout the Darien country and upon their states of preparedness. The constitution committee will report tomorrow.

About sixty mechanics in the Louisville and Nashville shops at New Decatur, Ala., were laid off Tuesday. The majority of them were axle makers. Some time ago the Louisville and Nashville purchased a quantity of steel when it was up in price with the hope of selling axles to other roads. Now that steel has dropped in price it is said the Louisville and Nashville is unable to sell the large supply of axles which it now has on hand at a profit and has decided to use these axles. This is said to be the reason these men were laid off.

Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson, the naval hero, who recently announced his candidacy for congress in the sixth Alabama district, may not achieve his ambition. It is asserted that Captain Hobson failed to register and he can not now qualify until after the primary for his nomination.

In the circuit court at Nashville, Tenn., judgment for $4,000 has been entered against the Louisville and Nashville railroad for injury to adjacent property by smoke of locomotives in the company's yards. Other similar suits are pending.

The wholesale grocers of Alabama will meet in annual convention in Montgomery Thursday. It is expected that about seventy-five members of the association will be in attendance.

Annoyed by the frequent ringing of his door bell, Edward Landis, one of the foremost chemists in the country, who was almost insane from asthma, shot his wife and then turned the pistol on himself.

United States Senator J. W. Bailey, of Texas, says that he "will retire from public life before dishonoring the state and party" by voting for the ratification of the Panama treaty.

The Hollins, Heflin and Sylacauga railroad has completed an extension from Wildwood to Woodbine, Ala., 3 miles, and is building from Woodbine on to Rockford, twenty-four miles.

The lower house of Mississippi has passed a resolution protesting against the closing of the Indianola postoffice by President Roosevelt. It denounces the act as an arbitrary violation of the federal constitution.

It has been stated in the London newspapers that carrier pigeons have crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and this is said to have taken place in the year 1886, when according to the account, three out of nine American carrier pigeons set free in London returned to their home lofts on this side of the water. A writer in the London Nature asks for more specific information about this alleged fact. Did or did it not happen? If such a flight took place it must have created more or less of a sensation among carrier pigeon fanciers and records of it must exist. Is anything known of this matter on this side of the water?

LET ME WALK WITH THEE.

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me Thy secret, help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move,
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me Thy wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

Teach me Thy patience; still with Thee
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong.

In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way,
In peace that only Thou canst give,
With Thee, O Master, let me live.

AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR

By LAETA M. RAMAGE.

Copyrighted, 1903, by The Authors Publishing Company

Joan climbed wearily up the stairs to her third story room. She seldom felt tired, but to-night the whole world looked criss-cross.

She was a stranger in the city and among people who gave her no thought. She had been that many a time in many a place, yet never before in her twenty-six years had the thought so oppressed her. She had hailed with delight the chance of work here for a few weeks, as giving her the opportunity of seeing the place she had long desired to visit. But the weeks had grown very [illegible]. In spite of her pride and beauty of health and vigor, she was essentially a womanly woman, dependent upon her friends and surroundings for her happiness. Caring for herself had not robbed her of a certain femininity.

In general she was somewhat feared at the New York office, feared because of her ability to do—admired for her bright, successful ways. Yet even there she had her true friends.

She sighed, wishing herself back in her accustomed room in the great apartment house where she lived. It was Thursday, her night at home. It would be just time for her evening callers and she would be dressed in one of her few, dainty, evening gowns. Probably Mrs. Massey, dear, old Mrs. Massey, whose presence was necessary to the well-being of the simple refreshments, would be there; and Gerald Burton, her old-time schoolmate, who still kept a brotherly eye on her; and a few clever men and women like herself, trying to earn a living by that uncertain weapon, the pen.

Then she lighted the gas and laid the letter which had been troubling her all day on her desk. She walked across to the window and leaned her head against the sash. The warm May night was heavy with the scent of hyacinths and magnolias growing in the square.

"Hateful things! No more southern blooms for me!" she muttered. "One dusty New York park is worth all this luxuriance."

As she stood there, she thought it all over—her life. When still a mere child she had taught in the western country schools. She had worked her way, finally, into the public schools of a large city, only to find the drudgery a shade worse than in the rural districts. How she had hated it all, but it had been the only possible thing. Then with the death of those dependent on her exertions she had come to New York to carve a career for herself. It had been hard work and slow, but now, after three years, she had gained a certain foothold, and held a position with a prominent publishing house. She had been sent down here to write a series of articles on the great exhibition in progress. Her material was all collected, and she was ready to return to New York, filled with pleasant memories of her southern visit. Now this to spoil it all!

Why must he write now, just when she was so happy over the idea of re-

During the early girlhood there had been no time for such things in her ambitious life. She had grown to consider herself unattractive, for she was a very modest woman in spite of her success.

Her school days had been at best haphazard ones. Her teaching had been a miserable failure. Therefore, the fact that Mr. Lloyd wished her to be his wife seemed a gr[illegible] side Mr. Lloyd's terribly settled middle age.

Yet Robert had never said anything to show her that he cared for her. He worked at the desk near hers and had many a time given her a helping hand in hard seasons. He spent one evening every week with her. Occasionally he took her to a concert or an opera.

"Why did this come, just when I was so happy! It makes me feel queer and discontented," she sighed. "I don't care for Mr. Lloyd. I don't care for Robert Denton. And yet it would be so nice to have a home and I am growing just terribly old."

There was a little sob in her throat. She turned to study her face severely, critically in the glass.

"I must decide. I must," she said to herself. "There is no use in putting off the evil hour."

She sat down at her desk and wrote a little note to Mr. Lloyd. Even when she began it she was not sure just what its meaning would be. But the words shaped themselves into an acceptance of his offer, almost before she realized it.

"Now I must mail it or I shall be changing my mind every hour," she said, feverishly.

She slipped down to the door and out to the nearest letter box. As she remounted the steps a man's dark figure beside the door startled her. Then came the start of recognition.

"Mr. Denton," she exclaimed.

"Joan," he said, and the word told her everything. "My book has been accepted, and they've given me an order for another. I couldn't wait for your return. I—but come over to the square, where we can talk."

Joan went mutely. They sat down on one of the benches in the deserted park. She felt very happy, tumultuously so. Then all at once she drew back from the shelter of the arm he had placed around her.

"Oh, that letter, that dreadful letter," she cried.

"What letter? What do you mean?"

"Oh, Robert, why must it be so? Why didn't you speak before?"

"Because I hadn't a solitary thing [illegible] offer you, dear. The moment [illegible] I came to you."

WHEAT FIELDS OF CANADA.

Manitoba Can Produce Twice as Much Wheat as Russia.

Manitoba is pre-eminently the province of wheat. Westward of Winnipeg, when the fields are yellow and almost ripe, you may ride for a day and a half with nothing between your eye and the sky line but wheat—a boundless sea of wheat, rippling to the prairie wind like waves to the run of invisible feet, says the Chautauquan. The tall, red towers of the elevators rise where settlements have clustered into a village, but across the fenceless reaches is nothing but the yellow wheat. The province is only in its infancy. Only [illegible] of settlers [illegible] cars of the t[illegible] with wondering eyes on [illegible] vast fenceless fields that seem to [illegible] in where the sun rises and end whe[illegible] sun sets. It is a new world—a world [illegible] promise—to them, from the stifled [illegible] tries of Europe, a world where land [illegible] is no crime, and land to be had [illegible] the taking, and success awaiting ripe to the hand of toil. How the eyes that have dug themselves out in an eastern sweat-shop moisten at sight of the boundless prairie. And the back bent with toil for a pittance that meant slavery draws up to the straight stature of self-supporting manhood. There is so much room! There is so much free air! There is such plain, palpable, boundless opportunity for every man!

BY WORKS, NOT FAITH.

The Saving Graces of a Deceased Gentleman from Kentucky.

Samuel W. Moore, a prominent lawyer of Kansas City, on returning to his home from Arkansas a few days ago, told a good story concerning a distinguished attorney in western Arkansas, Judge James E. Read, who was born and lived in Kentucky before moving to this state. It runs this way:

"A man living near Fort Smith died. This man was comfortably well off in worldly possessions, but he had been neglectful of his spiritual welfare. He had never joined any church and had little to do with religious advisers. The time for his funeral arrived, and although a preacher had agreed to be on hand, an unavoidable accident had delayed him. The house was out of town, and as the friends of the departed brother were all assembled, Judge Read was asked to make a few remarks over the body of his friend, who also had once lived in Kentucky. The judge consented.

"My friends," he said, "we are gathered here to-day to pay a final tribute to our friend who has already solved the mysteries of the great hereafter. He did not have the reputation of a religious man, and yet he lived the life of a noble Kentucky gentleman. He had good hosses and he ran 'em. He had good whisky and he drank it. He had good game cocks and he fit 'em, for such is the kingdom of heaven."—Arkansas Gazette.

As Chickens Come Home.

You may take the world as it comes or goes,
And you will be sure to find
That Fate will square the accounts she owes,
Whoever comes out behind;
And all things had that a man has done,
By whatsoever induced,
Return at last to him, one by one,
As the chickens come home to roost.

Sow as you will, there's time to reap,
For the good and the bad as well.
And conscience, whether we wake or sleep,
Is either a heaven or hell.
And every wrong [illegible] and its place,
And every pas[illegible] closed
Drifts back and [illegible]s you face to face—
Like chickens come home to roost.

Whether you [illegible]er or under the sod
The result will be the same.
You cannot [illegible]cape the hand of God,
You must [illegible]ear your sin and shame.
No matter [illegible] what's carved on a marble [illegible]
Whatever item's are all produced
You [illegible]nd that St. Peter was keeping

Would Not Be at a Loss.

During a recent conversation between District Attorney Jerome and several members of the New York bar reference was had to the sharp practices of a certain notoriously shifty politician of the city.

"Certainly he is never at a loss," said Mr. Jerome. "Do you know, I really believe that if that man were cast on a barren rock in mid-ocean he would make money—if there were another man on the rock."—New York Tribune.

THE CHANGE WAS MADE.

But It Was the Big Firm That Paid Increased Rent.

Jules Huret, the French journalist, who has announced that Americans make love too coldly, is the son of a rich and astute merchant. M. Huret likes to tell a story in illustration of his father's fine business sense.

"My father, years ago," he will begin, "occupied a small shop on the ground floor of a large building. He was then at the beginning of his career, and his income was somewhat paltry. He was, however, an economical man.

"A clothing firm occupied all of the building except the portion held by my father, and this firm had arranged with the proprietor that they should have that portion, too, whenever they were ready to pay the rental demanded.

"Well, one day they decided to take in my father's shop, and their manager accordingly called on him, and in a friendly way told him that he had better look about for another stand at once, since his firm would be taking over the shop in May.

"'But I don't want to move,' said my father.

"'Well, but you'll have to,' said the manager. 'You are a poor man, and my firm is rich. We can afford to pay three times as much rent for this floor as you can. Now, if you'll leave quietly, without making any fuss, we'll help you to find a new place. But if you stay, you'll have to pay a rent that will beggar you—simply beggar you, remember.'

"'Give [illegible] re[illegible] weeks later called on [illegible] again. My father was all smiles as he received him.

"'Everything, my friend, is arranged,' my father said. 'You may stay here, as before. I don't pay any rent at all, but you pay 2,500 francs a year more than you paid last. I have bought the building.'"

HARRIMAN'S GIFT TO CHARITY.

Millionaire Is Liberal to Those He Thinks Well of.

E. H. Harriman is a member of that small group of well-known millionaires that remembers the Biblical injunction not to let the left hand know what the right hand doeth, when doing alms.

[illegible] philanthropies are as varied as man[illegible] man's whose good deeds are trumpe[illegible] throughout the land. But while they [illegible] thus carried on quietly they are als[illegible]ne in a gruff sort of way.

The man who [illegible]s charity to plead before Mr. Har[illegible]man walks into his office.

"You're Mr. So-and-So," says Mr. Harriman. "Quick, now, I'm a busy man."

"Ugh," the financier grunts a moment later. "That's the institution at such-and-such a street. I know about you—you're teaching children to be good men and women. Here"—turning to his secretary—see that this gentleman gets a check for $1,000. That's all right—haven't time for thanks. Good-day."

And the visitor walks out of the office in a dazed sort of way. But sometimes the seekers after charity are dazed in the opposite direction.

"I know your place," Mr. Harriman will say. "It's no good—not making the right kind of men and women. You can't get a cent from me. Good-day."

Compliments Were Deserved.

Dr. W. W. Keen of Philadelphia has great repute as a surgeon. In New York one winter afternoon last year he saw a man slip on an icy pavement and fall heavily. He hastened to the poor fellow's assistance and found that he had broken his leg.

Dr. Keen used his umbrella as a splint, and with his own and several borrowed handkerchiefs bandaged the broken limb tightly. As he finished his task the ambulance arrived.

"You've bandaged this rather well," the young blue uniformed ambulance surgeon said to Dr. Keen.

"Thank you," said the other.

"Oh, not at all. I suppose," the youth resumed, "that you have been reading up some first aid to the injured treatise, eh? They say a little learning is a dangerous thing, but, really, the little you have learned about surgery you have put to good account. Give me your name and address and I'll forward your umbrella to you."

"I'll give you my card," said Dr. Keen. He did so, and the young surgeon flushed a little as he read on it the name of one of the greatest of modern surgeons.

Love's Blossoming.

Beloved, in the garden of my heart
There fell one night a solitary seed;
I knew not whence it came nor what its part,
Nor of what nourishment it might have need.
Wearied with wandering through the ether wide,
It slept, and when its weariness was gone,
Said, "In this pleasure spot I will abide,
And with the fairest claim comparison."
Startled, I watched with keen and constant eyes
The growth to bud and blossom of my guest,
Like one to whom 'tis very Paradise
To see her infant drain her ample breast;
And lo! I found, one happy evening hour,
My heart was harboring Love's immortal flower.

Great Statesman Slept Little.

M. Thiers, the great French statesman of a generation ago, prided himself on never being found in bed after 5 o'clock in the morning; and more often than not he was drinking his early cup of coffee and eating his roll shortly after 4, preparatory to beginning eight hours of unbroken work, which ended with the dejeuner proper at noon.

How Caleb Kept Books

Purdy township, or, rather, the inhabitants thereof, wondered how Caleb and the Squire escaped getting mixed in their "papers." When Purdy township or any part of it had business to transact which required writing or figures, it involved "drawing up the papers," "going over," or "looking over" them. So Purdy township was justified in its wonderment over the apparent immunity from cloudiness which attended the Squire's and Caleb's "papers," for Caleb could neither read nor write, and the Squire was a stickler for ponderous details and regularity. But they got on, just the same.

The Squire was the money man and Caleb the general active head of the partnership in the small water-power establishment on the sylvian edges of Henryville. There a milling business was carried on and farming implements sold. Caleb was engineer, foreman, salesman and miller. One or two evenings a week in the Squire's office in the village, or when he had nothing else to do and would walk or drive out to the mill, served for Caleb and the Squire to go over the books and keep their accounts regularly.

It was without [illegible]y for several weeks. [illegible] fear the mill transactions [illegible] huddled in Caleb's memory [illegible]e memoranda when he returned. And his faith was justified.

"[illegible]s this, Caleb?" asked the Squire on his return, pointing on his partner's soiled pencil-markings to what looked like a capital "T" lying horizontally.

"That? Why, that's for a pick-axe Bill Hodges bought," was the reply. The Squire made a note of it and called Caleb's attention to the next item.

"Let me see—what's this for?" Something closely resembling a circle and which might represent the letter "O," obviously made with the unnecessary firmness of a hand unused to writing, looked up at them from the page.

Caleb pondered. He also breathed a whistle which was neither a tune nor a noise to be heard very far away. So, truthfully, Caleb "breathed" a whistle, meanwhile standing with the same curveless and stubby finger placed beneath the puzzling circle. He tilted forward and backward on his toes. In a moment he stood motionless, lowered his chin to his chest, and, with a final wheezy whistle—looking not at the Squire, but straight at the circle—he said:

"I think—I think that's a cheese got by—er, um-m—let me see—" Caleb now had to remove his hat, and with his free hand was exploring the bushy depths of his hair for some recollection of the obtuse transaction. As a matter of fact, the partnership did not involve cheeses. But the Squire hesitated to make any blunt interruption of Caleb's well-understood process of recollection. He finally risked saying quietly:

"We haven't sold cheeses, for we, since—why, I don't remember that we've had any since." The Squire gave to his eyes a far-away, retrospective look, and mentally hoped it would soon recall the item.

"That's so, we hevn't, hev we," slowly observed Caleb who had not moved his glance from the circle. "No, we hevn't had no cheeses, that's certain."

Patiently the Squire had been waiting. With his pencil he had been absent-mindedly marking a dot on a piece of paper before him. The black dot saved the day. It was unconsciously made, but it gave Caleb the suggestion he wanted, though it was not in his nature to lose his poise. He remarked very composedly:

"That's a grindstone, and Bruce Carter bought it. I guess I must hev forgot to mark the hole into it."

The Squire knew his associate too well to confuse him in future "papers" by making any comment on the present instance. All he said was, "Oh, yes," with an emphasis meant to indicate it all was as plain as daylight—which it was not.

And they proceeded to the next item.—New York Times.

Sleuths in Trance

A Swiss engineer, M. Ilg, in the employ of King Menelek, the ruler of Abyssinia, tells some strange things about that country and one of his most weird stories relates to the lobasha, or crime discoverer. These are boys not more than twelve years of age, who are put into a hypnotic trance, and in this state discover the unknown perpetrators of crimes. Of many of these almost incredible cases of the hunting down of criminals he had personal knowledge. In a case of incendiarism in Adis Abeba the lobasha was called to the spot and given a cupful of milk into which a green powder had been put and then was made to smoke a pipe of tobacco mixed with a black powder. The boy was then hypnotized. After a few minutes he jumped up and began running to Harrar. For fully sixteen hours he ran, and so swift was his pace that professional runners were not able to keep up with him. Near Harrar the lobasha left the road, ran into a field and touched a Galla working there with his hand. The man confessed.

Another case which Emperor Menelek and M. Ilg investigated was that of a murder and robbery near Adis Abeba. The lobasha was taken to the site of the murder and put into his peculiar psychic state. For a while he ran around the place, then back to Adis Abeba to a church, which he kissed, then to another church, which he also kissed.

Coming to some water—water breaks the spell—the boy woke from his trance.

He was again hypnotized and off he went, round some huts, and at the door of one of them lay down and followed the owner of the hut, who was not in, was on his return arrested. He stoutly denied the guilt, but some of the goods belonging to his victim were found in the hut, and he ultimately confessed.

The murderer was brought before Menelek, who asked him to detail his doings after the commission of the crime. These were found to correspond with the movements of the lobasha. He said that, overcome with remorse, he ran to two churches and kissed them.

Menelek wanted to have another proof of the lobasha's gifts. He himself took some jewelry belonging to the empress. A lobasha was sent for. He first ran about in the empress' rooms, then into Menelek's own and finally fell down on Menelek's bed.

M. Ilg can give no explanation of this wonderful gift, which seems to be confined to a certain tribe, or perhaps racial confederation, the members of which are distributed over the whole of Abyssinia.

It is also worth remembering that a very similar method of discovering crimes was ascribed to the old Egyptians 4,000 years ago.

Horsefly Was to Blame

"Yes," said the band master, "we do have troubles with our musicians sometimes.

"Once we were engaged to play at a funeral. Our notice was very short, so we had no rehearsal. We reached the cemetery without any mishap, but there something happened. We were to play a solemn measure, while the body was being lowered into the grave. Only a few instruments were needed. I was slowly and solemnly swinging my baton, the spectators were silently weeping, when suddenly the trombone gave a loud, long blast, enough to wake the dead. Some of the mourners fainted, the players stopped in consternation, and I jumped over chairs and racks to where the trombonist, a dull, heavy German, sat stolidly gazing at his music.

"What the devil did you mean by bursting out that way?" I shouted.

"He raised his eyes slowly to mine.

"'Vell, I vas vatching de moosic, und just den a horsefly got on de paper. I t'ought he vos a note, and I played him. Dat vas all, ain't it?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Pursuit of Beauty

By the study of Art the mind of the rising generation may be developed not only along natural, as opposed to artificial lines, but toward that appreciation of beauty which is a priceless possession in itself, since it fills every waking moment with a joy which nothing can destroy.

The mere fact that ordinary people have pictures of some sort in their homes should not in itself be taken as evidence of taste. Art is the drawing of the best.

Art has moved the world more than anything else. Without it the world would have been a desert, and our own knowledge a little more than a blank. What, for instance, should we know of Egypt if we did not go to the Art of Egypt? How evanescent have been the politics of Greece! Yet its Art survives. The Constitution of Rome and the policy of the Caesars are seen only in the Art of Rome and the buildings they made. Everything we touch is Art; and when politics is dead Art remains, and must always remain, alive, for though politics works for the moment Art works for all time.

AT EVENING.

The hush of evening fell on me
A thousand miles from land,
The sea put forth that mystic power
I feared to understand.

Waves, laughing, dancing all the day,
Foam kissed 'neath skies so fair,
The stillness of the night wrapped all,
Saddening it everywhere.

And pitiless as cruel Fate
The grayness closed on me,
Binding my heart with icy chains—
The chains of Destiny.

Gone were my hopes, vanished my dreams,
And torturing my fears,
The evening was, as is my life,
A misty realm of Tears.

Then as I stood, bereft of Hope,
A light came from afar,
Unconscious first it shone on me—
The first faint Evening Star.

Oh, little star of hope and love,
Ascending in the sky,
Heeding your message pure and sweet
To weak hearts such as I,

The moon rose from her silver car
The grayness passed away,
The path across the restless sea
Was clear as in the day.

The star has bid me trust again,
And bow beneath the rod.
The moonlight shows the road is rough
That leads the way to God.

THE COURTSHIP OF BUBBLES.

A Poetical Interlude in the Life of One Devoted to His Profession.

From the German.

My friend, Bobby Bubbles, the reporter for the Daily Steam Whistle, has never had anything to say in praise of poets. He, a practical newspaper man, who sees things as they are and then simply photographs with his pen, so to speak, has no use for poetical coloring.

But since the affair with Dora Potter he absolutely hates poets. For the poet Crane is to blame for the whole misfortune according to Bubbles' view.

It began in a most harmless way, just like the Chicago fire and other disasters. On one of those moist, sticky, summer days Bubbles was sitting in the restaurant of Mayer & Mayer devouring his luncheon. I purposely do not say he ate his lunch. He did not eat, but devoured, because he was always afraid that something might be happening somewhere without his knowing it.

"Ah, Bubbles, how are you?" said a voice suddenly. "Will you allow me?" and Crane, the poet, seated himself without more ado at the same table. He had just received $10 for a poem and thought he would celebrate. "You are in bad spirits, my dear Bubbles."

"Heavens, yes. This change of weather, and nothing doing, nothing at all!"

"Why don't you go into the country old fellow? Take a two weeks vacation and come with me. I am going to Mamaronegg in the Schanzunk mountains. Oh, you ought to see it!"

And between the chicken and the stewed pears he pictured the delights of Mamaronegg as only a poet could. Bubbles could really hear the trees rustling and the birds singing, and he smelled the spicy mountain air.

"I guess you are right," said Bubbles, as he stirred his coffee, and collected his strength. "Well, I will get leave of absence and go with you. We can live together, row, fish, only don't ask me to write poetry, I draw the line at that."

The business manager of the Daily Steam Whistle granted Bubbles the desired vacation with pleasure. Two days after, the poet and reporter were in Mamaronegg sitting in a little snow white hotel with green window blinds and a red roof. There were only a few people in the hotel, among them a bewitching lady, Dora Potter, a small but spirited widow of some twenty summers, who was always smiling and working on a silk necktie for some unmarried gentleman. That was her delight.

When Crane and Bubbles had registered their names in the front room, the ardent Dora appeared and looked to see what their names were, where they came from and what they were. She suspected she might put both young men on the necktie list.

"Literary men!" she murmured, delighted. "Charming!" She had a weakness for such people.

They appeared hugely interesting to her, for they wrote of love. And was that indeed Bubbles of the Daily Steam Whistle, the famous Bubbles who had accomplished unheard of journalistic feats? Who had been a hansom driver for two weeks in order to describe his experience with his patrons? Who asked the Vanderbilts for a sleeping room and breakfast whereupon they put him in the lunatic asylum, the life and workings of which he described? Who served Paderewski in the hotel as a waiter and published a most witty account of it?

Yes it was he. This little man with the red hair and the freckles was the great Bubbles.

From now on she had only one desire, to know the man and to make him a silk necktie. The opportunity to become acquainted offered itself the next morning when he went out on the veranda.

The next day he invited her with Crane to take a walk, and on the third she began a necktie for him. Crane was quite enthusiastic about Dora. While she was making the tie for Bubbles, Crane was composing a poem about her in which he extolled her as Venus of the necktie.

"Bubbles," said he, as they were walking through the quiet village one day, "Bubbles, go ahead! The deuce! such a fine woman and money, 8000 a year income to live on! She told me that in strictest confidence."

"Folly!" replied Bubbles. "I marry!" but he smiled as he said it.

Bubbles went ahead on a shimmering, fragrant, moonlight night. The bullfrogs were singing on the banks, and the notes of "'Way Down Upon the Suwanee River" floated down from a hotel where a troupe of minstrels were singing.

Dora sat in the boat looking at Bubbles and smiled. In the moonlight she was bewitching. It was too much for Bubbles. When they had returned to the hotel and Bubbles was on the way to his room he met Crane.

"I have gone and done it!" said Bubbles.

"Ah, I congratulate you, my dear boy," replied Crane. "And you will let me dine with you every Sunday later, will you not?"

"She has made one condition. I must immediately give up my position on the newspaper. I am to look for something quieter on a magazine, or whatever suits me. She says I need not hurry, as we are independent."

"Splendid! And you agreed?"

"Yes, that I did. What was I to do?"

Soon the three returned to the city. Bubbles resigned his position, to the disappointment of his employer.

"However," said the business manager of the Steam Whistle, "if you ever alter your decision you will be welcomed by us. Hope you will enjoy your honeymoon."

So they parted.

Dora was radiant. She became ardent. When she embraced Bubbles he gasped for air.

"Oh, I love you better every day, Bobby, dear," said Dora one Sunday afternoon, when they were sitting on the sofa.

And Bubbles asked himself anxiously what would become of him if that were only the beginning of her love. Would he not burn to ashes?

Just as the ardent Dora prepared for another embrace the sharp gong of the fire engine sounded in the street. Bubbles pricked up his ears.

"Fire!" he cried, tearing himself away from Dora, rushing to the window and looking out. "It seems to be the hotel opposite. I must go. Will return soon."

With that he gave Dora a hasty kiss and stormed down the stairs. "Being engaged to an ex-reporter has its drawbacks," sighed Dora. "It is always cropping out somewhere."

After two hours Bubbles was back. It had been splendid, this fire—eight persons burned, $15,000 damage. One could see how he had enjoyed it. Dora hoped he would soon give this up, but it did not happen soon.

On a lovely afternoon late in the summer they were sitting happily in the little casino in the park. A sudden clatter of horses' hoofs sounded on the driveway. Then the signal whistle of a policeman.

In a moment two fiery steeds harnessed to an elegant carriage tore past. The coachman on the box was as pale as death. In the carriage sat two fine ladies clutching the sides in sheer fright. A mounted policeman followed.

"There is an accident; excuse me for five minutes, my dear."

And Bubbles hailed a hansom, sprang in and pursued the runaway. A full hour poor Dora was obliged to sit and wait, her love for Bobby abating by degrees. At last he came, beaming.

"All in pieces!" he cried, out of breath. "Ran into a loaded van. One dead, three badly wounded. Policeman fell from his horse, skull smashed. Great!"

He seated himself and related all the details. Dora reproached him.

"Oh, dear child," he laughed, "that is born in me. It is as if a hare ran past an old hunter. I will improve with time."

One evening they were on their way to the theatre. All at once the cry was heard: "Stop thief! Stop thief!" and a man shot past as quick as an arrow, pursued by policemen and others.

"Here is your ticket. I will come soon," said Bubbles.

He pressed it into her hand, and, like one possessed, yelling "Stop thief!" rushed off before Dora realized what had occurred.

"That is too crazy," said she to herself.

In the entrance she waited, but as no Bobby appeared she betook herself angrily to her seat. Only at the beginning of the last act did he arrive.

"Forgive me," he whispered, as he let himself sink into the cushioned seat. "Wonderful story. Great diamond robbery. The fellow—"

"S-st!" sounded from those near by, as they scowled at Bubbles.

"——Broke in through the cellar. Three necklaces every——"

"S-st! S-st!"

"——$5,000 worth. Tell you later."

Dora nudged him and he was silent. After the performance, when they were in a restaurant, she gave him a sound scolding. He promised to do better. But that was no easy matter to bring about. He was indeed hopeless.

Dora lost all pleasure in her engagement. She always feared that a fire alarm or an ambulance might destroy a kiss or an embrace and cause Bubbles to flee. Every day she grew more nervous, and when on her birthday, Bubbles came three hours late to a cold dinner because he had been present at a great fight on the west side of the city, her decision was made. The day after, Bubbles received a letter from Dora which said:

"Sir: You are without doubt just as excellent a reporter as you are totally unfit for an engaged man. Return to the Daily Steam Whistle. That is your wife."

When Bubbles read the letter he scratched his red head and said:

"Poor Dora! But she is right. I am no good as a fiance. If I had only not gone with Crane to Mamaronegg! That poetical donkey got me into it."

Then my friend Bubbles returned to the Steam Whistle and wrote a humorous article, "What It Is To Be Engaged," while Dora began a new necktie.

Not so very long ago a safe expert was summoned from New York city all the way to Mexico, with his expenses paid, in order to open a time lock safe in which the mechanism had stopped.

The cargador, or carrier of Mexico, is a remarkable individual. Nothing seems too bulky, nothing too heavy for him to carry, and it is quite wonderful how he manages not only to lift, but to balance his cumbersome loads. It is nothing for a man to carry a load weighing 400 pounds.

The people in Whiting, Me., have found new employment recently which proves to be a very lucrative business. It is that of hunting for honey made by wild bees, and John Crosby and his brother went out in the woods and found a tree with 227 pounds of the delicious compound inside.

Nearly all the fashionable tailors in large eastern cities now carry adjuncts to their business in the form of impecunious young men of good family and high social standing, who are not averse to accepting their clothes gratis, as a return for which they lose no opportunity to boom the tailor who thus supplies them.

The proportional increase in the population of the cities was less during the last ten years than previously.

Aluminum cooking utensils are being pushed by many of the big shops here. They are brought out in shapes as attractive as the fine silver, copper and gold-lined cooking vessels used in wealthy households. The stew pans, terrapin dishes, coffee urns and teakettles of aluminum have now such beauty of contour and finish that they seem almost more appropriate to the dining-room table that to the kitchen.

How to Make the Brain Grow.

Over 25,000 brains of human beings have ben weighed and examined, and a French scientist has lately written an account of the discoveries that have been made. His article has been translated from a French magazine by the Literary Digest. He comes to three important conclusions, as follows:

(1) It is not the weight of a brain that counts. The heaviest brains that have been examined were those of epileptics.

(2) Those who have the largest ideas develop larger brains more quickly than those who have merely active brains.

(3) It is better to have a large brain than a small one, but the main thing is to have the brain well trained and to keep it thinking on large questions.

A Ragtime City.

Moscow seems to be a city where nobody knows with any degree of certainty what time it is. Arthur Symons in his new book on "Cities" says that no two clocks in Moscow agree; even in the best hotels a clock will solemnly strike three a quarter of an hour before its neighbor strikes seven. The confusion is increased by the fashion of sticking up dummy clocks in the streets as advertisements. The maddening moment comes when you have to catch a train at Moscow. The railway timetables are worked on St. Petersburg time, which differs by half an hour from Moscow time. When you are told that the St. Petersburg express leaves at 9 o'clock you are in doubt as to whether it leaves at 8.30, 9 or 9.30 by your carefully adjusted watch.

A strange bequest, noticeable even among the eccentricities of English wills, has been made by the late Jos. Gillott, the pen man, of Birmingham. He gave $250 to his gas man of the $800,000 and more he left.

The Sultan of Turkey employs fifteen secretaries, whose duty it is to translate foreign books for his delectation. If one of them happens to err and translates a book that is distasteful to His Majesty he is simply pitched into the Bosphorus.

In a recent newspaper article a Philippino student at Georgetown University, Ramon Jose Lacson, quotes the record to show that there were universities in the Philippines before institutions of as high a grade were established in the United States.

The expression "baker's dozen," which is in point of fact thirteen, has a history. For a baker in the olden times to give short weight in bread exposed him to considerable penalties, and thus the custom arose of adding an extra loaf to the dozen as compensation for any possible deficiencies in the rest of the batch.

Money For Inventions.

Thousands of inventions are brought out every year that fall flat, and fail simply through a want of ability on the part of inventors to look the matter straight into the face, and find out whether the thing is wanted or not. Among inventions that are wanted, and which are by no means beyond the range of the amateur inventor, we may mention a really good and cheap ironing machine for domestic purposes. There are many improvements in washing machines, mechanical wringing and other apparatus for lightening women's labor in the home, but no really good and cheap ironing machine. It is quite time that some inventor came along to lessen the toil that ironing entails. Besides the heat of the fire, the weight of the iron, burning the hands, and bending the back is quite enough to insure the ready reception of a really good and cheap ironing device for the household.

A good acetylene table lamp is badly wanted, especially in parts of the country where the gas is poor and bad, and where oil lamps and candles are still the prevailing means of artificial illumination. The apparatus must be cheap, able to hold a charge of carbide sufficient for about ten hours, and constructed in such a way that in practice no surplus gas is produced when once the tap is turned off.

Now that photography is so popular among amateurs, there should be no difficulty in making a good, cheap daylight developer for plates. Several have been designed and are on the market for developing films, but a really efficient and cheap plate is still wanted, and will be welcomed by thousands of amateur photographers.—The British Inventor.

The Stomach Not Indispensable.

At a meeting of medical men in Vienna the other day, Dr. Ullman presented a woman, of sixty-two years, whose entire stomach had been removed in an operation for cancer. Nevertheless, she digests all her food and has gained weight since the operation. The doctor stated that the operation of removing the stomach had been successfully performed over twenty times. The stomach really plays only a small part in the complex act of digestion, its principal use being that of a reservoir. Hence it is that without this organ meals have to be taken inconveniently often and unusually small. There are several little organs, of complex chemical function, far more indispensable than the stomach, which are seldom heard of. We could not exist, for instance, without the suprarenal capsules and the pancreas.—Harper's Weekly.

Compulsory Baths.

All new schools in Switzerland have a portion of the ground floor appropriated for baths. Each class bathes about once a fortnight, summer and winter. Soap is used and a warm bath is followed by a cooler one. Sick children and those having skin diseases are excluded.

HOW TO WRITE AN "AD" THAT HITS THE MARK

Results of Ten Years' Psychological Research

By PROF. WALTER D. SCOTT, of the Northwestern University.

EVANSTON, Ill. — Primitive peoples carry on but little business, and crude forms of advertising are sufficient to stimulate the possible trade. It has been but a few centuries since the market place was the centre of business. Here the goods were displayed, and nothing more was needed than a crier to call attention to special features. The buyer examined the goods, and no description was necessary. The method was cumbersome, but nothing better had been thought of. Under such circumstances it was possible to make but few purchases or sales within a single day.

With the advancements of industry new forms of barter have been demanded. These new forms have brought new methods of presenting the merchandise to the customers. The discovery of the printing press and the subsequent improvements in press-work have opened up new possibilities to the advertiser. The merchant is able to carry on business with multitudes, where formerly he could deal only with the individual. Instead of displaying his goods he is forced to depend upon mere printed representations. From the very nature of the case, descriptions are less effective than a personal examination. Competition has become keener, and it has thus forced the business man to pay more attention to his advertising campaigns. The cost of advertising has increased, till now it is a most hazardous undertaking to attempt to compete for the attention of the public. This necessity for advertising with the attendant expense and possibility of failure has caused the advertisers to seek for some sure principles upon which advertising may be founded.

During the last ten years the leading advertising journals have contained editorials and leading articles, in which the need has been described and the hope expressed that psychology, when rightly interpreted, would be to advertising what physiology has been to medicine, and what chemistry, physics and mathematics have been to certain forms of manufacturing.

UNITED BY AGATE CLUB.

In a few cases professional advertisers attempted to give the psychological explanation for certain successes and failures in advertising, but none of them attempted to present the subject in a systematic way. A few professional psychologists carried on psychological investigations which had a relation to advertising, but their endeavors were short lived. It became evident that neither the advertiser nor the psychologist, while working alone, would be able to apply the principles and methods of psychology to the practiced task of the advertiser. To overcome this difficulty of independent labor the Agate Club, of Chicago, organized a plan of united effort. The Agate Club is composed of some of the leading advertisers of America. These gentlemen, through a committee of their members, united with the professional psychologists of a neighboring university in a systematic attempt to construct a practical system of psychology and to base upon it the theory of advertising.

The advertiser does nothing in which he does not attempt to influence the minds of possible customers. The psychologist seeks to explain the working of the minds of these same customers. It would therefore be very strange if the labors of the psychologists should be worthless to the advertiser. As taught to-day psychology is intensely practical, and is nothing more than a systematic attempt to understand the working of these minds of ours.

In reviewing the teachings of all the great psychologists it has been found that there are certain principles and methods which have a decided importance for the advertiser, for they help him to understand the working of the minds of the very individuals whom he is attempting to influence. These practical principles have been gleaned from different psychologists and presented in such a manner that they can be understood by the ordinary business man. It is found that these principles have a practical bearing upon the construction of copy, the choice of styles of type and illustrations, the selecting of media and the placing of the advertisement.

One of the distinct advancements of recent psychologists is the discovery of improved methods of investigation. These methods, which have found universal approval among men of science, are applicable to the work of the advertiser. By means of these methods the value of certain classes of advertisements can be discovered, and thus the poorer advertisements eliminated and the betters one retained. It has been found that successful advertisements are those which awaken the desired mental activity by following the plan which might be deduced from a knowledge of the general principles of psychology.

SIX ESSENTIAL RULES.

In the discussion of the methods of attracting attention the six following rules were presented which are quoted from Mahlin's Magazine and also from The Theory of Advertising, a volume from the press of Small, Maynard & Co., Cambridge, Mass:

"The power of any object to force itself into our attention depends on the absence of counter attractions."

This is one reason why a full-page advertisement is more than twice as effective as a half-page advertisement. It also shows the wisdom of concentration in a single advertisement and the folly of attempting to attract the attention of many things at once by displaying many features in a single advertisement.

"The power of any object to attract our attention depends on the intensity of the sensation aroused."

This shows the wisdom of using certain attractive colors, moving objects, etc., and of placing the advertisement where it will fall within the direct gaze of the eye and make the strongest possible impression.

"The power which any object has to attract our attention, or its attention value, depends on the ease with which we are able to comprehend it."

We turn our attention most readily to those things which speak to us in terms that we can understand with the least possible effort.

This gives one reason for making legibility the chief standard in choosing types. It condemns irrelevant displays, whether in type or illustration. It shows the folly of choosing names for goods which in no way suggest the nature of the goods, or which do not have some striking characteristic.

"The attention value of an object depends on the number of times it comes before us, or on repetition."

Repetition gives an accumulative force to advertisements. An advertisement seen ten times is probably more than ten times as effective as the same advertisement if seen but once. This does not contradict the other principle.

"The attention value of an object depends upon the contrast it forms to the object presented with it, preceding or following it."

Many advertisements repeat just enough of the text or display to identify each one of a series, and yet each advertisement is in the main different from all others, and stands contrasted with the others of the series by the mere presence of the similarities as well as by the difference. Some characteristic feature, even if nothing more than a trade mark, can thus be constantly repeated in such a manner that it serves to give unity to the series which would otherwise have no apparent connection. Repetition and contrast can both be secured at the same time.

"The attention value of an object depends on the intensity of the feeling aroused."

In general, it is to the interest of the advertiser to awaken the more pleasing feelings and emotions. To do this it is not necessary to descend to the ridiculous or to make use of irrelevant words or pictures. The work of the real artist is necessary here, and the successful advertisement writer must be a true artist.

This barest outline in the way in which attention was treated shows in presenting the various principles of psychology and in indicating their relation to advertising. In conducting the work a psychological laboratory specially equipped for testing advertisements has been made use of. Psychologists in different parts of the country have contributed to the results. Some of the leading advertising managers of manufacturing establishments, of railroads and of magazines have been kind enough to construct advertisements according to the principles suggested, and in every way possible they have assisted to make the work practical. They have thus supplied data, and tested principles, and in many ways given assistance without which no psychologist could hope to construct a theory of advertising which would meet the needs of the practical business men of America.—New York World.

Activity of the Heart.

The human heart is practically a force pump, about six inches in length and four inches in diameter. It beats seventy times per minute, 4200 times per hour, 100,800 times per day, 36,792,000 times per year and 2,575,440,000 times in seventy years, which is "man's appointed three-score and ten." At each of these beats it forces two and one-half ounces of blood through the system, 175 ounces per minute, 656¼ pounds per hour, or 703 tons per day. All the blood in the body, which is about thirty pounds, passes through the heart every three minutes. This little organ pumps every day what is equal to lifting 122 tons one foot high, or one ton 122 feet high—that is, one ton to the top of a forty-yard mill chimney, or sixteen persons seven score each to the same height. During the seventy years of a man's life this marvelous little pump, without a single moment's rest, night or day, discharges the enormous quantity of 178,850 tons of blood.

Trouble Over Water Rights.

The States of Kansas and Colorado are having a legal battle over the Arkansas River, the questions in dispute having been set before the United States Supreme Court. Kansas claims that Colorado should not be allowed to use the waters of the river for irrigation purposes, because it interferes with her use of them; and Colorado retorts that the use of the water in Colorado does not lessen the volume of the stream in Kansas; besides, she says, that the Supreme Court has no jurisdiction over the case, anyhow, because the Arkansas River is not a navigable stream.

THE UNION.

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama.

Wallace C. Edler, Ed. and Pub

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.

For advertising rates, call at the office, Sixth street, opposite court house.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

PAY YOUR POLL TAX BEFORE FEBRUARY 1st, 1904, or you can't vote for anything at any time in 1904. DO NOT SLEEP ON YOUR RIGHTS. Make it your business to see the tax collector AT ONCE, and pay up. Don't put it off, for you might get sick or something might happen so that your opportunity would pass. A great many of our people think that the poll tax was put on the voluntary plan, so as to disfranchise a lot of careless white voters in the country beats. If that is so, DON'T give the democrats the satisfaction of disfranchising you. PAY YOUR POLL TAX and vote a straight PEOPLE'S ticket in 1904, and show them "where you are at." PAY YOUR POLL TAX; it goes direct to the children of the community in which you pay, to help educate them, and no man should begrudge paying his money to such a cause. PAY YOUR POLL TAX. tf

TEXAS DELEGATES MUST BE UNBIASED.

San Antonio, Tex., January 17.—Private instructions have just been given to the leaders of the republican party in Texas that no federal office holders are to be permitted to go as delegates to the national republican convention.

These instructions are said to come from the national committee to all state leaders, and are given out as the expressed wish of the president, who desires that if he be renominated it be not by a committee dominated by federal office holders.

If the federal office holders in Alabama be disbarred, according to the above article, there are not enough Roosevelt republicans in the state to "wad a gun." The entire strength of the Roosevelt referees are office holders and their offices are what keeps them in the ranks. Take away the collectors, marshals, postmasters, janitors, etc., from the referees and their following would be, nil. The entire force was gathered by PURCHASE, and PURCHASE ONLY. If the government inspectors would do their duty and see to it that federal officials stayed in their offices and attended to the duties for which they draw pay, instead of running over their districts trying to corral committees and delegates, it would tend to give the public better service. Roosevelt theories and Roosevelt practices are as wide apart as the poles.

THE BOB-TAILS.

The report in the Banner, the black and tan organ, as to the gathering of the bob-tails at the court house on the 11th inst., may be correct, we neither know nor care; but that part that relates to the meeting of the regular republican committee is NOT TRUE.

W. F. ALDRICH'S WAY.

In the latter part of 1902, when W. F. Aldrich submitted to this writer a string of resolutions that he wanted the Chilton county republican committee to pass, condemning the republican convention that met at Birmingham in September, 1902, we told him that the republicans of Chilton would not do it, as they were thoroughly in accord with the acts of that convention. Aldrich said he did not care if there was not but a half dozen in the county, that a few would answer his purpose, as he did not care if he had only a skeleton of a party, so long as it conformed to his views. While these may not be his exact words, the substance is the same, and as our opinions on this subject were diametrically opposed, we agreed to disagree.

The resolutions were NOT passed, but after struggling for a year and a half, by the aid of the petty federal offices which he seems to have on his bargain counter and with promises, etc., he has scared up his half-dozen, with one over, as the actions of his "bob-tail" contingent showed on the 11th inst.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

We call our readers' attention to the advertisement of Dr. A. B. Horn, the Clanton dentist. He will devote two days in the week to visiting the towns of Jemison, Verbena and Thorsby, where he will be pleased to meet his many old patrons and any new ones that are in need of a first class dentist. Try him.

FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

At the county alliance meeting in Dale county last week steps were taken toward reorganizing the state alliance at the regular session in July. The national central committee of the peoples' party is called to meet at St. Louis, February 22d, to fix a time and place for a national convention. There ought to be a good turn out in Chilton county at the county alliance meeting at Union on Tuesday, January 26th, 1904.

Clanton, Ala., Jan. 18th, 1904.
Editor Union:

You will Please Give me space in your columns to say a Few words to the public in the interest of the Republican Party. A am excedingly sorrow That the Committy split at there meeting on the 11th Inst., they are the same committy That was endorsed By the Republican State Convention at Birmingham, on the 17th day of Sept. 1902. I have thought over the matter seriously, and as I have Ever Ben wiling to Be governed By a majority, I am compelled to say That I for one, shall stand By them, so you will find me at work for the Thorsby convention, though I think if the Chairman had called a massmeeting at First, it would Ben the Best. But as that wasent Done I think it is The Duty of every true Republican to Work for the Thorsby convention. Respectfully, MOSES A. KILLGORE.

In regard to the above letter, we will state that Mr. Killgore mistakes in some of his statements therein. First, there wasn't any republican state convention at Birmingham on the 17th day of September, 1902. Second, The REGULAR COMMITTEE at their official session on the 11th inst. passed a resolution ordering Chairman J. B. Downs to call a mass convention of republicans at CLANTON on FEBRUARY 13TH, 1904. The proceedings of the REGULAR committee were published in last week's UNION over the signature of the secretary, Hon. Alex G. Dake. Maybe Mr. Killgore alludes to the gathering of black and tan postmasters (that was reported in their organ, the Banner, last week), which is said to have got together after the REGULAR committee had transacted its business and ADJOURNED. While there is no law to prevent such people getting together and "resoluting" as much as they please, they have not a particle of right to speak for the regular republican committee; they are just individuals and only represent themselves (and their referee boss).

The REGULAR REPUBLICAN CONVENTION will MEET at CLANTON on February 13th, 1904.

EDITOR UNION.

Pleasant Grove, January 16, 1904.
Editor Union—

Please allow me space in your paper to express some thoughts in regards to politics. First I will say that I can not afford to be a democrat. There are many reasons why I am not a democrat, but the grandest reason is this one: I say frankly that poor, honest man can live under a democratic administration. I've never forgotten old Grover's yet, and never will. Some democrats say that republicans are so full of negroism that you could smell it. Maybe so, but it reminds me of a fellow wearing green spectacles; everything looks green to him. So with the democrats; they are so ultimately full of negroism themselves that I can't see how they can smell any republican, no matter how black he is. I will say this for the democrats, that to be a democrat is the best they know; for it is a fact that many people run to meanness through pure ignorance. So don't blame them, but think to yourself, "Poor fellow; he don't know any better." Hoping that they may see the error of their way and turn and live, I am yours for success.

A REPUBLICAN RAM.

COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

There was a special session of the board of county commissioners Monday, the 18th inst., held to consider a petition from beats 5 and 10, to order an election for the purpose of repealing the stock law that was foisted upon them several years ago without their consent. The petition was signed by a large majority of the land owners in the district and the board of commissioners unanimously ordered an election to be held on Monday, February 29th, 1904. The entire board was present at the meeting. "Let the majority rule."

JAPAN SENDS HER REPLY

Answer to Note Handed to Minister de Rosen.

No Time Limit Has Been Set For Reply —Disturbances in Seoul—Japan Takes Liners.

London, Eng.—A dispatch from Seoul represents that city as being in a state of panic. The natives are threatening the train service.

The Russian Legation guards are filled with religious frenzy. The American marines have each been furnished with 100 rounds of ammunition. They are guarding, in addition to the United States Legation, the electric light and railway station, which is American property.

The palace population also is in a panicky condition. The Emperor has issued a pitiful edict, saying that the country may be lost soon, but the sloth and weakness of the people themselves are answerable for the conditions prevailing. The edict adds that they must act as seems best for their own interests.

M. Pavloff, the Russian Minister, is ready to receive the Emperor at the legation if he flees from the palace. His Majesty has issued an ordinance to the army ordering the troops not to fire in the event of a clash with foreign troops.

There are 7000 native soldiers in the city. The position of the foreigners is unpleasant, but all of them are armed and prepared to resist attack. The whole country is extremely turbulent.

The Japanese residents are aggressive and somewhat contemptuous. The Emporor and residents of the city are sending money away. The Chinese, expecting a change of government, are speculating wildly in land values.

Warships of all the Powers are at Chemulpo, and they all have sent marines to Seoul.

Pekin, China. — Both the Japanese and Russian legations here regard war as practically certain, and their views are shared by members of the British and American legations.

The alleged outline of the Russian note in reply to the Japanese proposals, emanating in Berlin and cabled here, has created a decided sensation. It is commented upon as bearing the marks of credibility.

No one here doubts that Japan will make war in support of her claim to an interest in the status of Manchuria as an important part of her national policy.

The Russian Legation says unequivocally that Russia will fight to defend her assertion that no nation except herself and China has any standing in the settlement of Manchurian questions.

Japan, through M. Uchida, her Minister here, and the Chinese Minister at Tokio, is impressing upon China the necessity of keeping out of the war. The Chinese Minister to Japan has telegraphed the Government that China's policy should be to keep neutral, protect foreigners and maintain order among her own people.

Tokio, Japan.—It is announced that Japan has replied to the last note from Russia. Baron Komura, Minister of Foreign Affairs, visited Baron de Rosen, the Russian Minister, who is still so indisposed that he remains indoors, and it is credibly asserted presented Japan's answer.

It is said that the reply reaffirms Japan's position and asks Russia to reconsider her attitude. It is understood that no time limit for a reply from Russia is mentioned.

San Francisco, Cal.—A cablegram to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company announces that the Japanese Government has impressed into transport service the three steamships of the Oriental Steamship Company, plying between this city and the Far East.

The vessels are the Nippon Maru, the Hongkong Maru and the America Maru. They are fast boats, built in 1898, and have been under Japanese subsidy. A few months ago they passed Government inspection.

ST. LOUIS GETS CONVENTION.

Democrats Decide to Hold National Gathering There on July 6.

Washington, D. C.—The next Democratic National Convention will be held in the city of St. Louis on July 6.

Representatives of Chicago and New York made strong arguments before the Democratic National Committee, but St. Louis won the plum by seven votes.

The first ballot showed twenty-three for St. Louis, twenty for Chicago and six for New York. The second and final vote was twenty-eight for St. Louis and twenty-one for Chicago.

St. Louis, whose claims are set forth by Mayor Wells and C. M. Knapp, of that city, offered $40.000 and the free use of a coliseum seating 12,000.

Chicago offered $45,000, but there were certain strings to the offer, which did not suit many of the members of the committee.

The building up of the American Navy goes steadily forward. Contracts were recently awarded for the construction of the three new 16,000-ton battleships of the Vermont class, authorized by Congress. The Vermont alone is to cost $4,179,000, and all three of the vessels are to be completed within three years and a half. Our "new navy" comes rather high, but our position as a nation is such that we must maintain it at a high standard, no matter what the cost.

It is estimated that from the invention of printing to the present time about 12,500,000 separate publications entitled to rank as books have been put forth. This estimate is speculative to a large degree. It serves to remind one, however, of how small a drop from the great sea of printer's ink goes into the editions even of such literary "rush" years as we are witnessing.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

The annual dinner for the Diplomatic Corps was given in the White House by President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

The House Committee on Labor fixed February 4 as the date to begin hearings on the eight-hour bill.

The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation Bill was passed, provision for expenses of the Civil Service Commission being restored and an amendment adopted restricting use of Government horses and carriages to the President, his secretary and members of the Cabinet.

The House Committee on Insular Affairs ordered a resolution to be reported to the House authorizing the Quartermaster-General of the Army to bring 600 school teachers from Porto Rico to the United States.

Following the lead of the Government departments the working hours of all employes of the District of Columbia have been increased half an hour a day.

A bill was introduced by Senator Quay authorizing the President to appoint Major-General John R. Brooke a Lieutenant-General on the retired list.

The Senate in executive session laid on the table the motion to reconsider the confirmation of the nomination of W. I. Buchanan to be Minister to Panama.

John J. McCardy, of St. Paul, Minn., was appointed Auditor for the Post-office Department to succeed Henry A. Castle, also of Minnesota, resigned.

The United States Supreme Court rendered an opinion sustaining the validity of the New York statute relating to the adulteration of food products.

OUR ADOPTED ISLANDS.

The Most Rev. J. J. Harty, the newly appointed Archbishop of Manila, has arrived in the Philippines.

A member of the House of Delegates of Porto Rico said that two articles of the law amending the code of criminal procedure, which was passed last year, have disappeared from the statutes.

Herman, the former inspector of constabulary, who robbed the Philippine Government and turned pirate, and who escaped from the jail at Cebu, where he was incarcerated after his capture, has been recaptured as he was attempting to cross the island of Bohol.

The new wireless telegraph stations at San Juan and Culebra, Porto Rico, have been opened.

The Philippine Government has decided to file additional charges against W. D. Ballentine, ex-inspector at the port of Manila, and John T. Miller, an ex-inspector of immigration, both of whom were recently acquitted of the charge of conspiracy to import Chinese coolies into the Philippine Islands.

The Philippine Commission has passed an act prohibiting the importation of Mexican currency.

The expeditionary force under command of General Wood, now at Camp Overton, around Lake Lanao, in the Philippines, includes eight companies of infantry, a detachment of cavalry and two batteries of artillery.

More than sixty sailors deserted from the American fleet at Honolulu, as reported for the purpose of joining the Russian Navy, under the promise of a large increase in pay offered by Admiral Alexieff.

DOMESTIC.

Fifteen churches in Chicago, Ill., were closed in consequence of the Iroquois Theatre fire.

The Grand Jury investigating municipal corruption in Milwaukee, Wis., returned three more indictments.

The office of the Pittsfield (Mass.) Gas Company was blown to pieces by a gas explosion, the damage being $10,000.

The Board of Arbitrators to settle differences between building contractors and laborers in Minneapolis, Minn., decided in favor of the contractors.

The second Grand Jury to investigate the lynching of a negro at Pineapple, Ala., has refused to indict the five men held for the crime.

Domestic unhappiness caused George Corn, a well-to-do farmer, to murder his wife and himself, near Asheville, N. C.

The Union National and Colonial Banks at Cleveland, Ohio, were consolidated, with Senator Hanna as President.

Seven more indictments were returned at Milwaukee, Wis., by the Grand Jury in the municipal bribery scandals.

Myron T. Herrick was inaugurated Governor of Ohio before a large assemblage. His message dealt chiefly with the question of Ohio finances, and advocated the passage of a State depository law.

The South Carolina Legislature convened and listened to the Governor's message.

The sixteen-story Unity Building, in Chicago, Ill., built for $800,000, was sold for $250,000 under foreclosure proceedings.

Because her children had been beaten by their school teacher, Miss Mary Douglas, Mrs. Mary Zeaman went to the school and publicly beat the teacher. She was sentenced to ninety days in jail.

Guilty of murdering seven Blackfoots, one of them his wife, James Little Plume was sentenced at Helena, Mont., to forty years' imprisonment.

Under indictment for embezzlement, William A. Mathews was found dead in a hotel in Atlanta, Ga., with an empty morphine bottle beside him.

FOREIGN.

The Premier of France, M. Combes, again gained a decided victory, in a vote of confidence, after an exciting debate over the recent disturbances on the Bourse du Travail.

Emperor William opened the Prussian Diet with new ceremonies, including a royal procession, preceded by heralds bearing the Hohenzollern arms.

The Spanish naval program provides for the immediate construction of four cruisers and forty auxiliary vessels and the reorganization of the entire service.

The efforts made last summer to break the monotony of life in the city's charitable institutions by providing entertainment for the inmates had one result which surprised the authorities. It has been noticed that the attendants at the City Home for the Aged and Infirm developed a greater consideration for the unfortunates under their care after the musical entertainments than they had shown before. The good effects of the band concerts were not only in the direct pleasure afforded to the inmates, but existed afterward in the practical details of their daily lives. An innovation introduced in the department was a series of excursions in one of the department boats for the inmates of the Home, by means of which 600 men and women were treated to a sail about the Sound, the bay and the North River. These excursions were enjoyed thoroughly by the inmates, and they exercised a very beneficial effect on the institution, according to the authorities.

Edward Atkinson says mud will be the substitute for coal, which will enable the consumer to issue a new declaration of independence. If that is the case, we shall all be ready to celebrate two Fourths of July.

It will be interesting to see how Boston's church census compares with that of New York, as far as it has proceeded, says the Boston Herald editorially. Manhattan Island has been divided into four sections, and the returns from the first one, containing a population of 438,065, shows 100,061 church attendants, of whom thirty-three per cent. are Protestants and sixty-seven per cent. are Catholics. It is noticeable that the census is being taken on Sundays in New York, instead of on week days.

An Appreciation of Herbert Spencer.

By Prof. Goldwin Smith.

THE death of Herbert Spencer removes from the scene a great intelligence and an eminent benefactor of his kind. His influence extended far beyond his own country. He had more readers in America than in Great Britain, and his works were translated into almost all the European languages. No one ever was more thoroughly dedicated to the pursuit of truth. For some years he was not only dedicated, but self-sacrificed to it. The scantiness of Milton's payment for "Paradise Lost" is a byword. Herbert Spencer's early works required for their publication the aid of friends, and it is strange to compare his wages with those of the writers of second rate novels.

Spencer is entitled to rank among discoverers, for he treated the mental development of men on the principle of evolution some years before the appearance of the "Origin of Species." As a moral philosopher he dealt with the moral and social nature of men by a method derived from his study of biological science. If the results of that method leave something to be desired when it is applied to the spiritual and aesthetic elements of humanity it was in itself sound as well as an antidote to chimeras and fallacies.

In the conflict between Spencer and Carlyle, Carlyle is logically annihilated; yet we feel that something perhaps not logical or biological is left. Spencer was a thoroughgoing free thinker. He came at a time when the old traditions and sanctions had been destroyed or undermined by science and criticism while nothing had yet come to take their place. But he was not destructive; on the contrary, he was a builder of morality and society on a biological foundation, and his work, if it is not destined to be final, will certainly be lasting. Nor was he an enemy of religion; his feeling toward the power which manifests itself in the universe was essentially different from that which is excited by mere power and identical with that which forms the groundwork of religion. Still more did he deserve the epithet of religious in its comprehensive sense by his entire dedication of himself to the higher life and the disinterested pursuit of truth. Sint anima nostra cum illa.—New York Sun.

PROGRESS.

What we are all here through struggle, through the fruits our fathers won,
Makes us brothers strong and worthy in the course still to be run—
Who shall say the end is useless, or the mighty labor done?

Systems still go blown to stone and the earth will meet its doom,
In the eye of all the heavens man is ever in his tomb,
But we see the smallest blossom still out-bursting into bloom.

Just alone that man is noble, just alone that he have worth,
Just alone that he shall ripen what was seed in him at birth,
Is a more imperial problem than the end of all the earth.

Human progress still points peaceward and still further from the brute—
Let the end be hidden from me, let eternity be mute,
I will struggle on and upward as the flower from the root.

—J. Oppenheim, in Youth's Companion.

THE GIRL ACROSS THE STREET.

Polly sat on the other side of the table making tea. She wore a ridiculous little apron (for nothing but show) about the size of a handkerchief and a housewifely expression that she always dons on such occasions. Suddenly she glances up.

"Look! Quick! Out of the window, Jack. No, the other way. There she goes."

"By Jove, what a pretty girl!" I exclaimed. "Who is she?"

"But you were looking the wrong way," said Polly, "and that wasn't the girl I meant."

"I was looking at the girl across the street," I said, "and she was quite the prettiest girl I have ever seen—except one," I added dutifully.

Polly set the kettle down with a thump that jarred the teacups.

"Of course she was!" she exclaimed. "The girl across the street always is. There isn't a man living who doesn't worship some girl across the street. She's like the girl you couldn't get, the fish you didn't catch and the cake you didn't eat."

"But that girl! Why, Polly, she was Titian—"

"Per-oxide!"

"——and Gibson——"

"Conceited!"

"——And Burne-Jones——"

"Loud!"

"——All in one!"

Polly sighed as she turned to put a light under the kettle.

"It's always that way," she said resignedly. "The girl across the street, like the girl he didn't get, always is a man's ideal. If he never marries, he carries her image about in his heart or her photograph about in his pocket and uses it for a standard with which to compare all the other women he may meet. If he does marry somebody else she becomes a sweet memory that rises every time his wife burns the biscuits or forgets to take her hair out of curl papers. Why it is?" and Polly tilted her little nose upward until she looked almost dignified, "that the mere fact that a girl doesn't want to marry a man makes him wild to get her?"

"Polly," said I, "do you remember when you were a very little girl how you used to lie awake nights trying to catch Santa Claus? Do you recollect how the jam on the top shelf was always the kind you liked best? Did you never long to see the other side of the moon, or eat what wasn't good for you, or play with the naughty little girl whom you were forbidden to speak to? It's human nature. The illusive, the unattainable, the thing we cannot get always has been and always will be the thing we want."

Polly pushed back a little curl that will get into her eyes, and began cutting lemon meditatively.

"Yes," she agreed, "but it's different with a woman. She always feels a sort of resentment toward the man who won't fall in love with her, while a man rather respects a woman for refusing him, and admires her for snubbing him. The longer she remains on the other side of the street——"

"That is it," I broke in, "the longer she remains on the other side of the street. But I have observed that it is generally very easy to cross over yourself, and then——"

"And then she is no longer the girl across the street," broke in Polly, waving half a lemon triumphantly. "Then she loses her illusion, her attraction. It is as if you had turned the limelight off of the leading lady in the play. Her Titian hair becomes red; you observe that her nose turns up at the end; her diamonds are only paste, and her figure is nothing more nor less than the result of wearing a straight front corset. The stock market falls and you are glad to sell out your interest in the girl at the very lowest figure. The very fact that she has succumbed to your entreaties or your fascinations, the very fact that she loves you, or is willing to flirt with you——"

"Polly, will you put down that lemon. It's taking the color out of me already."

Polly subsided.

"Let me ask you," I went on, seriously, "why, if you girls know all this, do you so often cross the street yourselves?"

"What do you mean?" said Polly.

"You send us sofa pillows," I retorted. Polly winced.

"And necktie cases," I went on, "and invite us to violet teas."

Polly nearly burned her nose trying to look into the kettle.

"And you call on our mammas and make them sewing bags. And our sisters have more feminine friends than any other girl in the neighborhood."

"Mr. Heavyfeather," said Polly, "will you kindly pass the sugar?"

I passed.

Polly took two lumps with the dignity of a tragedy queen.

"It is evident," she remarked in a tone like the trickling of ice water, "that your charms have made you a victim of feminine attentions. But," she continued, "there are girls and girls. The kind to whom you have reference never were like the girl on the other side of the street. They never gave you nor any other man an opportunity to observe them from a distance.

"You never had any perspective on them at all. They were the nine girls out of ten. But there is always the tenth girl, and she is the girl across the street, the girl of whom you are never quite sure, the girl who has eluded you. Can you not recollect, in all your varied and interesting career, any woman who has escaped you, who has talked with you, flirted with you, chummed with you, but whom you have never gotten really near, who has never broken the charm by pursuing you or meeting you half way, who has made you feel always that you were standing a little way off, who has kept you fascinated simply because she insists on remaining across the street, simply because, although she is tender and frank and true, she reserves a little bit of her soul and builds a fence about her individuality that no man dares break down? Have you never known a woman who would be as interesting to you if you had married her as she is now that you haven't got her?"

I blew the smoke of my cigarette reflectively. It is always amusing to hear Polly talk sensibly, because—well—because her pompadour is fluffy and her nose is retrousse—and in that nonsensical apron—well—

"Ye-es," I began slowly; "now that you come to mention it, there was once a girl—"

"I didn't ask for particulars, Mr. Heavyfeather."

"The most beautiful girl I ever knew——"

"Will you have some more tea, Mr. Heavyfeather?"

"The cleverest—"

"One lump or two?"

"The girl with the greatest amount of common sense—"

"Lemon?"

"And she was the girl across—"

"I don't want to know!"

"The girl across—"

"I won't listen!"

"The girl across——"

Polly rose in righteous wrath.

"The girl across the table!"

And the kettle bubbled merrily.—Helen Rowland, in Washington Post.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF A FLASH.

Pictures Showing the Progressive Stages of an Explosion.

The present development of chronophotography—the rapid successive production of instantaneous pictures such as are used in the cinematograph—gives us an opportunity to study the different phases of many phenomena that take place in too brief a time to be analyzed in ordinary ways. Now a French investigator, M. Albert Londe, has used it to investigate the explosion of ordinary flash-light powder. The results of his experiments, which bring out several curious facts and give us valuable information about all explosions of this general type, are given in La Nature.

The different phases of the combustion can be very clearly followed; the luminous point, very small at first, grows rapidly larger, until it reaches its maximum, and then are distinguished the folds of the magnesia cloud, whose illumination decreases.

We see that there is here a real explosion, since the particles of magnesia are projected in all directions. The intensity of these projections and their aspect vary according to the composition of the powders. The peculiarities of a magnesium-powder explosion as observed by chronophotography are, first, that it has three periods, respectively, of increase, maximum and decrease of light, whose lengths vary with the composition of the powder; second, that the volume of the light depends not only on the amount of powder burned, but also on its composition; third, that some of the powder is usually hurled about by the explosion before it has time to burn, which explains some anomalous results and is a bad trait; fourth, that rapidity of ignition and rapidity of burning are two different things. As we have seen above, a powder may ignite slowly and burn rapidly, or it may inflate with speed and yet burn slowly. In the latter case the powder loses a great part of its usefulness.

Courtship in Caracas.

After the meal is finished the "padre" may go to his club or cafe, while the ladies betake themselves to the large open bay window. Lamps are placed near them, and as you wander through the streets you plainly see everywhere, at the height of your own eyes and quite near enough for a handshake, long rows of these groups of women, now gaily and brilliantly dressed, thickly powdered and bedecked with the quaint old jewelry of the country.

Then, by and by, a young man appears in front of almost every window and converses with those inside. In most cases he is the suitor for the hand of one of the daughters of the house. Evening after evening he thus pays his respects to her family, standing for hours on the sidewalk, till the mother of his adored one believes the fact of his courting her daughter is sufficiently advertised to the neighbors, as well as to the community at large. Then only the doors of the house are thrown open to him.—Harpers Magazine.

ART OF MOOSE TRACKING

THE CRAFT OF THE BEAST IN ELUDING HIS PURSUERS.

One of the Marvels of the Woods Is How Indian Guides Know When to Make the Detour to the Windward.

The Hull (Canada) correspondent of the New York Sun writes as follows:

The last fall of snow was a blessing to hunters able to take advantage of it in tracking moose and red deer.

Two men from this locality who were in the deer country at the time were also taught that they had still much to learn about stalking moose. They found the great single tracks left by the creature, whose hind foot just reaches and fits in the print of its forefoot, and easily followed them.

As they noted the prodigious length—over five feet—of the stride, they congratulated themselves upon being on the trail of an immense specimen of its kind, and pushed on hastily. The fact was that the long reach showed they had somehow frightened the timid brute, which was using all its trotting power to get away from them.

After some hours hard travel they heard a disturbance in the woods to the left of their path, and just got a peep at a bull moose dashing away. Making sure that the woods were full of moose, they determined not to be turned aside from the one they were following.

About a hundred yards further on they found that the tracks wheeled about suddenly. Tracing them along, they were soon driven to the uncomfortable idea that the moose they had seen was the one they had been following, and that it had doubled like a hare and raced away at their approach.

A few miles further on they again caught sight of a swiftly retreating moose to their left side. Then the hunters remembered a few of the tales they had heard about the craftiness of moose, and also awoke to the fact that the wily old bull always doubled down the wind, so that it might be informed by both scent and hearing of the approach of its enemies.

Proceeding now with the greatest caution, and keeping to the right, merely within sight of the tracks, but always endeavoring to keep trunks of branches of trees to screen their progress upon their left flank, they were, after a whole day's work, at last rewarded by a sight of the big body of their quarry reclining in the snow, the antlered head against its side toward is former track, resting, but decidedly on guard.

Both of the men were good quick shots, and the chance was too good to lose. At a range of 40 yards rifles instantly rang out, but without any apparent result upon the reclining moose. Again they fired, without much thought in their excitement of what they did, when one exclaimed as he ejected the spent cartridge:

"What fools we are! The first shot much have killed him, or he would have jumped."

Sure enough, both balls had entered its brain, inflicting instant death.

The habit of doubling about before stopping, so that it may have a good view of its former path, to ascertain if it is being tracked, is one of the invariable tricks of the moose. How the Indian and half breed guides acquire the judgment which enables them to decide where to leave the tracks of the moose, and make sufficient detour to get to windward of their halting place, is one of the marvels of the woods.

A green hunter, travelling along with Joe Beaudouin on snowshoes, was greatly surprised when the guide stepped aside from the deep tracks he was following and struck out rapidly in a direction at almost right angles to them. About ten minutes afterward he motioned his companion to his side and pointed out a fine moose standing at a little distance in the deep snow, intently gazing away from them toward its former path.

When the rifle had been levelled through the sheltering branches, and carefully sighted, the trigger fell upon a bad cartridge with a click, which appeared to the excited young man to be as noisy as a thunder bolt in the intense stillness of the frosty air. The moose swung about hastily, tossed its great head, pivoted the long asinine ears, stamped impatiently and actually started as though to investigate the meaning of the sound, giving ample time to turn out the faulty cartridge, to take a fresh aim and fire.

Badly hurt though it was this time, the moose persisted in its course until the guide's weapon spoke, when it fell face to the foe, with a broken shoulder.

Beaudouin laughed immoderately as he carefully slipped in a second cartridge before approaching him.

"He's jus' as mad as everything to find cut we fool him," he said in explanation of his mirth.

Sometimes, when the state of the bush allows of its moving noiselessly, the moose makes sure of the passing of its enemy, and then takes up its own track, going in the opposite direction and, if the snow is deep, artfully stepping in its own footmarks. Thus one of a camping party of hunters, who was "tumping" along provisions, a long way behind his companions, was staggering along with bowed neck and eyes, when he almost ran into a moose coming toward him. As the moose caught sight of him the big fellow turned tail and the man, slinging off his burden and swinging round his rifle with one movement, took a snap shot at it.

Fortunately he missed, for the moose instantly stopped and turned to see what all the noise was about. The second shot, fired as the moose presented its quarters, took effect in the lungs, and the wounded animal, wheeling again, ran along its old track at full speed until it very nearly charged into the other members of the party, who were returning to seek their friend, and who gave it its quietus in a fusillade of bullets.

Just at this time of year a dog is very useful to the experienced moose hunter. It must be small, and ought to be trained to keep silence until at the very heels of the moose.

Often, though not always, the lordly brute refuses to be chased by a mere cur, like one of the Indian dogs generally used in this business. Turning around, it tries to crush the yelping beast with its great forefoot.

The dog, with the perversity of its breeding, sticks to the rear of the moose, and a curious teetotum movement is the result. The hunter immediately gets to the windward when he hears the barking of the dog and with the greatest caution endeavors to get to the seat of action as quickly as possible.

The moose is well known to be of an irascible temperament, and soon works itself into a rage if unsuccessful in its attempts upon the life of the dog. But though a very demon of bad temper at such a time, its senses are generally on the alert against other dangers.

If the wind should bring to its ears or scent any sign of the presence of men, no mere cur will hinder its flight toward safety. The hunter generally has to take long chances at such times, and nearly always has to make long shots at the rapidly whirling moose. As a rule, none but the most experienced woodsmen ever kills moose with the help of a setter.

NO ITALIAN THERE A PAUPER.

That is What King Emmanuel Hears of Louisiana.

Some surprising facts concerning the Italians of Louisiana have been brought out by the visit to New Orleans of the Italian cruiser Liguria, under the command of the Duke of the Abruzzi, cousin to the king of Italy. The Duke of the Abruzzi is visiting those ports to which there has been a large emigration of Italians, and his mission is to report as to their industrial and moral condition. These ports include New Orleans, Havana, Bahia, Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, Valparaiso and San Francisco.

A prejudice was supposed to exist in New Orleans against Italians on account of the Parish Prison lynching and other events growing out of the operations of the Mafia. So strongly was this notion entertained that no Italian man-of-war or official has been to the port since the Parish Prison affair.

To his own surprise and that of the Americans, the Duke of the Abruzzi has reported that the condition of the Italian colony of Louisiana could not be better; that he could not find an Italian out of work there, or one in all Louisiana who needed assistance, and that as a consequence the fund raised for charity by the Italian societies, to which he contributed $500, was given, not to the Italian poor, because there were none, but to educational and philanthropic institutions.

The Duke further reported that he found the moral improvement as great as the industrial advance, and the spirit of patrictism strong. He recommended, therefore, that an Italian man-of-war be sent to New Orleans at least once a year, to keep alive the friendly relations between the Italian emigrants and their mother country.

This state of affairs in a city where the Mafia flourished only a few years ago, where the profession of bravo was carried on, where popular prejudice more than once broke out in anti-Italian riots, was regarded as evidence of the extraordinary progress made by the Italians.

After the Parish Prison lynchings there was a decrease in the Italian population of New Orleans. Today the Italian population is twice as great as it was when the mob outbreak occurred.

The Italians have already crowded the creoles out of the old city of New Orleans, the veiux carre of Bienville, and are scattered throughout the city. In the parishes they are rapidly crowding the negroes out of the sugar districts of southern Louisiana.

There are perhaps 25,000 Italians in New Orleans and 60,000 in the state, including their children, and that there should not be a pauper among them is to their credit. Nor do they crowd into the towns like the other immigrants. Alone among the foreigners landing at New Orleans they go to the country first and work on farms.

In a few years the more enterprising have saved up enough from their wages to move to New Orleans and open a fruit shop, or cobbler's shop, or go into some other business.

On the whole, the most striking feature of the Italian in Louisiana is the fact that he has so taken to agriculture. From New Orleans to Baton Rouge the Italians are rapidly becoming the most numerous race. The negro is easily ousted from the sugar plantations, the Sicilian peasants saving money from wages the negroes can barely live on.

The net result of the Duke's visit is to improve the morals of the Louisiana Italians, to strengthen their ties with Italy and to improve their schools, although the great majority of them send their children to the public schools. It is understood that the Italian government views with favor emigration to the south, and that the belief formerly entertained that the Italian immigrants were treated badly in this section has been completely removed.—New York Sun.

LITERATURE AND WALKERS.

Where Many Writers Drew Their Inspirations.

If one comes to think of it, how much literature owes to the country walk, writes Arnold Haultain in Atlantic Monthly. It was to that long walk outside the wall of Athens and to the long talk of Socrates held with Phaedrus under the plane tree by the banks of the Ilissus that we owe one of the most beautiful Dialogues of Plato. There had been no Georgics had not Virgil loved the country. Horace must as often have circumambulated his Sabine farm as he perambulated the Via Sacra. Chaucer must sometimes have pilgrimed afoot, and Spenser trode as well as pricked o'er the plain. Shakespeare's poaching episode gives us a glimpse into his youthful pursuits. Milton oft the woods among wooed Philomel to hear her evensong; and even after his blindness not the more ceased he to wander where the muses haunt clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill. The Traveler of Goldsmith was the outcome of a walking tour; so was Robert Louis Stevenson's Travels in the Cevennes with a Donkey. To how many minds walks about the green fields of Oxford have been a quiet stimulant we may get a hint from Matthew Arnold. Was it to Newman that Jowett, meeting him alone and afoot, put the query: "Nunquam minus solus quam quum solus?" Of Jowett's walks many a tale is told; of De Quincey, who spent his youth in wanderings; of William Cowper, the gentle singer of the winter walk; of Thoreau; of Mr. John Burroughs; of the prince of walkers, of whom The Spectator said it was "half a pity that such a man could not go walking about forever, for the benefit of people who are not gifted with legs so stout and eyes so discerning"—I mean that erudite nomad, George Borrow; of these and many another lover of outdoor nature it is needless to speak.

Presidential Baby Naming.

President Roosevelt has been more "named after" than any president in the country save Washington. If the present ratio of naming babies for our strenuous chief executive continues for ten years, Theodore Roosevelt will be more deserving the title of "father of his country" than any of his predecessors.

Massachusetts' quota of babies who bear the presidential name is estimated at 40. New England's entire contribution is placed at 100, and during the past two years, he has received letters from at least 500 people informing him that his name is now on the family roll call.

This is one of the ills to which presidential flesh is heir. He does not need to suggest, and he cannot refuse the honor that is thrust upon him. He must smile and bear it, and if convenient acknowledge the tribute that is conferred. However, if President Roosevelt were to answer the letters of all those who have used his name as a stimulus for babyhood, he would have to quadruple his present clerical staff. He has always had the regard of a vast majority of the fathers in the country. But the unanimity with which the mothers endorse him by imprinting his name upon their offspring for life is not the least remarkable fact in the history of this remarkable man.—Boston Advertiser.

Fire Set by Sun's Rays on Glass.

A correspondent, commenting on a paragraph recently published in the San Francisco Chronicle reporting the burning of a haystack near Montanban, France, through the focusing of the sun's rays by an empty glass beer bottle left on the spot by some picnickers, says: "It might interest you to know that such a thing as that is very common in some countries. I spent some years in North Queensland in the 'Never-never land,' and in the summer time we were careful not to leave any glass lying around after breaking camp, as destructive bush fires were often so caused." There is no doubt that many of the forest and possibly some of the grain field fires which spontaneously break out in this state every summer are started by a similar cause.

The coming winter will cause at least one-half of the women to have catarrh, colds, coughs, pneumonia or consumption. Thousands of women will lose their lives and tens of thousands will acquire some chronic ailment from which they will never recover.

Unless you take the necessary precautions, the chances are that you (who read this) will be one of the unfortunate ones. Little or no risk need be run if Peruna is kept in the house, and at the first appearance of any symptom of catarrh taken as directed on the bottle.

Peruna is a safeguard, is a preventative, a specific, is a cure for all cases of catarrh, acute and chronic, coughs, colds, consumption, etc.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

ALL DONE OUT.

Veteran Joshua Heller, of 706 South Walnut street, Urbana, Ill., says: "In the fall of 1899 after taking Doan's Kidney Pills I testified that they had relieved me of kidney trouble, disposed of a lame back with pain across my loins and beneath the shoulder blades. During the interval which has elapsed I have had occasion to resort to Doan's Kidney Pills when I noticed warnings of an attack. On each and every occasion the results obtained were just as satisfactory as when the pills were first brought to my notice. I just as emphatically endorse the preparation to-day as I did over two years ago."

THE ENGLISH BRICK MYTH.

Colonial Houses Built of the Native Article.

At a recent meeting of the Columbia Historical Society in Washington George Alfred Townsend ("Gath") read a paper on the prevalent belief that many of the houses of Colonial times were built of brick imported from England.

Throughout the Atlantic seaboard this myth has held sway for many years past, and nothing is commoner than the assertion that such and such a house "is very old; built in Colonial times of brick from England." The facts that brick were not extensively manufactured in England until the reign of William the First; that the ships of those days were small and carried only such things as were absolutely necessary for the colonists, and that the latter made their own bricks, just as they cut their own wood and cured their winter's supply of bacon, should be sufficient proof, said the speaker, of the unlikelihood of the colonists importing their building material from abroad.

These facts were brought out in the strongest possible light in Mr. Townsend's paper. He showed that such was the scarcity of brick in the England of the days from the Tudors to the House of Orange that the word occurs only once in Shakespeare. He further cited abundant proofs from the history of early America to justify his conclusion that there is not a single building in Virginia, Maryland or Pennsylvania built of English brick, and that the only structure of English brick in the District is that part of the Library of Congress which is known as the court and which was built of cream colored porcelain brick from Leeds, England.

In New England, he stated, there are one or two buildings of English bricks, the proof of which is indisputable, but it is doubtful if there are any buildings in New York made of brick imported from Holland.

Chopin and His Funeral March.

The story of how Chopin composed his wonderful "Funeral March" is related by M. Ziem, the celebrated painter, who still lives on the heights of Monmartre, and despite his great age is clear in his recollection of the facts that occurred over half a century ago. Ziem was the friend and comrade of Chopin, and it was in the former's studio that a Bohemian repast was given, with Ludre, De Polignac, the musician; Ricard, the painter; Chevandier de Valdrome, and Chopin, as gay and festive spirits around the table. There was an old rickety piano in the corner. All the panels having been taken out for pictures, as Ziem was poor, and had to economize. Behind a curtain was a skeleton, and this gave an idea to Ziem, who brought the skeleton out, covered it with drapery, and began to agitate it with realistic effect. De Polignac then took the skeleton to the piano and sat with it as though to make it play. It was at this moment that Chopin, who had been rather quiet, was seized with sudden inspiration. Uttering an ejaculation, he rushed forward to the piano, pushed aside De Polignac, and to the stupefaction and awe of his friends, improvised the world famous "Funeral March." "We were all extremely touched," added Ziem, "and dead silence reigned. We thought no more of laughter, and saluted with respect and admiration the composer's new creation."—Paris Correspondence of London Daily Chronicle.

2,000,000 Italians in France.

There are 2,000,000 Italians in France, chiefly engaged in artistic, educative or laboring pursuits. Most of them are found in the eastern, especially in the southeastern departments, but they are scattered all through the country. On the other hand, there are only 10,000 French in Italy.—London Globe.

Wreath of Human Bones.

On a grave in a cemetery at Chichester, England, there is a wreath which at first glance appears to be a coral. In reality it is composed of human bones. The bones were collected during his travels by the deceased, who carved them with a penknife, and formed them into the wreath which now adorns his grave.

New U. S. Artillery.

The field artillery of the United States army is soon to be equipped with new rapid fire recoil guns, and the five batteries at Fort Riley will be the first to be supplied with the new armament. The guns are now being manufactured in Dusseldorf, Germany, by the Ehrhardt Company. This German pattern was tested at Fort Riley a little more than a year ago with six other guns of modern type. It was also tested at Sandy Hook, N. Y. The guns will be equipped with cylinders, the air pressure in which will dispose of the recoil in firing.

Slaughter on American Railroads.

"The British Parliament would not stand for a day the slaughter that goes on upon the railroads of America," said John Burns, the famous labor member of Parliament, in a recent London speech. His words are emphasized by the fact that last Saturday thirty-two people were killed on our railroads by accidents that might have been prevented.

"The slaughter on our own railroads is bad enough," said Burns, "but it is child's play to what goes on in America. The casualty list of the American railways equals that of a first class war.

"I have been accused of calling industrial America a slaughter house, and if you ask me for proof I point you to the death roll of the brave men who lose their lives in the hoarding up of millions for the railroad magnates."

Last year there were 3,600 people killed by the railroads—nearly ten a day. The law says that the railroads shall make the work of their employes "reasonably safe." At what point does the work of a railroad man become unreasonably dangerous?—New York Journal.

Race Suicide Again.

The other day when Dr. Benjamin Andrews warned society that culture was becoming obscured and that there were dark ages ahead, he declared, among other things, that there was no fear that our population was too small, but much that it was losing virility. He said he hoped that President Roosevelt would take early occasion to amend his plea for swelling the census, by urging quality of population as more to be desired than number, "thus undoing a little of the incalculable evil his recent words on this subject have wrought among the poor and thoughtless. Dr. Andrews seems somewhat over-confident about this evil that has been done. Exhortation is not a lasting means of producing a rapid increase of population. Hard facts, like the cost of maintenance, may be trusted to check any such tendency before it has become an evil, calculable or otherwise.—Harper's Japanese Jingoism.

The prompt dismissal of the Japanese parliament after its display of jingoism at the opening session was probably necessary as a peace measure. One proceeding of the parliament was noteworthy, however, as an innovation; the adoption of an address in reply to the Mikado's speech from the throne practically advising him to get a new ministry was a longer step in the direction of the establishment of a real constitutional monarchy in Japan than any that had previously been taken.—Philadelphia Record.

Mrs. Elizabeth H. Thompson, of Lillydale, N.Y., Grand Worthy Wise Templar, and Member of W.C.T.U., tells how she recovered by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am one of the many of your grateful friends who have been cured through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and who can to-day thank you for the fine health I enjoy. When I was thirty-five years old, I suffered severe backache and frequent bearing-down pains; in fact, I had womb trouble. I was very anxious to get well, and reading of the cures your Compound had made, I decided to try it. I took only six bottles, but it built me up and cured me entirely of my troubles.

"My family and relatives were naturally as gratified as I was. My niece had heart trouble and nervous prostration, and was considered incurable. She took your Vegetable Compound and it cured her in a short time, and she became well and strong, and her home to her great joy and her husband's delight was blessed with a baby. I know of a number of others who have been cured of different kinds of female trouble, and am satisfied that your Compound is the best medicine for sick women."—MRS. ELIZABETH H. Iron of the Birmingham District.

While the pig iron market in Alabama is not so active, as far as demand goes, since the first of the year, at it was the last two months of the past year, there is a decided improvement in the entire tone. The tendency, too, is upward, as far as the quotations go, and furnacemen believe that a fairly good price is going to prevail through the year and the demand is going to be quite satisfactory. There is a painful dullness on as to steel and finished iron and steel. There is but little demand for bar iron.

The surplus of pig iron in the yards has been working off slowly. It is announced by some of the companies that they will not be compelled to sell every bit of their surplus iron, but instead intend to hold a considerable amount for advances in price. During the past few days it was announced that No. 2 foundry iron had sold at $10.50 per ton.

These bonds are the last of an issue of $250,000 which the legislature authorized Jackson county to issue for the purpose of building macadamized roads and bridges

TRAIN ROBBERS

Driven Off After Effort to Hold up the Seaboard Passenger.

A passenger train on the Seaboard Air Line was held up one mile east of Sanderson, Fla., Saturday night by four white men.

The engine was stopped by a volley of shots. The fireman and engineer were taken off the engine and carried to the second-class coach and the robbers ran the train ahead about a half-mile, where they blew open the baggage car, mistaking it for the express. The train conductor went forward, but was fired on and driven back to the coaches.

Conductor L. S. Peck, who was in charge of the train, called for firearms and volunteers. N. H. Harrison, claim agent of the road; B. B. McCaa, traveling auditor, and J. C. Williamson, foreign agent, responded and the four went forward, opened fire and drove the robbers away.

The robbers secured nothing and made no attempt to rob the passengers. The sheriffs of Duval and Baker counties are on the trail of the robbers with bloodhounds.

JAMES L. BLAIR DEAD.

Was Counsel General for the St. Louis World's Fair.

James L. Blair of St. Louis died at Eustis, Fla., Saturday morning. Mr. Blair went there about five weeks ago in search of health, and it was thought he was improving until last week when his condition changed alarmingly for the worst.

Mr. Blair held the position of general counsel for the St. Louis exposition, and Mrs. Blair, that of president of the board of lady managers, which positions were resigned owing to certain charges of official misconduct of the deceased.

The cause of the death as stated in the physician's certificate is congestion of the brain.

A SEWERAGE SYSTEM

To Be Installed in the City of Athens, Alabama.

Athens, Ala., has let the contract for a sewerage system for the town. The successful bidder was the Nashville Plumbing company and they took the contract for laying four miles of sewer for $11,063.85.

Work is to begin the first of February and is to be completed by the first of June.

The work is to be paid in cash as the town has nearly enough cash on hand to pay the bill when the work is done.

Caught in New Orleans.

Fred W. Peterson, formerly a bank clerk of Montgomery, Ala., has been captured in New Orleans.

Until last August Peterson had for five years been in the employ of the Merchants' and Planters' Farley National bank, working as a collection clerk. He was considered a very sober young man, free of bad habits.

In August he asked for a leave of absence of two weeks, under the guise of spending the vacation in North Carolina. Soon after his departure an examination of his accounts showed that he was short $4,965. Detectives followed him to Chicago and New York. No further trace was secured and a report was received that he died in a western town.

Several weeks ago, however, it was ascertained by friends of Peterson that he was in New Orleans and he was apparently making no effort to conceal his identity. The bonding company soon located him and he was arrested.

The Citizens' Savings Bank and Trust company, capitalized at $50,000, has been organized in Birmingham, Ala., and will begin business about March 1st.

James E. Butler, of New Hope, Ala., sold 1,400 bales of cotton Saturday at the uniform rate of 13 1-4 cents a pound. The money consideration was nearly $100,000, making this the largest sale of cotton ever made in Madison county.

The West Pratt Coal company has doubled its capital.

Docked a Dock.

The small wooden floating dock at the Pensacola, Fla., navy yard was taken out on the Spanish steel dock, the work being done successfully. Two holes were found in the bottom of the dock, which will be repaired. Some weeks ago, when an effort was made to dock this structure, the blocks slipped and both were badly damaged, the pontoons of the steel dock being crushed.

It is announced that the czarina is suffering from pleurisy. The first court ball of the season, which was set for January 25th, has been postponed in consequence.

Murdered His Sick Wife.

Jack Norwood, a well known farmer residing near Flint, Ala., murdered his wife and escaped from justice. Officers are scouring the country for him. It is said that Norwood's wife had been ill for sometime and confined to her bed. She died suddenly and he refused to have her dressed for burial. Suspicion was aroused and upon examination several ugly knife wounds were found upon the body.

SOURCE OF REVENUE

The Convict System as It is Now Managed.

The quarterly report of President J. M. Carmichael, of the state board of convict inspectors, made public by the state executive department, shows that the convict department for the calendar year of 1903 earned the total of $220,681.83.

The report was made at the end of the first year's trial of the new plan of working the convicts by the state instead of leasing them to the mining companies and operators. In 1899 the department earned something over $6,000 and in 1903 it earned over $200,000.

The following statement shows alone the net earnings, after full payment of all liabilities and expenses originated and incurred during the year. The stock and property counted in the statement are still on hand. The statement, however, includes nothing for permanent improvements which have been made:

Amount paid into the treasury for the year	$186,112 96
Amount earned during the year, due, but perfectly good	21,044 55
Live stock purchased for farms still on hand	1,927 00
Mules, tools, implements and furnishing for the mines	11,603 37
Total amount of net earnings for 1903	$220,681 83

This statement contains the value of the cotton of the year 1902, but does not contain the value of the cotton made during the year 1903, which is nearly all still on hand and worth more than the 1902 crop.

May Pay 65 Per Cent.

The receiver for the Bessemer, Ala., Savings bank is preparing to pay a dividend, and it is thought that it will not be later than the 1st of February. There has been a great deal of confusion in getting the bank's affairs in shape, on account of so many of the creditors failing to file their claims. It is thought that the first dividend will be about 15 per cent.

The court has ordered a sale of the property of the bank at public outcry during the next thirty days, and another payment will be made on or about the first of March, and it is thought that this will pay the creditors another dividend of 15 per cent. Then the litigation will begin and if the receiver is as fortunate as is now thought the defunct bank will pay a total dividend of 65 per cent.

The Pig Iron Market.

During the past week the pig iron market has been normal so far as inquries are concerned for this period of the year. Owing to the recent heavy purchases of southern brands there have not been many sales at the advanced prices. Extraordinary efforts were made to allow all consumers to cover their probable wants for the first three months at the lowest basis. Southern furnaces as a rule are unwilling to sell beyond the first quarter. The demand for northern iron is confined to small contracts for early delivery.

Saw Mill Burned.

The saw mill of John Cathcart at Decatur, Ala., one of the largest mills in north Alabama, was totally destroyed by fire at an early hour Saturday morning. The origin of the fire is unknown. The loss will aggregate $15,000, partly covered by insurance.

Rifle teams of Birmingham and Bessemer, Ala., met in a shooting Friday. Bessemer winning by the score of 1,199 to 1,182.

A general rearrangement of the military map of the United States is brought about by the order establishing the new military divisions, effective Friday. Under the new order of things there are four military divisions in the United States and one in the Philippines.

Placer mining has been resorted to of the refuse in the Iroquois theater.

May Supplant Spain's Product.

Alabama pyrites is now being experimented with, and if the experiments should prove satisfactory there is a probability that they will take the place of pyrites now being imported from Spain in great quantities.

The pyrites beds in Clay county are said to be voluminous and will stand hard working for some years to come. The Louisville and Nashville railroad has backed the construction of a railroad, extending from their line through Talladega to Pyriton, and there will be no trouble in getting the product.

Older Than Her Country.

Linda Allison, claiming to be the oldest colored woman in the United States, died at Pensacola, Fla., Saturday. She was born in Virginia in 1770, and had reached nearly the century age when she was freed after the civil war. She has been a resident of Pensacola since securing her freedom, but for twenty-three years has been blind and unable to walk.

EUROPEAN CAVALRY

May Be Supplied From American Stock.

Although the United States is deficient in creating new breeds of animals, according to Secretary Wilson, who outlined the policy of the department of agriculture to the house committee on agriculture, Sir Thomas Lipton buys horses and pigs at Chicago.

The horses, says the secretary, he ships to Ireland and trains them as jumpers, then sells them in Great Britain to "ten stone Englishmen" as Irish jumpers. The pigs, of which he selects the thin ones, he cans as "Irish bacon," which he also sells in England.

Secretary Wilson believes the United States can furnish the mounts for the cavalry of Europe with proper study of the breeding of horses, and the department is turning its attention to this subject at the present time. The only thing the United States has ever produced in the way of new breeds, he says, is perhaps a few breeds of hens, although we have converted a running horse into a trotter.

Many other statements of interest were made to the committee by the secretary. Discussing the problem of irrigation he said the experts of his department were studying the problem of how to handle the soil so as to conserve the water available. In this connection he mentioned the sugar beet crop, which, he said, was steadily on the increase.

The forests of the country, the secretary declared to be disappearing at an alarming rate. He asked for an increase of $100,000 additional for the bureau of forestry, declaring this to be the time to inaugurate the new methods in forestry.

DENIES MURDER,

But Admits Gambling With the Dead Man Same Day.

Ben Johnson, a young white man, is charged with the murder of G. W. Wall, near Cordova, Ala., Friday afternoon.

The theory is that Johnson killed Wall and put the body on the tracks of the Frisco railroad, where it was run over and mangled.

A watch belonging to Wall was found in Johnson's house and Wall's knife was found on Johnson's person.

Johnson gave this statement: That he met Wall at the Frisco railroad depot, and that he proposed a game of cards with him, and that they went up the railroad track about half a mile from Cordova and engaged in a game, he (Johnson) winning several dollars from Wall, and that he left Wall about 3 o'clock, Johnson returning to Cordova, Wall going toward Jasper.

Wall is said to be from Flat Top mines, having held the position of chief powder man. He was well-dressed and looked to be in good circumstances.

The town of Brighton, Ala., has filed a complaint against the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad company that a dam which the company built near the town has been the cause of a great deal of malarial suffering among the citizens of the town.

Capt. James M. Elliott, who recently purchased the Anniston, Ala., plant of the Southern Car and Foundry company, has entered suit in the New York courts for $150,000 against the Pittsburg parties to whom he sold the Southern Car and Foundry company. This amount is said to be the balance of purchase money due Capt. Elliott.

A CIRCUIT'S CONSTITUTIONALITY

To Be Tested as the Result of a Murder Trial.

The attorneys of Harry Newton, white, the ex-convict who was convicted of killing Sam Lacy at Wetumpka, Ala., and given a life sentence, are going to test the constitutionality of the act creating the fifteenth judicial circuit. This circuit is known as the "Pony Circuit" and is composed of the counties of Montgomery, Elmore, Chilton and Autauga. The attorneys claim that the act is unconstitutional and set out eleven grounds to support their contention.

Marriage and the Improvement of Home.

By Rev. Annie Ford Eastman

THE present condition of woman, better than that of the past, has come about largely through the change in woman's condition. She has passed from having simply the sexual relation to a human relation. Where she used to be content to be simply a daughter, wife, or mother, she is now a distinct individual. The ideal marriage cannot include the wife as the personal property of the husband. The "giving of a woman in marriage" is the of barbarism. It reached its height of absurdity recently when a mother was given away for the third time, and that part of the ceremony was performed by her oldest son. The ennoblement of marriage must come when the home is no longer a gift of the man to the woman, but the possession of both.

"What then will become of the home?" Some years ago there was a time when a woman who wrote a book was pictured as surrounded by ragged children and her husband in a buttonless state of profanity. In order to uphold the theory of woman being out of her proper sphere it has been argued that the male bird sings far more sweetly than the female; therefore, a woman will never be a great poet. Among most of the mammalia among animals the female cares for the young and the male is stronger; therefore women will never be great politicians. But, strange to say, they never cite instances of the opposite character found in nature. For instance, the American ostrich. The male sits on the eggs and does most of the rearing of the young. In one of the fine large varieties of spiders the female, when she has had enough of her beloved consort, coolly devours him. What, I ask you, would be the result if such practices were to take place in the human world?

You ask me what I think of housework. Housekeeping is an art. The happy day will dawn, but it will not be in my time or yours, when an army of men and women will come into our homes and quietly do the work and go out again. Then, thank God, the house servant will be done away with. What does house servant mean? It means that a certain number of people have consented to be aliens, to give up homes of their own that they may do what they do not want to do. The house servant class is diminishing. I am glad to say that I have noticed a little improvement in this matter among women of the upper class.

Forty-five Years a Postmaster.

There died at Elk Creek the other day of paralysis Richard J. Jewell, who probably enjoyed the distinction of having been postmaster longer than any other man living. He was sixty-eight years of age and a native of Taylorsville County, Ky.

In 1855 he was appointed postmaster of Wilsonville. That was during the administration of Franklin Pierce. Three years later he removed to Elk Creek, where he served continuously for forty-five years. He made out and signed in person every quarterly report.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Duty.

The immigrant girl had been careful to provide herself with a false beard, but the quick eye of the customs inspector penetrated her disguise.

"You purpose going into domestic service," he said.

"Yes," said Gretchen, perceiving that equivocation was useless.

"You know how to make bread and you want only one afternoon off per week."

"I cannot deny it."

"Then you are a jewel and must pay duty accordingly," said the inspector.—Puck.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUARY 22D.

The senate adopted the resolution of inquiry concerning affairs in Panama, introduced on the 5th inst by Mr. Gorman, and in addition listened to a speech on the Panama question by Mr. Dolliver, and another on the subject of the recess appointments to office by Mr. Tillman. Mr. Tillman's address had especial reference to the nomination of Collector Crum, of Charleston, but it bore also upon the nomination of Brigadier General Wood.

The house passed 209 pension bills and also resolutions calling on the secretary of war and the attorney general for information as to the number of horses and carriages maintained at government expense for officers of the respective departments.

A bill permitting the withdrawal duty-free from the St. Louis exposition of articles donated to religious, scientific, educational or literary institutions also passed.

JANUARY 23D.

The house devoted the entire day to consideration of the army appropriation in committee of the whole.

Mr. Robinson, democrat, of Indiana, took occasion to criticise the war department for expenditures made by the bureau of ordnance and fortifications in the Langley airship, declaring that such expenditures were without the sanction of congress, and that the airship was without utility. Only twelve of the forty-one pages of the bill had been read for amendment when the house adjourned. The provision in the bill for the construction of a canal from Sitka to Fort Liscum, Alaska, went out on a point of order.

The paragraph providing for the contingent expenses of the army, on motion of Mr. Hemenway, of Indiana, was amended so as to restrict the sum appropriated for the office of the chief of staff to purely military purposes. Mr. Hemenway precipitated a discussion in which the Dreyfus case and French novels received attention by proposing to limit to $100 the amount available for the purchase of periodicals and newspapers.

JANUARY 25TH.

In the senate Mr. Culberson introduced a resolution drawn by a committee appointed at a recent democratic conference for the purpose of getting additional information concerning the Panama situation. The members of the committee were Senators Gorman, Culberson, Carmack and Cockrell.

When the house convened Mr. Adams, of Pennsylvania, from the committee on expenditures in the state department, reported a privileged resolution requesting the secretary of state for information as to the number of horses, carriages and automobiles maintained at the expense of the government for officials of the state department.

Mr. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, sought to amend the resolutions so as to make it read "during the calendar year," saying that the omission of these words would leave a loop hole, but Mr. Adams demanded the previous question.

The senate heard further discussion on the questions of appointments to office made during congressional recess, listened to a speech on the isthmian canal question by Mr. Morgan and passed a number of bills of a semi-public character. As a result of the debate on the appointment question, a resolution asking for specific information concerning the nomination of W. D. Crum, as collector of customs at the port of Charleston, S. C., was passed. A resolution asking for similar information concerning the nomination of Brigadier General Wood and other officers went over until tomorrow.

Among the bills passed were:

Authorizing the erection of a monument to the memory of John Paul Jones.

Authorizing the erection of a statue of Commodore John D. Sloate at Monterey, Cal.

Providing for the appropriate marking of the graves of confederate soldiers who died in northern prisons during the civil war and appropriating $2[illegible],000 for this purpose.

Appropriating $225,000 for a revenue cutter service at Honolulu.

Authorizing the construction of a lightship off the outer bar at Brunswick, Ga., and appropriating $90,000 for the purpose.

Mr. Tillman read a letter from Secretary of the Treasury Shaw reciting the various appointments of Crum to the Charleston, S. C., collectorship and giving the version that the last appointment was made precisely at 12 o'clock noon on the first Monday in December, when one session ended and the other began.

Mr. Hale said that the matter was not of specific significance, that the appointment is not a new one, and that Crum is still serving on his first appointment.

Mr. Tillman said that Crum is holding office just the same, and said:

"I notice, too, that Leonard Wood is sending out dispatches signing himself major general and he is not a major general."

The house passed the army appropriation bill carrying approximately $75,000,000, after adopting a number of amendments.

JANUARY 26TH.

The time of the senate was again divided between consideration of the Panama question and other subjects. There was only one speech on the canal and it was made by Mr. Stone of Missouri, who spoke to a resolution directing the senate committee on foreign relations to make an investigation into the Panama revolt.

The resolutions presented yesterday by Mr. Tillman asking for information from the secretary of war concerning the appointment of General Wood and other army officers was taken up and passed without debate.

The senate passed the following bills:

Appropriating $170,000 to pay clerks in the executive departments for extra service during the war with Spain.

Providing for the construction of a memorial bridge across the Potomac from Washington to the Arlington estate, to cost $5,000,000.

Also 137 private pension bills and bills for relief from military disabilities.

The census bureau issued a preliminary statement concerning rice irrigation in Louisiana in 1902, indicating a great increase since the crop year 1899. Irrigation in Louisiana is restricted almost entirely to the cultivation of rice, in the production of which the state leads all others.

Virginia's general assembly chose John W. Daniel to succeed himself as United States senator for the full term beginning March 4 next.

Mr. Boutell, republican, of Illinois, addressed the house in reply to statements made by Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, the minority leader, in his "stand pat" speech of a few days ago. Mr. Williams in turn replied to Mr. Boutell. The house had under consideration at the time the urgent deficiency bill.

Representative Nehamiah D. Sperry, of the second Connecticut district, is the father of the house in point of years and therefore in a class by himself. He was 75 years old at his last birthday. He was secretary of state for Connecticut when only 27 years of age, and during Lincoln's time was secretary of the republican committee and of the executive committee of seven. He was one of those who indorsed the bond of the builder of the Monitor.

"Clean money" was argued before the house committee on banking and currency by Representative Gaines of Tennessee.

Mr. Gaines charged that the government was largely responsible for maintaining the paper money of the country "unclean" by sending it to China, Japan, the Philippines, Cuba, Porto Rico and other countries, and said it should bear the expense of redeeming it, paying the transportation charges and all other expenses. Mr. Gaines asserted that a single bill which had been in circulation in Cuba and returned to the treasury for redemption contained 232 different kinds of microbes.

Representative Underwood, of Alabama, received congratulations on a speech against the mileage item, in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. The item calls for an appropriation of $145,000 for mileage to members of the house. They received the same amount for the extra session, and the new appropriation proposes to pay them for expenses to and from their homes for the regular session, whereas there was no interval between the sessions, and none of the members returned home. It is simply a case of the house voting for itself $145,000 for which there is no excuse.

In the senate Mr. Stone, of Missouri, addressed the senate on his resolution directing the committee on foreign relations to make inquiry into the facts relating to the revolution in Panama. He offered a substitute to his resolution in accordance with the decision of the democratic senatorial caucus of Saturday.

Saloon keepers all over the south say that it is dull in their business. They attribute the cause to be to the swearing off of so many at the new resolution time of New Year's. This year, however, they say that more than usual are staying sworn off.

As a result of a conference of republican leaders of Louisiana it is announced that the party will name a full state ticket to be voted for at the next election.

EXPORTS OF 1903.

Top Notch of Annual and Monthly Shipments.

The calendar year and the month of December, 1903, showed, respectively, the highest record of annual and monthly exports from the United States. The figures as presented by the department of commerce and labor were $1,484,668,127 and $174,734,368. The highest preceding record for any year was that of 1900, when the total exports were $1,477,946,113, and the highest for a single month was that of October, 1900, when the total was $163,389,680.

It was not until October, 1891, that the exports of any month reached as much as $100,000,000, and not until 1896 that the exports of any calendar year reached as much as one billion dollars.

Imports increased 67 per cent from 1873 to 1903, while exports increased 161 per cent during the same time.

Iron Market.

Not only is there an admission that quotations for No. 2 foundry iron are not being cut from twenty-five to fifty cents on the ton, but the statement is officially made that some of the iron manufacturing companies in the south have instructed their agents not to sell any more No. 2 foundry iron for the first quarter of the year.

This means that the orders already taken will about take up all the No. 2 foundry that can be made between now and April 1 with some of the companies.

It is not denied that the demand for pig iron right now is not as active as it was in December, though the sales are equal and a little greater than the production.

Military Requests.

The International States Guard in session at St. Augustine, Fla., recommends that congress be urged to provide for the establishment of proper camp grounds in such number and at such places as will facilitate the holding of camp maneuvers; to increase the appropriation for the organized militia from one to two million dollars; to extend to the officers of the organized militia the use of penalty envelopes for official business; to use the state militia authorities to contract for clothing and quartermaster supplies under government inspection; to authorize the issuing of sufficient forage and to regulate the wearing of uniforms.

For Consolidation.

The first steps toward merging the Southern Iron companies with the United States Steel Corporation are under way. Presidents Maben, of the Sloss-Sheffield company; Bacon, of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad company, and Thompson, of the Republic Iron and Steel company, are attending the conferences at which plans for the merger are being considered. It is proposed as a preliminary step that the three southern companies be consolidated, the merger with the steel trust to follow such action.

The Illinois Central railroad has fathered a new line of steamships out of New Orleans for Cuba and the Orient. The output of the Deering and McCormick harvesting companies, heretofore shipped by rail to New York and thence to China, Japan and other far eastern countries will hereafter be shipped via New Orleans.

Tuesday was the anniversary of the famous debate between Webster and Hayne.

If the measure should pass congress, we may see an Indian in the United States senate. A bill on the basis of a conference of republican senators provides for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one state and that at least one of the senators shall be of Indian descent.

A 30,000 oil mill is a new industry promised for Pontotoc, Miss.

The importance of the fruit and vegetable growing industry in Alabama is evidenced by the large and representative attendance at the first annual meeting at Mobile of the State Horticultural Society. The meeting will be in session two days, with W. F. Heikes, of Huntsville, presiding. Fertilizers, trucking, the culture of Japanese plums, pecan culture and the nursery trade in Alabama were some of the subjects discussed after the officers' reports had been presented and the usual routine business transacted.

About 45,000,000 tons of iron were made in the year 1903.

THIRTY-SEVEN DEAD

Moundville Depopulated by a Cyclone.

Moundville, Ala., a small town on the Alabama Great Southern railroad, was totally destroyed by a cyclone Friday morning.

The number of deaths is estimated at thirty-seven.

The dead bodies of six white persons and about twenty negroes have already been found, and a number of others are badly hurt.

The names of the whites killed are:

Miss Farley, a young lady residing there.

E. P. Seymour, night operator, Nashville, Tenn.

One child and two Alabama Great Southern employes, names not yet learned.

J. H. Redmond, superintendent of the pumping station, Nashville, Tenn.

Robert Powers, aged 17, son of Mrs. S. B. Powers, of Tuscaloosa.

A. H. Warren, representing the Alabama Grocery Company, of Birmingham.

The first information of anything like a definite character received here of the storm at Moundville came in a telegram from Conductor Capehart, in charge of Alabama Great Southern limited train No. 2, and was sent from Akron. Mr. Capehart's dispatch reads as follows:

"Akron, Ala., January 22d, 1904, 5:30 a. m.—A. Griggs, Superintendent, Birmingham, Ala.: Storm struck Moundville, destroying whole town north of station. I have backed up to Akron and am getting section and bridge men here and at Eutaw. Send wrecker; main line blocked. Take wrecker three or four hours to clear main line of rubbish after arrival. Nos. 1 and 2 O. K. Think nearly everybody living in town killed.

"CAPEHART."

It is rumored that the storm, in addition to the heavy damage done at Moundville, devastated many farms in the northern part of Hale county, and that there may be considerable loss of life there.

The cyclone struck North Birmingham, going in a northeasterly direction, wrecking negro cottages and utterly demolishing many of them. In all thirty-six houses and stores were either demolished or badly damaged. Most of the damaged cottages were occupied by negroes.

The loss will probably not amount to over $4,000 to the owners of property, but the freaks played by the storm were peculiar. From indications it would seem that the wind swooped down, demolished a cabin, jumped for a hundred feet or so and snatched off a roof of another, rose, then fell on another house and so on.

The greatest damage was done to the store of Posey & Bro., at South Africa, just northeast of the city limits of North Birmingham. The loss will amount to $1,300.

South Alabama points also report severe wind, but no damage done so far as known.

Jim Crow Law Passed.

By a practically unanimous vote the lower house of the Mississippi legislature passed the Collier "Jim Crow law" requiring street railroads operating in Mississippi to provide separate cars or compartments for the white and colored races. The debate on the measure was brief, and only two votes were cast against it, those voting in the negative being Mr. Brown, of Adams, and Mr. Sample, of Holmes. The law is quite stringent, modeled after the one now in force in Louisiana, and provides a punishment of a fine of not more than $25 and a sentence of not more than thirty days in jail for persons refusing to occupy the cars or compartments assigned to them. Heavy punishment is also provided for the companies refusing to arrange separate accommodations.

Carroll D. Wright Will Resign.

Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, authorizes the statement that he intends to resign his office by the end of 1904 and to remove to Worcester, Mass. Mr. Wright was elected president of Clarke college at Worcester some time ago and he expects to live there.

Thanks of the Family.

A statement has been issued by the family of the late General John B. Gordon expressing gratefulness for the many telegrams received during the illness of General Gordon and after his death. Owing to the large number received it is impossible for all to be acknowledged, and the family appreciation is sent through the press.

The Florence, Ala., Herald has been sold by Mr. Bunting to a Mr. Gallimore, a Missouri journalist.

STATE CONVENTION

Republicans to Meet in Birmingham May 10th.

Huntsville, Ala., Jan. 22, 1904.

To the Republicans of Alabama:

Under and by virtue of authority delegated to me by the republican state committee of Alabama, at a regular meeting of said committee held in the city of Birmingham on May 12, 1903, I hereby call a state convention of the republicans of Alabama to meet at the city hall in the city of Birmingham on Tuesday, May 10, 1904, at 12 o'clock, noon, for the purpose of selecting four delegates and four alternates to the national convention, which meets in Chicago on June 21st, and for the purpose of selecting two electors at large, the nomination of state officials, the selection of a state chairman, state committee, and such other business as may properly come before the convention.

At this convention, each county in the state shall be entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for each two hundred votes, or a majority fraction thereof, returned for McKinley and Roosevelt in the year 1900.

Under the further authority and power vested in me as chairman of the republican state committee at the said meeting of May 12, 1903, I hereby request that the republicans in the respective counties of the state assemble at such places as may be agreed upon by the county organizations on Saturday, the 30th day of April, 1904, in convention or mass meeting, and elect delegates to said convention to assemble in the city of Birmingham, as aforesaid, on the 10th of May, 1904; and further request that a copy of the credentials of the delegates and alternates elected at said meetings be forwarded to the chairman of the state committee, signed by the chairman and secretary of said meeting immediately after the adjournment of said meeting or convention.

In said county conventions and mass meetings all qualified voters in the state of Alabama, who believe in the republican principles as laid down in the national platform of our party in 1900, and who intend to support the republican county, state and national nominees, are invited to participate in said conventions, mass meetings and deliberations of the party.

The resolution authorizing and empowering me, as chairman of said committee, to call said state conventions and mass meetings, adopted by the republican state committee on May 12, 1903, is in words as follows:

"Be it resolved by the republican state executive committee of Alabama, That a state convention is hereby called to be held during the year 1904 at such time and place as the chairman of this committee, Hon. W. L. Wellman, may designate.

"Be it further resolved, That only those delegates be recognized and permitted to participate in the state, county, district and precinct meetings who are duly qualified voters under the constitution and laws of Alabama.

"Be it further resolved, That at the said next state convention each county in this state shall be entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for each 200 votes or majority fraction thereof returned for McKinley and Roosevelt in 1900.

"Be it further resolved, That all qualified voters in the state of Alabama who believe in the republican principles as laid down in the national platform of our party and who intend to support republican county, state and national nominees are invited to participate in the conventions and deliberations of our party in the future.

"Be it further resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the several district committees be requested and urged to meet at an early date for the purpose of fixing the basis and apportionment of the district delegates at their next convention and that such apportionment be fixed upon the basis of the vote cast for McKinley and Roosevelt in 1900.

"Be it further resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the chairman fix and promulgate a date for the holding of the several county conventions to select delegates to the state convention and ask the county committees to hold said convention on same date in each county."

W. L. WELLMAN,
Chairman Republican State Committee.

If the bill passed by the Mississippi house making appropriation for pensions for indigent ex-confederates passes the senate without amendment the amount of the annual distribution will be $100,000 greater than that of last year. The bill carries an appropriation of $250,000.

NIGHT AND DAY.

The innocent, sweet day is dead.
Dark night has slain her in her bed.
O, Moors are we fierce to kill as to wed!
—Put out the light, said he.

A sweeter light than ever revel
From star of heaven or eye of maid
Has vanished in the unknown shade —She's dead, she's dead, said he.

Now, on a wild, sad after-mood
The tawny night sits still to brood
Upon the dawn-time when he wooed.
—I would she lived, said he.

Star-memories of happier times,
Of loving deeds and lovers' rhymes,
Throng forth on silvery pantomimes —Come back, O Day! said he.

MARRIAGE OF WONG WA FOY

THE TRUE STORY OF A STOLEN BRIDE.

By J. H. EMERY.

"HO a?" (How are you?), said I, as Wong Wa Foy was announced.

"Ho a?" answered Wong, clasping his own slender hands by way of salutation, but not removing the closely fitting skull cap that hid his nicely braided queue, for Wong was too well versed in Oriental etiquette to ever lift his hat.

"I bling Lichee, a few," continued Wong, sinking slowly into a chair. "Miss Ellery like Lichee?" producing a box of selected nuts from the long, wide sleeves of his stiffly quilted gown.

"Since I've learned to eat them, yes," I answered, accepting the gift, and breaking the thin shell from a pulpy, raisin-like nut.

"Now, Wong, before we begin to study, tell me all about that button you wear, and what the Chinese papers say of the press troubles in Shanghai."

"No, savey——"

"I told you not to say 'savey.' You must say understand."

"Miss Ellery understand button? China boys wear reform button. Bime by, China allee same as United States."

"Yes, I understand that; but what of your frisky Queen? No wonder her head is turned, with almost 400,000,000 people bending to her will. If you only were a Servian, or even a Russian, or Turk, China would have been out of trouble long ago, and the young Emperor have had a chance to uplift the empire. Talk of the down-trodden women of China, our 'new women' can't hold a candle to the Dowager Queen."

"No good too much talkee. Some time Queen die. Everybody die. The President die, one time?" came the noncommittal reply, while a cynical, half-humorous gleam shot from under the unfringed lids of his almond eyes.

A long pause followed this unexpected answer. Plainly, my Celestial was in no humor to discuss "Chinese reform." I waited; still he did not speak.

"Wong, what is it? You've got something to tell me."

The red blood dyed his yellow skin to a swarthy bronze as he answered, with the embarrassment of a man unaccustomed to the society of women: "Some time Chinaman want to malley, allee same Melican man. Miss Ellery savey?"

"Wong!" I cried, with feminine delight, scenting an Oriental romance. "But—how can you marry? Not a white girl, surely? Yet you don't know any China woman. There are no Chinese girls here." Then, more gravely, "Wong, have you bought a Chinese girl—paid six or eight hundred dollars for her?"

"No!" thundered Wong, with more than Oriental fervor. "Me no buy Chinese gurl; me lovey she; she lovey me; all lite! She no lovey me, she go—o, me no want; me no buy wife—no—o," with an expressive gesture of his long, slender hands, as if pushing something abhorrent far from him.

"Now, see here, Wong, you have no 'go between' to take the 'little shoe' and make a match. Chinese men don't know Chinese women. If you have not bought your wife, where did you find her?"

"He velly good gurl. Come to San Flancisco, learn plenty much Clist. He Plisbytelian mission gurl. Some time he go Sunday-school; some time joss house; allee same."

"That may be all right, Wong, but where did you find her?" I persisted.

"Some time Chinese women go to joss house on China New Year. Miss Ellery savey 'Kwun Yam (Goddess of Mercy)? Savey 'Tien How (Queen of Heaven)? Chinese womans like 'Tien How, velly much—allee same Clist's mamma. Chinese womens thow ging bouy, thow bamboo splints. Ging bouy, fall, him top side up, priest say, 'Velly good fortune; plenty much little boy, bime by; heap good man, plenty much money. Min yo own bisness.' Miss Ellery, savey?"

"Yes, Woug; you mean you saw her in the temple ladies' day, in San Francisco, having her fortune told. What next?"

"Bime by she come see my bluther's wife, in Butte. She have no papa, no mamma. I no papa, no mamma. I mally allee same Melican man. One week, two week, bime by I bling him—savey?"

"I suppose it's all right," said I, somewhat mystified. "See here, though, when she comes you must not take her to your store; you must bring her right to me, and I will arrange for the wedding."

"Allee lite, I bling him. She velly young, Miss Ellery, make him heap good gurl."

"All the boys of our Chinese class, Mar Henry, and Mar On, can I tell them?" I asked.

"Too much talkee no good," answered Woug, as he backed out of the door.

The more I thought over the matter, the more was I puzzled. Was she someone's "friend?" I knew that word, so stryng and beautiful to us, bore an entirely different meaning to the Chinese mind. Tens of thousands of Chinese women are born simply to be "friends." Few of those brought to America occupy a higher position. With no hand in the shaping of their destiny, they usually accept the inevitable without question, "It is our ancient custom, it is our Chinese way."

Two weeks later Wong brought his heathen sweetheart and placed her in my care. She was bright and attractive, spoke and read English fairly well, and seemed perfectly at home in her new surroundings. She listened with deference to all I had to say, but absolutely refused to be married in Chinese costume. Her plum-colored tunic and wide-flowing trousers must be exchanged for American clothes; only her jade stone earrings and silver-tipped bamboo bracelets were retained, together with the jeweled darts that held back her purple-black hair.

Close questioning convinced me that this was a true love match—no bargain and sale, as I had feared, such as is common on the Pacific Coast. All they asked was American protection and freedom from molestation.

With painstaking care, matrimonial responsibilities, moral and legal, were explained, and a minister engaged, who helped Wong secure his license. The ceremony was set for half-past two, and the young couple departed to secure suitable garments.

With amused impatience the clergyman and a few invited guests waited till 5 p. m. for the chief actors. At last they appeared, in full conventional dress, gray kid gloves and fashionable hats, the poor little bride struggling painfully with her unaccustomed skirts.

Without further preliminary, these two members of an alien race were made one. "What God has joined together let no man put asunder."

Then came an unexpected hitch. In the marriage certificate "Na Loy" was the name given the bride by the clerk of the court. To this she objected, saying, "My name not so, my Sunday-school teacher say right name A-n-n-a," and Anna only would she sign.

Vainly the newly married pair searched for a respectable boarding place among the whites. No one would take the Chinese pair. Lodgings were secured, however, in the American part of the town, and they settled down to housekeeping.

At this juncture I was suddenly called East. Before leaving I took Wong and his wife to church, and bespoke the kindly interest of the Ladies' Missionary Society in their behalf. I also impressed upon them that the minister would befriend them in case of need. Then, secure in the thought that these two heathen at the door would be well cared for by workers in the "hidden field," I took my departure.

Six weeks later I returned to find that the Chinese bride had been claimed by a Chinese Free Mason of Butte, as his friend and chattel, valued at $800, and spirited away, while her husband had seemingly been swept from the face of the earth, as not the faintest trace of his whereabouts could be found.

Chinatown, though racked to the centre, blindly smiled at the inquisitive reporters, and refused all explanations. My own anxious inquiries among my Chinese friends were met with polite evasions or abject apologies. "We allee soily Wong make Miss Ellery so much trouble. He steal him wife." To my indignant protests that Na Loy was lawfully married and should be protected by the courts, they answered:

"Wong know better than go to court. Wong go to law, no win, allee lite, he pay cost. You help Wong win, then Chinese paper say, 'One thousand dollars for some one stick a knife in Wong.' You not know what Chinese paper say. No one kill or one thousand, paper say, 'Two thousand, three thousand.' Some night Wong die. No one know, Flee Mason pay, Six Company pay. Wong Flee Mason. Na Loy b'long to Flee Mason. Wong steal him wife; tell much big lie. Velly bad."

Somewhere in Butte- Montana, a sweet-faced wife, worse than widowed, drags out her hopeless days in degradation and shame, while her marriage certificate is filed away by the clerk of the court.

Sufficiently enlightened to understand that America was the home of the free, where no slavery could exist, these simple-minded children had sought under protection of our laws to evade Chinese customs. Na Loy, the chattel, had run away from bondage, believing that in this Christian land she would be permitted to lead a clean, virtuous life as the wife of Wong Wa Foy.

What could I do? What could any one do single handed with the sword of Damocles hanging by a hair over their heads?

"No doubt Wong was killed," said the minister, to which the editor added, "It's hot stuff for a story. Write it up. Have it illustrated in colors."—New York Evening Post.

High Finance.

The Herald learns of a piece of financiering in Yazoo City that it thinks worthy of notice. Last March a gentleman gave a boy of tender years a silver dime to go into his savings bank. The mother decided that instead of placing the coin in the bank where it would draw annually three per cent., she would invest it in something salable and put the profits in the bank. This she did, and from the first investment she cleared forty cents. This was reinvested with like results, and on June 29 the first deposit of $5 from the dime was made in the savings bank. August 3 another $5 was deposited, and another on September 5 and October 1, making in all $20 as the result of the investments made from the dime. The money is still at work, it being the desire of the mother to try and have $50 when the year is up. This is what the Herald would call pretty good financiering. Wonder if any one in the State can show better results from the investments of a dime in the same length of time?—Yazoo City (Miss.) Herald.

Thieves Avoid the Bible.

Bibles are said by detectives to be more rarely stolen than any other objects. This is not because Bibles are worthless to a thief, but because few criminals are sufficiently depraved to steal the Good Book. A detective said recently that, in an important case which he had followed up some years ago, a thief had entered a house, stolen some valuable jewels, and left untouched a Bible bound in white checkenskin and studded with pearls. The detective caught the thief, and the man who had been robbed—a dealer in curios—visited his despoiler, in jail, took an interest in him because he had not taken the Bible, and, eventually, reformed him and got him a good job.

"I knew," the thief said, "that if I took that Bible it would do me harm, and if I didn't take it it might do me good. I let it alone, and now, thank heaven, I'm an honest and a righteous man."

The detective added that in another case where a thief had stolen a Bible the book had been returned. "Another thing few thieves'll take," he added, "is a child's savings bank."

German Army Decadence.

Considerable sensation has been made in Paris by the appearance in the Gil Blas of an article entitled "The Greatness and Decadence of the German Army." The author is evidently very familiar with conditions in that service. The points he makes are that the general discontent and spirit of revolt in labor circles is extending to the army, being taken there by the youths from the towns and cities. By them it is communicated to the youth from the country, who, at the end of their service, take it home with them. The immediate results are seen in the increasing unwillingness of the youth of the country to join the colors, for they know beforehand the severe treatment they are likely to receive. The author says, also, that the average German officer is not only lacking in enthusiasm in his duties, but is actually cold toward them, accepting them as the dullest routine.

Bird's Big Appetite.

If a man could eat as much in proportion to his size as a sparrow is able to consume he would need a whole sheep for dinner, a couple of dozen fowls for breakfast, and six turkeys for his evening meal. A tree sparrow has been known to eat 700 grass seeds in a day. Birds can and do work far harder than human beings. A pair of house martins, when nesting, will feed their young on an average once in twenty seconds—that is, each bird, male and female, makes ninety journeys to and fro in an hour, or perhaps 1000 a day. It must be remembered that on each journey the bird has the added work of catching an insect. Even so tiny a bird as the wren has been counted to make 110 trips to and from its nest within thirty minutes, and the prey it carried home consisted of insects much larger and heavier than were caught by swallows.—Exchange.

SINGING HE RODE.

Song that clangs like the battle,
Song, keen as the wind that nips
I rode away to the dawn of Day
And such song rose to my lips.

Youth—surely I spent it!
Life—it was mine to spend!
And the clear red line of the morning lay
Eastward without an end.

Further than thought could reach them,
Backward into the dark,
The Lords of my House were ranged away,
The men of might and of mark.

Possessing the heights behind me
The Towers of my own brave line—
Mine as the azure tide of the heart
And the bend of the brow be mine.

My shadow galloped behind me,
The heights of my home were lit,
A gold sun broke through a scarlet sky
And I rode in the blaze of it.

And ever recurrent ringing—
I sang it under my breath—
The gathered flower of the singing,
The chorus of Love and Death.

Till I knew not the time that knew me,
Was now from the past apart,
For the song that changed like the kiss of swords,
For the chorus that broke the heart.

A Miser of Years.

Rachel was dead. Curiously the villagers eyed the door, whose crape streamers told the tale—this ancient crone, familiar to their streets for years so many that none but the aged remembered her as other than old, had passed under the transforming touch, back into the youthland. And in their eyes curiosity and awe mingled strangely with something like triumph.

Neighbor women who had long looked askance at Rachel and her ways now freely entered her poor cottage, washed its windows and floors, and with scrupulous conventionality turned face to the wall its rude pictures.

With no ungentle hands they robed old Rachel for her burial, smoothed the white locks above her worn face, and folded a spray of autumn bloom in her weary hands. Yet, even as they worked, they said, one to another, in such subdued whispers as befitted the occasion, that now, at last, they should know how old Rachel was.

For this had been the mystery by which the woman, reputed half witch, whole soothsayer, held her small world at gaze—that none knew her exact age. The oldest men and women in the village could just remember going to school to her, a comely, merry girl. There lingered a half-forgotten tale of a girl at first saddened, then grown "queer" and queerer yet, withdrawn from life, and dwelling to middle age a recluse in the cottage where she now lay.

As the years rolled on, and her contemporaries, with their memories, drooped away, Rachel's life habit had again changed; she began to go about among the younger generation, gathering into an unfailing memory the history, traditions and gossip of the county, retailing it to any chance listener with all the gusto of a self-constituted authority. Her methods of knowledge gathering were various, and were commonly indirect. Soft-footed, swift of movement, she seemed omnipresent. Turning at a rustle, you might see Rachel's bent figure well down the street; but she had heard your slightest word and had stored it in a mind whose two and two made often more than four.

Those who most resented her intrusions were loathe to anger one of her reputation. Her skill as fortune teller and herb doctor combined to give her privilege and authority in her community—privilege, albeit, without love and without the desire for it, authority as hard to gainsay as to explain, rooted deep in the credulity of an obstinately superstitious and pious people with whom blessings and curses were held in equal respect.

But with all her garrulity in the affairs of others, in the matter of her age Rachel had kept her own counsel. No records and no memories betrayed her; she had contrived to destroy the one and had outlived the other. She clutched her hoarded jewels in closed hands, a very miser of the years, and gloated over the curiosity of her townspeople.

Hence the satisfaction with which the villagers, old and young, now reflected that at last Rachel's carefully guarded secret would soon be theirs. Had she not long ago set her affairs in order, provided for a tombstone, and sunk the balance of her small means in a smaller annuity? Upon that tombstone hung the hopes of the curious; there they should read her untold years.

At Rachel's funeral there were no mourners. The church elders bore her light-weighted coffin through the falling leaves to its place in the graveyard on the hill and the villagers followed.

Two days later a heavy team toiled up the road dragging a crated granite obelisk, Rachel's tombstone. As word spread through the place the folk gathered again; a crowd not so large as had followed her funeral, neither so compassionate nor so respectable, but of curiosity all compact they poured along the graveyard road, eager to gather the first crumb of their heritage. Sally Lundy, the three weeks' bride, elbowed the octogenarian grandmother Simms for a place in the van. Half-witted Sam Bones shuffled to the front with a leer of anticipation on his uncouth face. Boys sent by too busy mothers raced with boys who had come on their own account. Catching up with the wagon as it drew near Rachel's new-made grave, they strove ostrich-like for the front rank; little girls straggled off to the edge, the crowd rimmed in behind, and all waited, cormorant-like, for this last withheld scrap of Rachel's life.

Slowly the heavy stone was rolled into place, laboriously it was set on end, and the workmen began to knock the protecting cleats from the inscription. There it came—"Rachel Morris—:" As they loosed the lowest board the crowd drew their breath as one, men straining forward, women craning their necks, boys bracing for their race home with the news.

The last cleat fell and the inscription lay bare:

RACHEL MORRIS.
Died October 23, 18—.

A GOOD MEMORY.

The Peculiarities of This Sense Are Many.

Good memory is a subject regarding which a good deal of nonsense is habitually talked. We often hear people say that they have a good memory for certain things, but a bad one for other things. This is believed to be a delusion. A man's memory may be bad, but it can not be one thing and good for another. It might as well be said that a bottle was good for holding brandy, but bad for holding whisky. In the case of a feeble intellect all the faculties will be feeble—memory, judgment and all the rest—but they will not be feeble for one purpose and vigorous for another purpose. The fact is that our memory is in itself equally powerful or feeble for all purposes, but we remember best those things which interest us most, and so say that we have good memories for such things, while we forget those things which do not interest us, and we say, accordingly, that we have bad memories for those things. Horace Walpole used to say that his memory was all-retentive as to the names of persons and of places, but that it was absolutely impotent in regard to dates. It has been said of him—by Macaulay, I think—that he could tell you the name of the grandaunt of King Ethelwald, but that he could not tell you whether she lived in the year 500 or in the year 1500. The truth was that he took an interest in names and genealogies, but none in dates. Similarity, in his introduction to "Anne of Geierstein," Scott aptly says:

"I have through life been entitled to adopt old Beattie of Meikildale's answer to his parish minister when the latter was eulogizing him with respect to the same faculty: 'No, doctor,' said the honest border laird, 'I have no command of my memory; it retains only what happens to hit my fancy; and like enough, sir, if you were to preach to me for a couple of hours on end I might be unable at the close of the discourse to remember one word of it.' Perhaps there are a few men who memory serves them with equal fidelity as to many different classes of subjects, but I am sorry to say that while mine has rarely failed me as to a snatch of verse or trait of character that had once interested my fancy, it has generally been a frail support for only as to names and dates and other minute technicalities of history, but to many more important things."

No, it is pretty certain that we have not good memories for this and that memories for that, in any other sense than that we remember that which interests us and forget that which interests us not.

I will not insult readers by reproducing here the good old chestnut as to Dugald Stewart's contribution to the conservation of certain of his friends who were comparing notes as to their earliest recollections. But it may be lawful to recall Fred Locker's capital verse rendering of it:

I recollect a nurse called Ann
Who carried me about the grass;
And one day a fine young man
Came up and kissed the pretty lass.
She did not make the least objection,
Thinks I "Aha!
When I can talk I'll tell mamma."
And that's my earliest recollection.
Notes and Queries.

The Chinese Barber at Work.

Barbers are to be found everywhere in China. No one need be at a loss to have his head shaved in any city or village in the empire. Every day the year there must be hundreds of acres of Chinese heads shaved, and tails combed out and dressed that were they united, would produce an Atlantic cable of hair. It is customary for a Chinaman to have his head shaved and dressed by the barber two or three times a month. The paraphernalia of the street barber consists of a small cabinet, which serves as a seat for his customer and a receptacle for his instruments; a round wooden chest with metal basin for water, which is kept hot by a small charcoal furnace beneath; attached to this there is a pole to indicate his profession. When a customer places his head in the barber's hands, he has it steamed and rubbed with a hot, damp cloth, then shaved; the face is then shaved, including nostrils and ears. The eyebrows are then raised and the eyes cleaned, after which the ears are operated upon with small instruments, cunningly devised to remove all obstacle from the particular gateway of celestial knowledge. The spine is the punched and kneaded to impress it with an accurate sense of its function, and the patient retires, having paid a trifling sum for the tonsorial operations.—Gold Penny.

There is a demand for girls as clerks in German drug stores. The course of instruction requires three years, except in the case of high school graduates, who need only two.

Neighbor women who had long looked askance at Rachel and her ways now freely entered her poor cottage, washed its windows and floors, and with scrupulous conventionality turned face to the wall its rude pictures.

With no ungentle hands they robed old Rachel for her burial, smoothed the white locks above her worn face, and folded a spray of autumn bloom in her weary hands. Yet, even as they worked, they said, one to another, in such subdued whispers as befitted the occasion, that now, at last, they should know how old Rachel was.

For this had been the mystery by which the woman, reputed half witch, whole soothsayer, held her small world at gaze—that none knew her exact age. The oldest men and women in the village could just remember going to school to her, a comely, merry girl. There lingered a half-forgotten tale of a girl at first saddened, then grown "queer" and queerer yet, withdrawn from life, and dwelling to middle age a recluse in the cottage where she now lay.

As the years rolled on, and her contemporaries, with their memories, drooped away, Rachel's life habit had again changed; she began to go about among the younger generation, gathering into an unfailing memory the history, traditions and gossip of the county, retailing it to any chance listener with all the gusto of a self-constituted authority. Her methods of knowledge gathering were various, and were commonly indirect. Soft-footed, swift of movement, she seemed omnipresent. Turning at a rustle, you might see Rachel's bent figure well down the street; but she had heard your slightest word and had stored it in a mind whose two and two made often more than four.

Those who most resented her intrusions were loathe to anger one of her reputation. Her skill as fortune teller and herb doctor combined to give her privilege and authority in her community—privilege, albeit, without love and without the desire for it, authority as hard to gainsay as to explain, rooted deep in the credulity of an obstinately superstitious and pious people with whom blessings and curses were held in equal respect.

But with all her garrulity in the affairs of others, in the matter of her age Rachel had kept her own counsel. No records and no memories betrayed her; she had contrived to destroy the one and had outlived the other. She clutched her hoarded jewels in closed hands, a very miser of the years, and gloated over the curiosity of her townspeople.

Hence the satisfaction with which the villagers, old and young, now reflected that at last Rachel's carefully guarded secret would soon be theirs. Had she not long ago set her affairs in order, provided for a tombstone, and sunk the balance of her small means in a smaller annuity? Upon that tombstone hung the hopes of the curious; there they should read her untold years.

At Rachel's funeral there were no mourners. The church elders bore her light-weighted coffin through the falling leaves to its place in the graveyard on the hill and the villagers followed.

Two days later a heavy team toiled up the road dragging a crated granite obelisk, Rachel's tombstone. As word spread through the place the folk gathered again; a crowd not so large as had followed her funeral, neither so compassionate nor so respectable, but of curiosity all compact they poured along the graveyard road, eager to gather the first crumb of their heritage. Sally Lundy, the three weeks' bride, elbowed the octogenarian grandmother Simms for a place in the van. Half-witted Sam Bones shuffled to the front with a leer of anticipation on his uncouth face. Boys sent by too busy mothers raced with boys who had come on their own account. Catching up with the wagon as it drew near Rachel's new-made grave, they strove ostrich-like for the front rank; little girls straggled off to the edge, the crowd rimmed in behind, and all waited, cormorant-like, for this last withheld scrap of Rachel's life.

Slowly the heavy stone was rolled into place, laboriously it was set on end, and the workmen began to knock the protecting cleats from the inscription. There it came—"Rachel Morris—:" As they loosed the lowest board the crowd drew their breath as one, men straining forward, women craning their necks, boys bracing for their race home with the news.

The last cleat fell and the inscription lay bare:

A GOOD MEMORY.

The Peculiarities of This Sense Are Many.

Good memory is a subject regarding which a good deal of nonsense is habitually talked. We often hear people say that they have a good memory for certain things, but a bad one for other things. This is believed to be a delusion. A man's memory may be bad, but it can not be one thing and good for another. It might as well be said that a bottle was good for holding brandy, but bad for holding whisky. In the case of a feeble intellect all the faculties will be feeble—memory, judgment and all the rest—but they will not be feeble for one purpose and vigorous for another purpose. The fact is that our memory is in itself equally powerful or feeble for all purposes, but we remember best those things which interest us most, and so say that we have good memories for such things, while we forget those things which do not interest us, and we say, accordingly, that we have bad memories for those things. Horace Walpole used to say that his memory was all-retentive as to the names of persons and of places, but that it was absolutely impotent in regard to dates. It has been said of him—by Macaulay, I think—that he could tell you the name of the grandaunt of King Ethelwald, but that he could not tell you whether she lived in the year 500 or in the year 1500. The truth was that he took an interest in names and genealogies, but none in dates. Similarity, in his introduction to "Anne of Geierstein," Scott aptly says:

"I have through life been entitled to adopt old Beattie of Meikildale's answer to his parish minister when the latter was eulogizing him with respect to the same faculty: 'No, doctor,' said the honest border laird, 'I have no command of my memory; it retains only what happens to hit my fancy; and like enough, sir, if you were to preach to me for a couple of hours on end I might be unable at the close of the discourse to remember one word of it.' Perhaps there are a few men who memory serves them with equal fidelity as to many different classes of subjects, but I am sorry to say that while mine has rarely failed me as to a snatch of verse or trait of character that had once interested my fancy, it has generally been a frail support for only as to names and dates and other minute technicalities of history, but to many more important things."

No, it is pretty certain that we have not good memories for this and that memories for that, in any other sense than that we remember that which interests us and forget that which interests us not.

I will not insult readers by reproducing here the good old chestnut as to Dugald Stewart's contribution to the conservation of certain of his friends who were comparing notes as to their earliest recollections. But it may be lawful to recall Fred Locker's capital verse rendering of it:

I recollect a nurse called Ann
Who carried me about the grass;
And one day a fine young man
Came up and kissed the pretty lass.
She did not make the least objection,
Thinks I "Aha!
When I can talk I'll tell mamma."
And that's my earliest recollection.

The Chinese Barber at Work.

Barbers are to be found everywhere in China. No one need be at a loss to have his head shaved in any city or village in the empire. Every day the year there must be hundreds of acres of Chinese heads shaved, and tails combed out and dressed that were they united, would produce an Atlantic cable of hair. It is customary for a Chinaman to have his head shaved and dressed by the barber two or three times a month. The paraphernalia of the street barber consists of a small cabinet, which serves as a seat for his customer and a receptacle for his instruments; a round wooden chest with metal basin for water, which is kept hot by a small charcoal furnace beneath; attached to this there is a pole to indicate his profession. When a customer places his head in the barber's hands, he has it steamed and rubbed with a hot, damp cloth, then shaved; the face is then shaved, including nostrils and ears. The eyebrows are then raised and the eyes cleaned, after which the ears are operated upon with small instruments, cunningly devised to remove all obstacle from the particular gateway of celestial knowledge. The spine is the punched and kneaded to impress it with an accurate sense of its function, and the patient retires, having paid a trifling sum for the tonsorial operations.—Gold Penny.

There is a demand for girls as clerks in German drug stores. The course of instruction requires three years, except in the case of high school graduates, who need only two.

FORSYTH'S BENEFIT

Some "Don'ts" For Mothers.

Gabrielle E. Jackson has written a little book of "Don'ts for Mothers" from which we extract a few golden nuggets of advice.

Don't omit to establish at the beginning implicit confidence, absolute trust, and the sweet intercourse possible between mother and child.

Don't try to divert when obedience is your right.

Don't give baby something he cries for it. Wait until he is reached wildly to the baby is too [illegible] fingers [illegible] three [illegible] wrong can be [illegible]

Don't offer [illegible] to good behavior.

Don't [illegible] force [illegible] sake.

Don't [illegible] have at table [illegible] means [illegible]

Don't [illegible] careless [illegible] a vivid imagination [illegible] splitting [illegible] be made.

Don't tolerate "smartness" or "freness." Correct them gently, but firmly, for they reflect upon you.

Don't see too much; blindness is an advantage at times. Don't hear too much; deafness is often a blessing.

Don't criticise your children in the presence of others; remember they have "sensitive plants" and bruised when least suspect it.

To Avoid Wrinkles.

Our grandmothers used to date a period of their lost girlhood by the first wrinkle, but the woman has to be [illegible] nowadays who would have the courage to say that with her first wrinkle came old age. [illegible] would tell you that she is proud of that little faint line.

But, as a rule, ill health is answerable for those disagreeable little lines, and, indeed, when they are many in number, they are disfiguring.

Many are the methods that have been tried to make the skin smooth and fair again.

A number of these methods are good, but as no two skins are alike, each requires a different treatment.

There is a great deal in the way you wash your face. Instead of washing it downwards, as ninety-nine out of every hundred do, it should be washed upwards, and gentle friction given to the parts most likely to wrinkle.

Spraying the face with soft hot water at night is good.

The best plan of all is to nourish the body with good wholesome food, which will, in its turn, nourish the skin and fill out the [illegible] parts which wrinkles generally [illegible]. Face powder only deepens the wrinkles.—Atlanta Journal.

Queen Alexandra's Pet.

Queen Alexandra, who has made a yearly visit to Denmark, the land of her girlhood, is fond of dogs, and has all sorts, sizes and breeds. She possesses great skill in training them, and the pets with which she has shown are all capable of wonderful tricks. But there was no dog upon which Her Majesty confesses that in vain she used to cast longing eyes. It was a famous performing dog named "Jacknos," and it was the rage as a society entertainer. Invitation cards at great London houses used to bear the strange announcement: "To meet the Jacknos." The following story of this remarkable creature is often told in the Queen's circle. According to an English contemporary: Upon one occasion, when hidden away to carry a handkerchief to the most beautiful lady in the room, the mischievous fellow sprang up to Queen Victoria and laid it at her feet. The latter laughed merrily, flicked the dog in the face with her own handkerchief, and made him do his duty promptly. Then, upon the dog picking up his handkerchief, in great humility, approached Queen Alexandra, the Princess of Wales lay down, and placed the handkerchief before her.—Leslie's Weekly.

The Use of Women Physicians.

There exists a prejudice in Great Britain against women as physicians and surgeons, a feeling which is especially strong among members of their own sex. Women in the United States practicing as physicians or surgeons are in a far better position. There is little or no prejudice against them, but, like other women workers, they must stand or fall upon their merits. Some of them are prosperous members of the community. Of the graduates of the Women's Medical College of Pennsylvania, seventy-six stated the monetary value of their practice for a year. Twenty-four made $1000 a year or more, but less than $2000; twenty as much as $2000, and less than $3000; ten as much as $3000, and less than $4000; five as much as $4000, and less than $5000; three as much as $5000, and less than $15,000; four reported sums varying from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. Ten reported less than $1000 a year. The average income was found to be $2207.30.

Undoubtedly there is a large field everywhere for women of the medical profession, and it is just as certain that they are here to stay.—Medical Record.

Don't try to divert when obedience is your right.

Don't give baby something because he cries for it. Wait until he stops, and then give it if it is wise to do so.

Don't, when the two-year milestone is reached, overlook a spoon hurled wildly to the floor on the ground that "baby is too young to understand." Insist quietly but firmly upon the same fingers picking it up, and insist for three hours if necessary. Right and wrong can be learned at an early age.

Don't offer bribes as an inducement to good behavior.

Don't use horrifying threats to enforce obedience. Teach right for right's sake.

Don't permit your children to misbehave at table. The well ordered meal means everything to older people.

Don't overlook an untruth, yet weigh carefully between untruthfulness and a vivid imagination. It is often a hair-splitting task, but no mistakes should be made.

Don't tolerate "smartness" or "freshness." Correct them gently, but firmly, for they reflect upon you.

Don't see too much; blindness is an advantage at times. Don't hear too much; deafness is often a blessing.

Don't criticise your children in the presence of others; remember they "are sensitive plants" and bruised when you least suspect it.

Social Etiquette.

The man or woman who is frequently heard to rail at social etiquette may be safely put down as one who is habitually unkind and inconsiderate, says the Boston Post. Etiquette is a civility without which we do not have polite society. Etiquette is necessary as a sort of public dress rehearsal of that fraternal graciousness of character that recognizes the right of the other one to our consideration.

There are various little acts and ceremonies in social usage that would seem sufficiently conventional to be practiced by all. With our educational facilities and the abundant circulation of literature, followed by the social advantages enjoyed by the masses of Americans, it would seem that we should not only take pleasure in exercising our good manners, but should enjoy the company of well-bred people only.

Such an article as an essay on social etiquette should be unnecessary, but it is not. Heedlessness has been one of our besetting sins. There is urgent need of our being reminded of looking after our practical tools of common politeness, and advised to sharpen and polish them up a bit.—Detriot Free Press.

Becoming Colors.

Not one woman in ten realizes the importance of ascertaining and making a careful study of the one particular color most becoming to her, and of always having a touch of it introduced in some part of her dress.

The auburn haired woman looks best in brown, shading into the tones of her hair, or in rich dark greens.

The yellow haired girl can wear red. The greens, too, are delightful on her; also certain yellows and black. White is less becoming, but she must be brilliant in complexion or else most delicate as to tints to wear grays and blues to advantage. Blues, particularly the pale and cold blues, are best adapted to brunettes.

The woman whose hair is a dull brown, and whose complexion and eyes lack brilliancy, may still be most attractive, but she should avoid bright-hued or glittering hats. Dull browns, neither yellowish nor reddish, should be selected. Avoid the satin straws. Take the dull finish.—New York News.

Fads and Fancies.

Bands and sashes play an important part on many toilettes.

Curious flat gold purses combining also card cases are carried.

Cords and tassels, like braids, still continue to be a favorite trimming.

The old velvet reticule, with monogram and mount of gold or silver, is in vogue once again.

Afternoon reception frocks appear to be made in all the lighter and softly clinging fabrics.

Attractive cravats for out-of-door wear are made out of a combination of fur and pleated chiffon.

Mousseline and chiffon velvets are the fabrics that are at the moment delighting Parisian feminine hats.

Sable hats have developed into a craze this year with all who can afford this ever-becoming fur.

Coiffures are being brushed well up on the sides and are only slightly waved.

Having Your Photograph Taken.

It is never too late to have your picture taken, so remember this for a future occasion: The most elaborate dress is not the best for a photograph unless it is artistic, which the stylish dress never is, and it will undoubtedly look queer and old-fashioned in the lapse of years.

How well the old pictures stand the test of time. Your hair should be dressed in the simplest fashion. Avoid all ornaments that are stylish, exaggerated sleeves, tight, high collars, and an unnecessary amount of jewelry.

Soft scarfs of lace or some delicate material loosely hung around the neck are becoming to every one, and produce charming effects. Your photograph will look as well in twenty years as it does the day you have it taken.—New York Evening Journal.

FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Silk of all kinds is being worked into winter frocks and is coveted for visiting costumes as much as for house wear.

Taken as a whole, the season's styles are more variegated than usual, and allow for individual tastes as they have never done before.

Silk lace, velvet and mousseline waists are quite popular this winter. Two-piece suits are worn extensively, and these have made one or two waists almost indispensable.

A high or round neck may be used with the blouse waist, which is tucked in bayadere style and gathered where it joins the round yoke. A back closing is invisibly effected, and a fitted lining gives support.

The new soft taffetas are much in evidence in late costumes, and the changeable or shot effects are particularly chic, although rumor says that fickle Paris has exhausted the resources of the shot silk.

First of all, one must choose one's taffeta wisely and insist upon having a quality absolutely without stiffness. Charming color schemes may be found in the shot silks, either in varying shades of one color or in contrasting color.

These changeable effects are, perhaps, even more lovely in louisines. Some of the very pink violet shades shot with white give beautiful tonings, and a soft dull blue shot with a brown that might be described as a rather deep champagne is most effective, especially with trimming of beaver.

SHOOTING CANVASBACKS

HEAVIEST OF ALL DUCKS, AND MOST DELICATE IN FLAVOR.

An Uncrowned King and His Dainty Habits—Swiftest Flier in Their Tribe, Being Both Hard to Hit and Hard to Kill.

Peerless among his kind, the swiftest flier, the hardest to find, heaviest of ducks, the canvasback is the uncrowned king of all water fowl, unrivaled in the minds of sportsmen by any other duck, with the possible exception of the mallard, says an expert in the Los Angeles Times. Game as the greenhead may be, delicate as is his flesh when a fall of good living has larded his ribs with fat, he is a lumbering, ungainly fowl in comparison with the regal red-headed aristocrat of the deep wild celery ponds, and is never capable of testing the ability of marksmen and the hard-shooting power of a duck gun as does his wedge-billed relative.

On the south coast the canvasback is enough of a rarity to make the capture of three or four brace of him in a day's hunt the subject for many an evening chat in the club house. The handsome markings and proportions of the drake, or "bull can," as he is familiarly known by hunters, are enough to make the bird a much-desired member of the bag were his flesh not proverbially fine in flavor. The canvasback of this vicinity lacks the typical and delicate wild celery taste, but the large body and unfailing sweetness of the meat fully maintain all canvasback traditions.

It may seem incredible that there was a time in the east, as late as civil war days, when the "cans" predominated in the middle Atlantic states, but it is a fact that gunners of that time actually changed their blinds and went after widgeon, bluebills, and other ducks for a change. There is a well-authenticated instance of a Virginia planter who just after the war, had trouble with his emancipated colored laborers who inaugurated the first "strike" on record, because of an exclusive diet of canvasback duck! They refused to come back to work until their demands for corn pone and scw at least once a day had been granted!

There are several places in the United States, and even in California, where from 20 to 50 canvasbacks may be bagged in a day's shooting. All the gun clubs get a few of them in a season, but the Guadalupe club in Santa Barbara county does more execution among the "cans" than all others. Bear Valley lake in some years yields good bags, but the stronghold of the edge hills on the coast is San Francisco bay and the various sloughs adjacent to it.

Of all the duck tribe only two other members, the teal and the mallard, are as particular in their diet as is the canvasback. This feather gourmand will fly a hundred miles if need be to find the peculiar aquatic vegetables upon which he feeds. From five to 10 feet below the surface, upon a sandy mud bottom in lakes which are full the year around, grows a small plant called by scientists "vallisneria," and by the hunters "duck celery," or "canvasback weed." It sprouts, matures and germinates under water, and makes its presence known by a glutinous scum on the surface of the water. When the canvasback finds a bed of it he begins diving for the soft and pulpy weed, bringing it to the surface and gorging on it. Other ducks, the widgeon in particular, have been accused of robbing the "cans" of their hard-earned food by grabbing the weed from their bills as they come up half-blinded by the water, but it is doubtful if they ever do anything more than eat the leavings of the bigger birds.

The canvasbacks are the swiftest ducks in the air, the handiest in the water, and the most ungainly on land. Their flight usually lies in the shortest line between two points, and once under way they often display a disregard for blinds that would turn other ducks. They will often stand for any amount of shooting without forsaking a favorite resort, but when in places with which they are not familiar, no bird is more wary. Often they pay no attention to decoys, and will not respond to the most perfect imitation of their call, which is a sort of half grunt, half quack. To knock them over as they come whizzing in to light with wings tense and set is a knack not picked up in a day, presenting an entirely different problem from that given by birds of slower motion. One must lead well and shoot true to stop them, for their muscular, densely-feathered bodies will protect their vitals from shots that would paralyze other ducks. No. 4 chilled shot is a general favorite for "cans."

Canvasbacks when winged often make their escape by a succession of dives and long swims under water with just the bill exposed. They have been known to lay hold of weeds at the bottom, when mortally wounded, and die there, practically committing suicide—a trick not unknown to other varieties of ducks.

The shooting of canvasbacks involves a blind upon a long point, or a sunken box in the middle of a pond, as the birds do not like to approach the short line. Decoys are a convenience, though not a necessity if the line of flight can be ascertained.

The canvasback retains his individuality to a greater extent than does any other duck. "Cans" are seldom found outside of flocks of their own kind. Occasionally they mingle with the redheads, which are very similar in appearance, though not in habits. The difference in shape of body, bill and coloring between the canvasback and redhead is such that no one should ever mistake the birds. The canvasback is a heavier, squarer-built bird, with a short bull neck, no crest, a red eye and a long, wedge-shaped black bill. The male has a dark red head. He has more white on the belly and back than his smaller relative, the red-head, which has a bright chestnut crest, a yellow eye and a broad blue bill with a black nail.

TALKING THROUGH 'PHONE.

Suggestions Offered on Proper Method of Transmission.

To be a good telephone talker is something of an art, but in these days it should, by all means, be cultivated as much as any of the methods of polite conversation. The first requisite is the proper pose.

In all cases the transmitter should be as nearly vertical as possible, with the voice funnel so adjusted that it is on a level with the lips when the head is in the ordinary arched position of conversation. Then the lips should be held about an inch away from the funnel and directly opposite its centre. The speaker should talk in a tone slightly above the ordinary conversational pitch, about in the same way as if he were speaking to a person across the room.

But, more than all, care should be taken to talk slowly and to articulate with the greatest distinctness; to be deliberate on what one says and to make ample pause at the end of each sentence.

The telephone is such a time saver that one, even over a toll line, need not be unduly worried in being in too much of a hurry to finish. On the contrary, time and annoyance for one's self and one's correspondent will be saved by talking slowly and allowing a little time for the mental reception of the ideas that one wishes to transmit.

Nothing can be more erroneous in the use of a solid back than to stand at a distance from the instrument and endeavor to affect it by shouting at the top of one's lungs.—American Telephone Journal.

How the Popular Novel Destroys Forests.

It has been estimated that nine novels had a total sale of 1,600,000 copies. This means 2,000,000 pounds of paper. We are assured by a manufacturer of paper that the average spruce tree yields a little less than half a cord of wood, which is equivalent to 500 pounds of paper. In other words, these nine novels swept away 4000 trees. Is it any wonder that those intersted in forestry look with anxiety upon the paper mill?—Scientific American's Special Number on "Modern Aids to Printing."

IN A KERNEL OF CORN.

SOME BY-PRODUCTS SECURED FROM THIS SOURCE.

When It Begins Going Through Its Transforming Process One of the First Results Is a Separation of the Germ—Starch and Grape Sugar.

Although health foods for humanity are much more widely advertised, there are also what might be called, without any great stretch of the imagination, health foods for animals, says the New York Times. Some of the most important are by-products in the series of chemical operations that is constantly turning millions of kernels of corn into starch and glucose—the first product serving humanity, to the tune of many thousand tons yearly, in the preparation of its cotton goods, and the second eventually reaching the human stomach, in even larger quantities, through the pleasant medium of confectionery or soda water. An ordinary ear of corn contains many industrial possibilities—even including corn cob pipes, and vulcanized rubber mats for libraries and public buildings—many of which have been developed only during the last two decades. On their commercial side the total value of these products has been recently illustrated by the formation of a highly capitalized combination of the corn product interests, while, on the theoretical side, the subject forms an important field of study in theoretical laboratories, as, for example, in the starch and sugar laboratories of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where it was first made a matter of student investigation.

Important as are the by-products obtained from corn, the ultimate products of the corn kernel, starch and glucose, are by far the most important. Glucose, a thick, colorless syrup, is indeed very generally known, and has a very ill-derserved popular reputation as an adulterant. As a matter of fact it is not, broadly speaking, an adulterant at all, but a valuable commercial agent which accomplishes certain ends in candy making and in the preparation of soda fountain syrups without being in the least injurious. Vast quantities of it are used yearly in making confectionery, preserves and fruit syrups, partly because it is more economical than ordinary sugar, but quite as much because it is better adapted to the purpose. As a foundation material it takes any flavor successfully; but unlike sugar it doesn't crystallize out afterward, and the confectionery will, therefore, keep longer in its original condition. The objection most commonly brought against glucose, that a mineral acid is used in producing it, is altogether irrational. The actual amount of acid is not more than one pound in a thousand, and even this small amount must be quite neutralized, and so got rid of, by the very process of refining, before the glucose has reached the stage of perfection that makes it a marketable commodity.

An ordinary kernel of corn, as it comes to the laboratory, contains a germ, or embryo plant, surrounded by a mass of cells containing albuminous matter and separate grains of starch. These elements, which practically nourish the little plant germ somewhat as a chicken is nourished in an egg are really the elements of a perfect food, proteine—of which the white of an egg is a familiar example—containing sugar, starch and fats. Their presence is what gives the kernel of corn so many commercial possibilities. And without going into the technicalities of production—steep tubs, rolls, shakers, filter presses, starch runs, or what not—the gradual evolution of these different products is an interesting example of the power of modern chemical mechanism to extract a long list of unexpected utilities out of a single natural substance. Sun, wind, rain, air and soil store up these various utilities, and modern humanity is always making new, quicker and better ways of extracting and applying them.

When the kernel of corn begins going through its transforming process one of the first results is a separation of the germ. The germs, separated and ground, are reduced to a pasty mass which is subjected to pressure and so divided into a clear, yellowish oil on the one hand and dry compact cakes on the other. The oil is used in the manufacture of soaps or is vulcanized, mixed with bits of cork, and so transformed into rubber mats or bicycle handles. The dry cakes are largely exported as cattle feed, the amount of proteine which they contain making them both healthful and nutritious. What is left after the germ of the corn has been extracted continues on its way to the final and vastly more important products, starch and glucose.

But before the corn becomes starch two other by-products are produced, the first being corn bran, or "wet feed," as it is called in factory practice, and the second gluten meal. Both of these products are cattle foods, the gluten being particularly rich in albuminous substances, and used, for example, for mixing with the regular food of a dairy farm in order to improve the quality and quantity of the milk. Gluten, indeed, which in dried form becomes gluten meal, and so goes to the cows, is derived from the corn during the extraction of the starch that goes to the big textile mills, and there plays an important part in the weaving and dyeing of cotton fabrics, or else to the confectioners, where thousands of tons are used yearly as molds in which to cast the candy animals, that we see so commonly at Christmas. The grape sugar, so called, which goes to the distilleries and becomes an important factor in the brewing industry, and the enormous trade, liquid glucose, that goes to the confectioners and becomes an item in the manufacture of confectionery, syrups and jellies, are both derived from starch by an elaborate chemical and refining treatment.

All these products are made by chemical reactions first carefully studied on a small scale in such theoretical laboratories as that of the Institute and then applied on a large one in big manufacturing plants. Grape sugar, so called from its general resemblance to the sugar sometimes found on the exterior of dried grapes, is an ideal fermenting sugar, and is therefore much used in the manufacture of sparkling ales, the gases which it gives off during fermentation producing the necessary sparkle better than any other agency. And corn is also largely used in the production of malt food and liquors, which owe their valuable properties to maltose, or malt sugar, derived by chemical transformations from the starch in grains.

UNMARRYING LAWS ABROAD.

In France the Wedding Presents Go With the Divorce.

"There are many curious and interesting facts regarding the marriage and divorce laws of foreign countries," said R. J. Brown, who recently returned from a trip abroad, where he made a study of the question.

"Breaches of promise are averted in Hungary by an express declaration of the civil marriage act (1895) that the relations created by a betrothal do not give the right to command the conclusion of a marriage, but if either party withdraws from an engagement without just reasons he or she is bound to grant compensation to the extent of the outlay incurred. Divorce in the English sense does not exist, but the courts can decree the personal separation of a married couple without dissolving the bonds of matrimony.

"A curious law prevailing in France provides that, before being married, children of a family, although over age, shall seek in respectful and formal terms, the advice of their father and mother. It makes no difference, however, whether the consent of parents is given, for the couple can be married a month after under any circumstances. This is also the case in the Netherlands.

"A divorce further entitles the innocent party to recover all the presents he or she may have made.

"According to the constitution of the Netherlands, the civil marriage must always precede the religious ceremony. The latter, indeed, is left entirely to the conscience of the parties concerned. There is also a law providing that no man or woman under 30 can marry without the consent of parents. If the consent be refused, the couple have to appear before a judge, who advises them as he thinks best.

"Many countries have now abolished all marriage fees. This is the case in Norway, while in the Netherlands certain days in the week are set apart when persons may be married without payment."—Indianapolis News.

Each Color to Itself.

The race problem in the Cherokee nation is solved to the general satisfaction of the three races concerned, and the intermediary mixed bloods. In the location of homes the Cherokee full-bloods and negroes are mostly in settlements. The intermarried whites largely are in towns and territory contiguous to each other. The Cherokee speaking citizens much prefer to associate together.

In the nation there are 30 schools attended by full-blood Cherokee children and 17 by negro children. The negro blood schools are not so by legal requirement, but as a corollary of their preference to live near each other. The Cherokee and negro do not intermarry or socially mingle. Two seminaries and an orphan asylum are attended by full-bloods and mixed bloods only, the colored high school by negroes only.

In the incorporated school districts whites and Indians attend the same schools, and race prejudice and undue feeling on either side are being lost in fellowship and friendship, cultivated in the class room and on the playground. Both sides are better satisfied in the combined school than they were when they were kept separate. Full-bloods seem to mingle as freely with white renters and their families of good character as they do with mixed bloods.

Of the 38,500 citizens of the Cherokee nation the best statistical information gives about 8500 full-bloods, 3200 intermarried whites, 22,800 mixed bloods and 4000 freedmen.—Kansas City Journal.

Buried New England Treasures.

A Southbridge (Mass.) special to the Worcester Telegram says: "A secret of many years, known only to Dwight Vinton and his brother Abial, the latter being dead four years, was revealed today by Dwight, who told of $5000 in gold buried in woods near his Dudley home. Abial returned from the west in 1870, and for safe keeping, buried his treasure in unfrequented woods near his home. Although they dug many days and nights together, they never unearthed the treasure. Dwight Vinton, who is now over 80 years old, says he does not expect to live long, and he wants the world to know of the buried wealth.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

PAY YOUR POLL TAX BEFORE FEBRUARY 1st, 1904, or you can't vote for anything at any time in 1904. DO NOT SLEEP ON YOUR RIGHTS. Make it your business to see the tax collector AT ONCE, and pay up. Don't put it off, for you might get sick or something might happen so that your opportunity would pass. A great many of our people think that the poll tax was put on the voluntary plan, so as to disfranchise a lot of careless white voters in the country beats. If that is so, DON'T give the democrats the satisfaction of disfranchising you. PAY YOUR POLL TAX and vote a straight PEOPLE'S ticket in 1904, and show them "where you are at." PAY YOUR POLL TAX; it goes direct to the children of the community in which you pay, to help educate them, and no man should begrudge paying his money to such a cause. PAY YOUR POLL TAX. tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

LAST THURSDAY'S TORNADO.

The wind storm on Thursday night, caused a big loss of life and property in Alabama. At Moundville there were five whites and thirty-two negroes killed, and about sixty whites and blacks injured, many of them dangerously so. The property loss was about $75,000, with practically no insurance. At North Birmingham there was a big loss of property, but no lives. At Sumter many houses were blown away and a number of negroes injured, but none killed. At Athens, just north of the town, a negro church was destroyed and a negro settlement called North Africa was almost swept away. At Clanton two partially built houses were blown down, one of which belonged to J. B. Downs, and the other to W. I. Mullins. The tin roof on W. I. Mullins' store was ripped off on one side of the building.

The Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association insures its members against loss by WIND as well as fire and lightning, which is something in the line of protection that you can't get from a standard insurance company.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION

W. L. Wellman, chairman of the republican executive committee has issued a call for state convention to be held at Birmingham on Tuesday, May 10th, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon. The business will be the election of four delegates and four alternates to the national convention which meets at Chicago on June 21, 1904; also two electors at large, nominees for state officers, state chairman, state committee and other proper business.

Each county is entitled to one delegate and one additional delegate for each 200 votes, or a majority fraction thereof, cast for McKinley in 1900. This would give Chilton county five delegates.

WILL YOU DO IT?

We published in full Frank Simmons' letter to President Roosevelt, it squarely states the referees' position. The resolution Simmons refers to was passed at their meeting at Montgomery on November 10, 1903, and is printed below. EVERY ONE who follows the lead of the black and tans in this county THEREBY INDORSES this resolution.

The Resolution.

"RESOLVED, IN THE ELECTION OF DELEGATES TO THE NATIONAL REPUBLICAN CONVENTION IT IS DECLARED THE POLICY AND INTENTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S REFEREES AND HIS FRIENDS IN ALABAMA TO SEND TO THE NATIONAL CONVENTION A DELEGATION COMPOSED OF WHITE AND COLORED REPUBLICANS AND TO PLACE UPON THE VARIOUS EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES OF THE PARTY IN ALABAMA SOME COLORED REPUBLICANS."

The Letter.

Office of the United States Marshal, Southern District of Alabama, Mobile, Ala., November 23, 1903.

The President, Washington, D. C.

Sir—On or about the first of the present month of November I was notified by the representative for this district of Messrs. W. F. Aldrich, Chas. H. Scott and Joseph C. Thompson, known as the president's referees for Alabama, that the above named referees would be in the city of Montgomery on the tenth and eleventh instants, and would be glad to meet and confer with myself and other republicans of the district and state. The object and purpose of the meeting or conference was left for me to conjecture, except I was notified that the meeting would be informal and private.

In accordance with the above invitation I went up to Montgomery on the morning of the tenth and met in an informal way the above named referees and about a dozen others.

As my term as United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama expires on January 22, 1904, I was considering the question as to whether I would be an applicant for reappointment or not, having the assurance of the support of the leading and representative republicans of the district who occupy places of honor and trust in the party councils.

Before making formal application I deemed it proper to confer with your referees on the subject, which I did, and was notified that it would be necessary for me to have the indorsement of the few registered so-called republican negroes in the district, none of whom hold positions of party authority in the counties, district or state, and practically all of whom are known to be democrats and were registered because of that fact, and none of whom are loyal to the republican party.

My emphatic reply to this requirement was "If that is the price of the position I do not want it and will not accept it."

On the next morning, the eleventh instant, there appeared in the papers the resolution hereto attached, with the statement that the same had been unanimously adopted the evening before at a meeting presided over by Referee W. F. Aldrich.

I have labored for the past twenty years to the extent of my ability to obliterate the color line in the republican party, and to as far as possible ameliorate that flame of race prejudice that knows no quenching in the south, and I have never denied or attempted by word, vote or act to deprive the humblest negro in the land of any political right or privilege claimed by myself, I still accord to the negro every right guaranteed to him by the constitution and laws of the land as an American citizen, but nothing because he is a negro.

The policy expressed in these resolutions and the positive statement made to me by your referee does not admit of but one construction, and that is that the color line is drawn, and because he is a negro, and the door of hope closed to the white man, especially the self-respecting white man. On that issue, thus clearly made, there shall be no doubt as to where I stand.

In view of the foregoing, which I understand embodies your policy, as practically enforced by your referees, and to which I will not subscribe, I beg to herewith tender my resignation as United States marshal for the southern district of Alabama. Respectfully, FRANK SIMMONS.

Special Announcement.

TAX COLLECTOR T. J. HUBBARD WILL BE IN CLANTON MONDAY, FEBRUARY 1ST, 1904, FOR THE PURPOSE OF COLLECTING POLL TAXES. THIS IS A GREAT FAVOR ON MR. HUBBARD'S PART, AS HE HAS BEEN AT CLANTON VERY OFTEN THIS MONTH, BUT FEELS LIKE GIVING ALL THOSE WHO HAVE NOT PAID ONE MORE CHANCE. THIS IS THE LAST OPPORTUNITY THIS YEAR.

THE COUNTY ALLIANCE.

We were at the County alliance meeting at Union Tuesday. There was a large number there, considering the bad weather. The good ladies of the neighborhood served a fine dinner on the grounds and every one was well taken care of. The secretary's report of the meeting will appear in next week's UNION. Let the good work go on.

The Union was wrong in its statement as to the date of the republican convention in Birmingham, and we withdraw that much of our remarks last week on Mr. Killgore's letter as related to that date. No man is wrong quite all of the time

REPUBLICANS OF CHILTON COUNTY.

In obedience to a resolution passed by the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County at its meeting on January 11th 1904. I hereby call a mass convention of the Republican Electors of Chilton County to meet at Clanton, Ala. on Saturday February 13th 1904. for the purpose of electing delegates to the Republican State and District Conventions, and to transact such other business as may be properly brought before it.

The following are compositions by the pupils of the school, each one writing about his own department. They reflect great credit on the pupils and their instructors.—Editor Union.

High School.

The Clanton High school is progressing nicely under the principalship of Professor H. T. Wallace, with two assistants, Mrs. Alice Middleton and Miss Alice Strock. This school is now in its third year and has the enrollment of 148 pupils. There are a few boarding pupils attending this school. During the past week several were absent on account of measles. Our school room has lately been seated with new patent desks, which the pupils greatly appreciate. With this strong corps of teachers no boy or girl could do better than to attend school here. Professor Wallace is a teacher who makes every recitation interesting and impressive to his pupils. A new Latin class will be organized next week, of which class the writer is proud to be a member.

PUPIL.

Intermediate—Our School Room.

I am a little girl in Clanton high school and belong to the intermediate department, of which I am going to give a description. We have a nice room, decorated with beautiful pictures, which I think is very attractive. The finest of all, it is well furnished with good desks, which makes all of us comfortable. We have twenty or twenty-five pupils and they seem to be getting along nicely. We have several rules, which we all obey.

PUPIL.

To the Friends of the Primary Room:

We have new desks and are delighted with them. We have twenty-eight pupils in our room now and a great many are out with measles. We hope they will get well and return to school.

I am in the third grade and am studying hard to be in the fourth grade next year. Then I will be in the intermediate room, and that will give more room for the little folks. We have a nice, good teacher and all love her.

PUPIL.

GOOD SURVEYING.

Surveyor A. P. R. Dahl, of Shelby county, and Surveyor Langston, of Jemison, have been at work for several days locating the corners and running the lines of section 1, township 21, range 14, just south of Clanton. The parties interested are A. G. Dake, Mrs. S. E. Johnson, W. M. Wilson, W. W. Gray and others. It is of great importance that land lines and corners should be perfectly accurate, as disputed land lines engender very bitter feelings between neighbors.

CONVILLE-RAILEY.

Mr. G. A. Conville and Miss Amanda Railey were married at Vincent, Ala., on Thursday, the 21st inst, at 3 p. m. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. Kidd at the residence of J. A. Elliott. After the marriage, which was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, an elegant supper was served and "all went merry as a marriage bell." The happy pair arrived in Clanton Sunday evening, and will go to housekeeping at No. 1 Wilson avenue. We welcome them to Clanton, and may all happiness attend their union is the sincere wish of the UNION.

PLEASANT GROVE.

January 26th, 1904.

Editor Union—Again I appeal to you for space in your paper. I have been so impressed with that statement from Judge Adams in a paper a few weeks ago that I think we all should give the judge some credit for his honest confession. I think it will do his soul great good. Of course we all knew that he was out of politics long before he made his public confession, and I would be like him if I had no party to appeal to but the democrats. I wonder where the little old black ox is at, with that white spot on his gable end? Say boys, did you know that the democratic party is in a mell of a hess? If you don't know, I do. Come, you populists and republicans get your shoulders to the wheel, for we are on the road to victory. We won't have any more of Grover's low tariff. Hurrah for Hanna and 15c cotton and the Union and its readers.

Highest Price Since the War.

Cotton sold on the streets of Montgomery, Ala., Saturday at 14 3-8 cents. The market was a record-breaker. Nothing like it has been experienced in the south since the war, and in the few years of abnormal agricultural conditions which followed the war. It was the highest market price for cotton in over a third of a century.

A Total Destruction.

Fire totally destroyed the office and work shop of H. Abel, carriage manufacturer, Birmingham, and the ware house of the Birmingham Stove and Hardware company, which adjoins the carriage works. The loss sustained by the burning of the warehouse is $10,000, which is about covered by insurance.

Both buildings and contents were totally destroyed. Paints and oils made the fire so much fiercer.

BOY FOUND SUN SPOTS.

Youthful Astronomer Has Covered Himself with Glory.

Hubert Howe, aged fifteen, who is undoubtedly the youngest practical astronomer in the world, recently astounded the veterans of the science by announcing the discovery of a new group of sun spots.

Young Howe's discovery was not the result of accident. For several months he had been taking regular observations at the observatory of

HUBERT HOWE

15 YEAR-OLD ASTRONOMER WHO DISCOVERED NEW SUN SPOTS

Denver university, in which university his father is professor of astronomy.

Young Howe, in spite of his contribution to the science of astronomy, does not find his greatest pleasure in work at the telescope. Zoology is his favorite study, and to this he devotes most of his time. His astronomical observations, however, have been carried on with enthusiasm, although it is with difficulty that the youth can be brought to speak of them. He will continue his observations and says he hopes to devote his life to original research and to add materially to the knowledge of the scientific world. He has made all his discoveries with a six-inch telescope for the reason that the sun is so bright in the clear atmosphere of Denver that it is not good for the large instrument in use at the observatory.

Didn't Want Her.

There is a peculiar dialect in England called the Pogmoor dialect. Here is a sample: "Fred Munjest wor passin t'Three Pidgins wun day, wen t'lan'lord happ'nin to see him, sez: 'Ah've putten two tickets dahn ta thee. Wer hevvin a raffle for a poor wumman o' Curesmas eve.' 'Nooan for me, thenk yo',' sez Fred, shakin's heead. 'Ah shudn't knaw wot ta do wi' a poor wumman, if ah wun her.'"

White House Uniforms.

Lack of the display so often seen in liveries is noticeable in the modest dress of the president's house servants.

Unique Family Circle.

A small town in Bavaria can boast of what may be described as a unique family circle. A shopkeeper resident there includes among his household three living mothers-in-law, each with a mother of her own, his own mother, his third wife, and four daughters in their teens. The twelve women are reported to live on terms of the greatest amity, and the shopkeeper himself, who is fortunately in good circumstances, professes to be perfectly contented, notwithstanding that he is thus the thirteenth of his family. The incessant banter to which he is subjected he philosophically welcomes as tending towards the better advertisement of his business.

Wealthy Temple.

At a missionary meeting at Bristol, England, the other day, Mr. Eugene Stock mentioned the surprising fact that a temple of Siva, which he visited in a remote provincial town of India, had a revenue of £70,000 a year, and supported twenty-five "daughter churches." Its accounts are kept by a band of clerks, sitting in an office, with desks, supboards and ledgers, very like a merchant's office. The jewel chest of the temple has twenty-four locks, the keys of which are kept by twenty-four different men.

£36 for a Pen.

Among the effects of the late Count Falkenhayn, which have been sold by auction in Vienna, was the pen which was used in Paris on September 26th, 1815, by the Emperor Francis I., the Czar Alexander I., and King Frederick William III. of Prussia, in appending their signatures to the treaty of the Holy Alliance. The bidding started at £5, and the relic was knocked down to Consul General von Lindheim for £36.

METHODS OF AUSTRIAN POLICE.

Inhuman Means Employed to Extort a Confession.

The manner in which the man Bratuschka was convicted at Vienna a short time ago of killing and eating his daughter, who recently turned up alive and well, discloses extraordinary methods employed by the Austrian police. A gendarme, who found Bratuschka working in a field, knocked him over, and, bringing the point of his bayonet to the man's breast, ordered him to confess to the murder of his daughter as he valued his life. Bratuschka, overcome by fear, thereupon admitted that he had committed the crime. When taken before the magistrate, the prisoner withdrew his confession. The magistrate, however, strongly advised him to stick to his confession with a view to mitigating his doom, and he again did as he was bid. Before the jury he stoutly denied his guilt, but his two previous confessions were against him, and the village surgeon testified that bones which Bratuschka had been munching were human bones. He was sentenced to death, but reprieved, and the officer who forced the confession from him was recommended for promotion. On the return of his daughter, Bratuschka was, of course, liberated.

The Congo Free State.

Belgium, one of the smallest states in Europe, so small, in fact, that a map drawn on a generous scale is needed to see its boundaries definitely, is mistress of one of the largest and most flourishing colonies of modern times.

When one stops a moment to think of it the comparison between the sovereign state and the dependent territory is astonishing. Roughly speaking, Belgium is about the size of the state of Maryland, not quite so large in area, however; while the Congo Free State, which lies in the heart of Congo Free State, showing the size, relatively, to that of Pennsylvania.

Equatorial Africa, is nearly twice the size of Alaska, and nearly half the size of the United States.

Enormous Elk's Head.

The head of what must have been an enormous elk was recently on view in Dublin. It is the largest head which has yet been found in Ireland, the stretch of the antlers from tip to tip being nine feet eight inches, or, measured round the horns outside, twelve feet, four and a half inches. Hitherto Lord Powerscourt possessed the largest head, but it is some inches smaller than this late find. This magnificent head was got in the Dublin mountains, where quite a number have from time to time been found. It is in a most wonderful state of preservation, not a bit of the antlers being broken.

Good Uses for Paper.

The use of paper as an excellent wind shield and a guard against dampness has long been understood, but the paper garments of men and women which are shown by a druggist have a natty, trim air which almost marks them as a novelty of the season. It is evident they can be worn under the waist or vest without in any way adding to the apparent bulk or causing the slightest discomfort, yet at the same time exclude cold and moisture more effectually than the heaviest of flannels.

Honor at Home.

They honored him at home;
Where he had been a child
They cheered him in the streets,
And when he turned and smiled
Their hearts were filled with pride;
They recognized his worth
And gladly hailed him in
The village of his birth.

They honored him at home.
They gave him lavish praise
For talents he had shown—
But after many days
And after he had gained
The world's praise first and made Success his own, secure,
And didn't need their aid.

Faithful to His Duty.

When several young ladies of New York, passing on Broadway near Twenty-seventh street, the other day saw a man struck by a trolley car hurled through the air land on his head between the tracks, they screamed. A crowd quickly gathered, expecting to find mangled remains. Instead, they found Timothy Sullivan, a letter carrier from Station E, surrounded by letters. With his coat torn to tatters, his face covered with blood and his shirt smeared with gore, he electrified the throng by shouting for his letters. He sat up and refused to move or permit anyone to touch him until assured by a co-worker that every letter was safely restored to his bag. Then, in a dazed condition, he was lifted into a railroad office nearby.

In the Little Old Town.

HICKORY NUTTIN'

The bes' time in the year for boys is when it's hickory nuttin'—
There's been a frost an' all the hulls is openin' an' shuttin'
An' winkin' at the squirrels that just jumps around an' chatters
An' scoots about a mile away when "plop!" a big nut clatters.
Us boys is glad on Saturdays—we're off of all our studies.
I wouldn't trade my fun that day for yours or anybody's!

You get a good two bushel sack an' sling
it on your shoulder
An' wear your mittens an' your scarf—maw says it will get colder—
An' then you strike out on the pike until you cross the river—
We use to go in swimmin' there. Ooh!
Makes a fellow shiver!
From there you cut acrost the fields; it doesn't take a minute
Until you see a shaggy tree, an' then—why, then you're in it!

The shaggy tree's the shellbark kind;
There ain't a nut that beats it,
I don't care where you get it at, nor when a fellow eats it.
But butternuts is purty good; it ain't so hard to shake 'em.
An' then there's hazel nuts around an'
us boys always takes 'em.
So purty soon you got your sack filled plumb up to the middle.
An' when you shake it there's a tune that's better than a fiddle.

You don't go home the way you come;
you cut across by Tucker's,
An' strike a ripe persimmon tree, an' fill your lips with puckers;
An' mebbe there's some dried up grapes
—the wild kind—still a clingin'
Upon the frostbit vines along the river banks a-swingin';
But then you hafto climb a fence; that sack sets you a reelin',
It bumps you in the back an' where you have a hungry feelin'.

So, you start home acrost the farms, the weeds an' stubble crackin'—
You playin' you're a Injun an' that it's a bear you're trackin';
Afore you know how late it is the edge
o' town you've sighted,
An' get all empty inside when you see the street lamps lighted.
You never feel that heavy sack when you walk home, a-struttin'—
The bes' time in the year for boys is when it's hickory nuttin'.

Famous Postage-Stamp Collection.

The magnificent collection of postage-stamps bequeathed to the trustees of the British museum in 1891 by the late Mr. T. K. Tapling, M. P., can now be seen almost in its entirety by the general public. The very rare and highly valuable stamps will be shown only on special application and under certain conditions, but they do not amount to many, probably about 100, including such philatelic treasures as a pair of the famous "Post Office" Mauritius stamps, valued at something like £3,000. A specimen was lately sold in France for £1,500.

England's Smallest Church.

The church at Upleatham, Yorkshire, which measures 17 feet 9 inches by 13 feet, holds the record for smallness by a few inches. It is 4½ inches smaller than the smallest church in France. It is 900 years old.

Fishes Feel Little Pain.

It is well known that fishes have little susceptibility to pain, and that they are very tenacious of life. A curious example of this was seen at Newcastle the other day in the case of a trout which had been caught in the Tyne at Ovingham. Its head was in process of being severed from its body by a tight band of some fibrous substance. The band had worn quite through the skin and flesh down to the bone, and had the appearance of grasping this and the thorax, causing a deep incision in the flesh and other tissues quite round. The fish does not seem to have had the band fastened on it when small. The trout had apparently been caught in the toil, perhaps somebody's tackle, becoming tethered thereby, and so twisted in its efforts to get free that the band cut through its flesh right to the bone.—Newcastle Journal.

Modesty.

Alas, I do not know it all;
But, knowing men who think they do,
I wish that I might learn to think That I did, too.

Oh, we may smile at their conceit,
But they suppose 'tis thus we show
Our undisguised respect for them
And what they know.

From him who knows it all, they say
Contentment keeps forever hid—
I would not know it all, but wish
I thought I did.
—S. E. Kiser.

PLAYED CARDS IN FURNACE.

Four Pittsburg Men in Remarkable Test of Endurance.

Four men in Pittsburg, Pa., the other day took part in a game of euchre in a large furnace which had been heated to a few degrees above comfort point. The stakes were $500 and the winner was to be the player who should throw down his cards last. The men, whose names were James T. Sherry, Edward Shan, Thomas Rowe and Ellis Matthews, took their places at a small deal table at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when the furnace was heated to about 100 degrees. The temperature was raised every ten minutes, and the men, who wore nothing but their shirts, were soon somewhat warm. As the game progressed the cards began to curl up and became unmanageable, then the legs of the table caught fire, but still the heroic four played on. A trussed pigeon, which was in a dish beside the players, began to frizzle, but it was not until Shan's right bower was well alight that he threw down his cards and bolted, followed two minutes later by Sherry. For three minutes longer Rowe and Matthews continued to sit at the fast carbonizing table, when the latter, fearing he was going to faint, slowly withdrew, leaving Rowe the victor by fifty seconds, during which time he demolished the pigeon, which, according to his statement, "was done to a turn."

LARGEST IN THE WORLD.

New York Board of Education to Erect Mammoth Schoolhouse.

Unusual interest is taken in public school 62, the contract for the erection of which was recently approved by the board of education, says the New York Sun. That is because the building will be the biggest school in the world, according to the members of the building committee of the board of education, who have studied the school systems in this city and abroad.

It is to be erected in Hester street, between Norfolk and Essex streets. That neighborhood is one of the most densely populated in the city, and big as the school is to be it will be none too large to accommodate the children of the nearby tenements.

There will be seating capacity for 4,500 pupils, and they will be in charge of a corps of 124 teachers and two principals. The pupils will almost equal in number four regiments of United States infantry.

An Egytian Wedding.

An Egyptian "fellah" of the Nile Delta makes as much fuss of his wedding as he can, for it costs him a lot of money. Every thing, indeed, is conducted on a hard cash basis, commencing with the purchase of the bride herself. In order to make a goodly show, therefore, the bridegroom musters all the horses, camels and donkeys he can lay hands on among his friends, besides hiring conveyances for the bride and her family. The wife, however, can scarcely be said to grace the brilliant pageant with her presence, as she is invisible, being seated in the closely covered litter seen on the foremost camel. The essence of ladylike behavior among the Moslems is retirement, and the more valued a bride the more is she guarded from the public gaze. So she is immured in her stuffy litter, while the miscellaneous cavalcade winds its way along, preceded by a weird and alarming native band, to the house of the proud and happy bridegroom.

The Two Visitors.

Dame Fortune knocks at each man's door.
So bards and sages say—
Knocks once and stays to knock no more,
But hastens on her way.

Misfortune doesn't stop to knock
Until she tries the door.
But, if she cannot force the lock,
She knocks and knocks some more.

And if perchance the door is still Unopened to her, she
Just seats herself upon the sill
And waits there patiently.

Pigeon Brought Good News.

A homing pigeon brought joy to the darkened home of G. B. Harkness, of Sparrow's Point, Baltimore county, the other morning. Mr. and Mrs. Harkness started out in a small yacht one night before a storm, and not having been heard from, were believed to have perished. Shortly after breakfast, when the sorrowful family were engaged in prayer for the absent ones, there was a flutter and tapping at the window. A sister of Mrs. Harkness raised the sash, and in hopped the bird. Tied to one of its legs was a message, which ran: "Safe in Bedkin's creek after a hard struggle. Don't worry." The message was in the handwriting of Mr. Harkness, and was signed by him.

THE ISLAND OF GUAM.

Some New Facts About This Little Known Territory.

The only good map that has yet been made of the island of Guam is the result of a government survey and has been published by the War department. The little sketch map shown here is a reduction from it, and the map will interest many because very few people have as yet any idea of the form of the island, which is shown in the atlases scarcely larger than a dot.

In a rough way the island may be said to resemble in form the sole of a shoe. It is only twenty-nine miles long and from three to ten miles wide, with an area of about 150 square miles, or seven times as large as Manhattan Island.

It is the most southern of the chain of the Ladrones or Yarianne islands, which stretches 420 miles north and south. All the other islands belong to Germany, but they are very small, and Guam is the largest and most important of the group. It is four days' steaming to the east of the Philippines.

We observe on the map great paucity of information about the interior of the island. The reason is that the jungle which covers it is so dense that not even the natives have penetrated far into it, except in two or three places where paths extend from coast to coast.—New York Sun.

Cabbages in Pledge.

There is one pawnbroking establishment in connection with Covent Garden market that is absolutely without a rival. This pawnbroking license enables the holder to lend money on garden and other produce by special contracts that only hold good for forty-eight hours as the extreme limit. Many a good load of fruit, flowers or vegetables that may arrive late for one market, or that may not be instantly saleable, is pledged. Next morning the stuff can either be redeemed or sold by the broker.

Did you ever hear of the Grecian bend? The American girl of 1878 thought this style was elegant.

Oldest-Lived Family in England.

Lutterworth, near Leicester, claims the distinction of having been the home of the longest-lived large family in the kingdom. The last member of this remarkable family has just died at the age of eighty-eight. Her name was Ruth Moore, and she was one of a family of thirteen children, three of whom died at the age of seventy-five, one at seventy-six, one at seventy-seven, one at eighty, one at eighty-one, one at eighty-three, two at eighty-five, two at eighty-eight, and one at ninety. Each of the parents died at eighty, and the united ages of the family of fifteen total 1,218 years. —London Answers.

"Reposing on His Laurels."

Herr von Moser, the celebrated German poet, whose body has just been cremated at Gotha, had in his possession some years before his death a miniature coffin made of crystal destined to receive his ashes. In this coffin were contained a number of withered leaves of laurel, each of which had been plucked from one or other of the wreaths offered to him by admirers. The explanation of this was to be found in the often-repeated jest of the poet: "I shall repose upon my laurels." This prophecy has now been actually realized.

Clown Was Too Funny.

At a circus performance at Kherson, Russia, a clown offered to photograph each of the audience "after a new method," with the promise of money back if the likeness was not good. Small mirrors were then distributed, and the public were told to look in them. The joke was much appreciated by everyone but the police, who found cause to prosecute the clown for misrepresentation and fraud, and, despite his tearful protestations, he was hauled off to prison for a month.

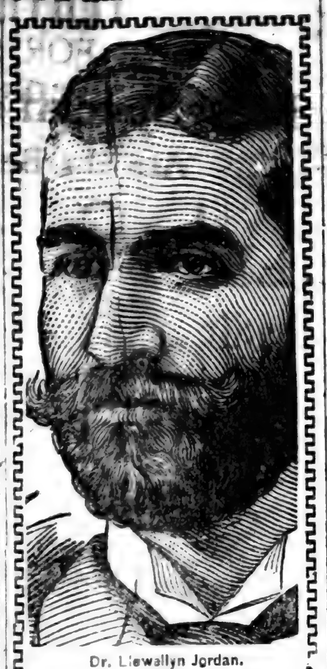
LLEWELLYN JORDAN, Medical Examiner of the U. S. Treasury Department, graduate of Columbia College, served three years at West Point, the following to say of Peruna:

Allow me to express my gratitude to you for the benefit derived from your wonderful remedy. One bottle has brought forth a change and I now consider myself a well man after months of suffering. Fellow sufferers, Peruna will cure you."

constantly increasing number of physicians prescribe Peruna in their practice. It has proven its merits so thoroughly that the doctors have overcome their prejudice against so-called patent medicines and recommend it to their patients.

Peruna occupies a unique position in medical science. It is the only internal systemic catarrh remedy known to the medical profession to-day. Catarrh, as every one will admit, is the cause of one-half the disease which afflicts mankind. Catarrh and catarrhal diseases afflict one-fourth of the people of United States.



Dr. Llewellyn Jordan, Medical Examiner United States Treasury.

Dr. P. Roberts, M. D., Washington, D. C., writes:

Through my own experience as well as that of many of my friends and acquaintances who have been cured or relieved of catarrh by the use of Hartman's Peruna, I can confidently recommend it to those suffering from catarrhal disorders, and have no hesitation in prescribing it to my patients."—Robert P. Roberts.

R. Robbins, Muskogee, I. T., writes: Peruna is the best medicine I know of to build up and to strengthen a weak stomach and give appetite. Besides prescribing it for catarrh, I have ordered it for run down and debilitated people, and have not had a patient but said it helped him. It is an excellent medicine and it fits so many cases.

I have a large practice, and have a call to prescribe your Peruna. I hope you will continue to do good to the sick and afflicted.

M. C. Gee writes from 513 Jones St., San Francisco, Cal.:

Peruna has performed so many wonderful cures in San Francisco that I am convinced that it is a valuable remedy. I have frequently advised its use for women, and find it insures regular and painless menstruation, cures leucorrhoea and ovarian troubles, and builds up the entire system. I also consider it one of the finest catarrh remedies I know of."—M. C. Gee, M. D.

Catarrh is a systemic disease curable only by systemic treatment. A remedy that cures catarrh must aim directly at the depressed nerve centres. This is why Peruna does it.

Peruna immediately invigorates the nerve centres which give vitality to the mucous membranes. Then catarrh disappears. Then catarrh is permanently cured.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Bird Tries to Feed Its Shadow.

A gentleman whose home is in a grove on the North Side relates a remarkable incident which has come under his observation within the past few weeks. A Kentucky cardinal is interfering with his comfort to such an extent that he threatens to shoot it.

Every morning shortly after daylight, for a period of a month, the gentleman has been awakened by a tapping and fluttering at his window, which each time continued for half an hour or longer. After several repetitions of the disturbance he cautiously opened the shutters and investigated. He found the redbird waging a fight with its reflection in the window pane. He frightened it away and hoped that this would break up the practice. However, the next morning the visit was repeated, and despite his efforts to discourage the visitor, every morning since it has broken his rest about 5.30 o'clock. Yesterday morning he was roused by the usual fluttering, and, securing a window stick, he started to enter the fight between Mr. Redbird and its reflection. Peeping out, his heart was softened. The bird had a piece of bread in its mouth and was trying to feed its shadow.—Lexington (Ky.) Herald.

Why Poles Are Not Germanized.

The official mind in Prussia seems to be gradually coming to the recognition that the policy pursued hitherto with regard to the Germanization of the Polish provinces has been as futile as it is costly. What happens in Polish Silesia is seemingly somewhat as follows: With the liberal sums received from the Prussian government as the price of their estates, the Polish proprietors liquidate their debts and devote the balance to founding banking establishments in the towns, in which they carry on a lucrative business by advancing money at reasonable rates of interest to the tradesmen and artisans, who in turn have laid out the loans so advantageously that a large and comparatively prosperous middle class have been created, who have actually been economically strong enough to push the German traders to the wall. Hence the fact that the German population in the Polish provinces is weaker in almost every respect at the present moment than was the case ten years ago.—Speaker.

THE CLEARING-OFF MAN.

Spills Sunshine and Cheer When Clouds Hang Low.

"He is the most encouraging man I ever knew; he always thinks it is going to clear off." That was a remark heard in the crowd on the street as people were hastening to the dock to start for the yacht race. This cheerful person had already cleared the weather so far as the little party who were discussing him were concerned. Their faces were radiant with smiles at the mere thought of him.

The man who always thinks it is going to clear off is a blessing to any community. He takes a cheerful view of the weather because he takes a cheerful view of everything. He is wise meterologically because, as a matter of fact, it generally does clear off, and he is wise temperamentally and in the world's sense because continued cheerfulness, a habitually hopeful view, is rewarded with the world's affection and confidence—two things which are worth a great deal more than its money.

There are too many good people in the world who make a kind of public calamity of their goodness. We doubt whether a good person who thus makes his goodness a cheerless and critical thing comes off as well in the eternal account as the man who, though he may have his little human weaknesses, makes people smile instead of frown—makes them firmly believe that dark skies are going to clear and instantly brightens into sympathetic radiance a rather weak and hazy quality of sunshine when it comes.

Since beauty is truth, the man who makes us believe in the essential beautifulness of the world must be a good and true man. In any case, with all his faults we love him.—New York Mail and Express.

Love can neither be bought nor sold, but it may be exchanged.

A Strange Custom.

In Denmark there is a strange but wise custom. Parents will exchange their children during the summer holidays. The little ones from the villages go to town and are all the better and brighter for their little knowledge of city life and what the world is doing. The little city folk are sent to be refreshed by the country air and come back with rosy cheeks and robust constitutions. It is dealt with, too, from an educational standpoint. At Zurich an agency has been established for the exchange of children of France, Germany and Switzerland, so that they may learn to speak the different languages.

WOMEN IN SPORT.

Should Ride Astride for Safety and Comfort.

Where one woman shoots, fishes or sails, a thousand ride on horseback, and these are exposed under present conditions to dangers which should be avoided. A woman should bestride a horse precisely as a man rides.

We have often called attention to the danger of the ordinary side-saddle—to the fact that the woman is wholly dependent upon her saddle girth, and in case of accident is absolutely without control over her own motions. She can cling firmly to the saddle, but that is all she can do. If anything goes wrong with the saddle, if a girth bursts, a strap breaks, a buckle tongue pulls out, and so the saddle becomes loose, it is impossible for the woman either to remedy the mischief or jump free and clear of the saddle and take her chance of a fall. On the other hand, the man or the woman who rides astride is free. If the accident to the saddle is slight, the rider is still able to cling to the horse from thigh to ankle, or if the horse cannot be ridden, then the rider is free to roll off or jump off, with an even chance of striking the ground feet first; while the woman who falls from, or with, the side-saddle, is almost certain to strike the ground on her head.

These arguments have been so frequently insisted on that they have become familiar, and it is well that they have become so, for they have appealed strongly to the hard common sense of many American women. In a certain Western State, an editorial in Forest and Stream on this subject converted all the young women of a county from riders of side-saddles to riders of men's saddles. Two or three young women, standing high in the social life of the community, grasped the force of the reasoning, adopted the cross saddle and were followed in the fashion which they set by practically all the women riders in the county. Riding in this fashion, they used to chase coyotes with greyhounds and had many fine races.

Within the last few years the practice of riding a man's saddle has been extensively taken up in cities like Boston, New York and Chicago. Some women had the courage to adopt this fashion long ago, and more and more of them are doing it. It is not making a rash prediction to say that the numbers will constantly increase, practically all the little girls now seen riding in New York ride astride as their brothers do, and as they grow up many of them will still cling to this sensible fashion. One of the best women cross-country riders in the United States has adopted it wholly on the ground of its greater safety and comfort. The fashion is especially to be recommended to those who by necessity or by choice ride in rough countries, or fast.—Forest and Stream.

Her head has been turned by adulation, and in her worship of self she forgets her duty to husband, family and country. She becomes unpatriotic, bartering her republican birthright for foreign titles. She becomes extravagant, shallow and vain. She is forgetting how to manage a home. She flits frivolously from pleasure to pleasure, and often from husband to husband. Man has placed her upon a pedestal, but such stern yet needful admonition as that of Dr. Dix proves that it is beginning to topple from her own acts.

The Oat Wonder.

Indications of Footsteps.

Tiptoe walking indicates surprise, curiosity, discretion or mystery.

The miser's walk is indicated in short, nervous steps, noiseless and anxious, and with stooped shoulders.

Energy or agitation is indicated in the quick step.

Preoccupied or absent-minded people will be found with toes turned in.

The proud step is slow and measured, the toes conspicuously turned out and legs straightened.

Uncertainty, hesitation and indecision are indicated by the wavering steps which follow every changing impulse of the mind.

Slow steps, whether long or short, suggest a gentle or reflective state of mind.

Obstinate people who, in argument, rely more on muscular power than on intellectual power, rest the feet flatly and firmly on the ground, walking heavily and slowly, and stand with legs firmly planted far apart.—Detroit Tribune.

Miss Alice M. Smith, of Minneapolis, Minn., tells how woman's monthly suffering may be permanently relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I have never before given my endorsement for any medicine, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has added so much to my life and happiness that I feel like making an exception in this case. For two years every month I would have two days of severe pain, and could find no relief, but one day when visiting a friend I ran across Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound,—she had used it with the best results and advised me to try it. I found that it worked wonders with me; I now experience no pain, and only had to use a few bottles to bring about this wonderful change. I use it occasionally now when I am exceptionally tired or worn out."—MISS ALICE M. High Official Indicted.

The federal grand jury returned an indictment against Joseph Ralph Burton, United States senator from Kansas, charging him, while a United States senator, on nine counts, with accepting five checks of $500 each from the Rialto Grain and Securities company for his alleged services in interceding with the postoffice department to render a favorable decision in matters affecting the permission of the Rialto company to use the mails.

The penalty provided upon conviction of the offense of which Senator Burton is charged is a penitentiary sentence of not more than two years and a fine of not more than $10,000, and one so convicted shall be rendered incapable of holding office of trust, honor or emolument under the government.

United States senators are immune from arrest except for certain specified crimes while the senate is in session. Senator Burton says he will go at once to St. Louis and defend the case and that he will be able to make it perfectly clear that there was no reason for bringing the indictment.

Caused by a Cow.

Illinois Central passenger fast mail train from New Orleans to Chicago was wrecked at Gates, Tenn.

The wreck was caused by the pilot striking a cow which was crossing the track. The animal was thrown against a switch and in some manner opened it, derailing the train and overturning it entirely, with the exception of the engine and mail car. John Harris, the only person killed, was a resident of Gates and was standing beside the track.

Vegetation Injured.

Attorney General Hart, of Georgia, has filed in the United States supreme court on behalf of the state of Georgia a bill for an injunction against the state of Tennessee, the Ducktown Sulphur, Copper and Iron Company and the Pittsburg and Tennessee Copper Company.

The defendant companies are engaged in mining and treating copper ore at Ducktown, Tenn., near the Georgia border, and the bill complains that the fumes from the smelters has had a disastrous effect on vegetation for a radius of thirty miles, covering much territory in Georgia.

It Is Denied.

Edmond Bennett, of Trinity church at Mobile, has telegraphed Senator Pettus saying that Colonel Harvey Jones authorizes the statement that he does not and never did charge that W. H. Armbrecht, recently appointed United States attorney for the Alabama southern district, embezzled church funds.

Armbrecht writes that his father is seriously ill and he can not come to Washington to answer the charges in person. His case will probably be postponed.

WEEVIL CAMPAIGN

As Outlined by Department of Agriculture.

The secretary of agriculture has approved the plans for the cotton boll weevil investigation in the southwest, for which a special appropriation of $250,000 has been made available. Secretary Wilson believes that the best methods for meeting the ravages caused by the boll weevil will be to put in actual practice the facts which have been accumulated by the department during the past two years in the matter of improving agricultural conditions, the planting of early maturing varieties of cotton, substitution of other crops, etc. The plans have been approved.

Farmers' Co-operative Work.

This will involve the organization of farmers in such a way as to secure the cultivation of tracts of cotton under specific instructions from the department of agriculture. Thus a definite working plan will be given to each farmer, the farmer himself to furnish the seed and fertilizers if such are required. Certain areas of cotton will serve as objects and will be planned to show the practicability of growing cotton despite the presence of the weevil. Similar work will be carried on in Louisiana. There the weevil has not yet advanced. It is planned to have 8,000 or 10,000 farmers engaged in this work.

Plant Breeding and Selection.

This work will have for its object the improvement of present varieties of cotton with a view to making them more prolific and earlier, so as to prevent the ravages of the weevil.

Cotton Diseases.

The bill making the appropriation directs the secretary to investigate other insects and diseases, and one serious malady which will receive attention is the so-called cotton root rot.

Diversification of Crops.

This is considered one of the most important lines of work, and will have for its object demonstration work in the direction of growing crops other than cotton, and of forage crops with cotton. Diversification farms will be secured by co-operation with the farmers themselves. Thirteen of these farms will be located in Texas, five in Louisiana, three in Mississippi and several in other cotton-growing states.

The work will be looked after by the bureau of plant industry. The division of entomology will continue its investigation on experiment farms. The question of the effect of fertilizers on the early maturing of cotton will be considered.

Investigations of parasites in the original home of the weevil will be made, the object being to introduce the parasites into Texas, with hope of securing the destruction through them of the boll weevil.

Inspection of cotton products, their fumigation and general expenses.

Inspecting the certification required by state laws will be another line of work conducted by the entomologist.

Investigations into the life, history and haoits of the weevil and testing of poisons and machines.

Investigations of other diseases than the cotton boll weevil, including the destructive cotton worm which is one of the most serious pests in a number of southern cotton growing states.

Cotton in Africa.

John and Selby Neely, cotton experts from Mississippi, sailed from Liverpool for the west coast of Africa under the auspices of the British Cotton Growers' association. The Neelys, who are accompanied by three negroes from the southern cotton belt, will conduct exhaustive experiments in the Sierra Leone district, and also will visit Nigeria and report on the progress there made in cotton cultivation.

Ensley, Ala., people are very much elated over the announcement that the officials of a large trolley car plant have decided to locate in the Steel City. This industry will give employment to about 1,000 men. It is also stated that the company intends doubling the force inside of the next six months.

Robbers Captured.

Two men charged with holding up and dynamiting the Seaboard Air Line passenger train at Sanderson, Fla., on January 17th have been captured. When arrested the men had dynamite in their possession. They have been identified by the engineer in whose cab they rode two miles and by the baggage master of the train. They have been operating in Alabama, but their home is in Folkston, Ga.

United States authorities will charge them with firing into a mail coach and jeopardizing the life of the mail agent. The federal statutes provide a life sentence for this offense.

The committee on elections of the mine workers' convention reported on the selection of the nomination of President Mitchell, Vice President Lewis and Secretary Wilson to succeed themselves. All three were reelected.

"The Cliffs," a famous resort known all over the country, located on Walden's Ridge, ten miles from Chattanooga, burned to the ground Monday night.

THE WINDS DIE DOWN

And the Facts of Moundville Disaster Develop.

Last Friday's cyclone at Moundville, Ala., is the third to have visited the town, the first one coming in 1887. No deaths resulted in either, but a number were hurt and property damaged. R. L. Griffin was the main sufferer in 1887 and this time he sustained a heavy loss.

At Sumter, Ala., the tornado played havoc. It demolished the engine room, boiler shed, fan house and one other building at the Belle Sumter mines, and one man was slightly injured. Work will be suspended for about sixty days in the mines.

While there are no fatalities reported in that immediate section, one has been reported about seventeen miles from Bessemer. David Houton, three miles from Sumter, and two children were killed.

The little daughter of James Gilbert, of Sumter, was also killed.

The storm of Thursday night did considerable damage at Athens, tearing down several buildings and one church.

The storm struck heavily near Bulard Shoals and blew down everything near the old jug factory except the dwelling of H. M. Morrison. The stable of Lil Morrison was blown away and he had to cut his horses out of the debris.

Another Cruiser.

The protected cruiser Charleston, the largest and most powerful vessel of its type in the American navy, was launched Saturday. The new cruiser continues the name of the 3,700-ton vessel wrecked several years ago in the Philippines. There will be but two other vessels in the United States navy of the Charleston class. They are the Milwaukee and the St. Louis, now under construction. While designed primarily for speed, they will be at the same time formidable fighting machines. Her coal capacity with the bunkers full is 1,500 tons, which would enable her to cross the Atlantic several times without recoaling. She cost $1,740,000.

Fair Nearing Completion.

The Louisiana Purchase Exposition company now stands ready and is waiting for the full and general installation of exhibits. The point has been reached where the management of the exposition is no longer occupied with the rapid advancement toward completion of the buildings, but instead lays particular stress upon the importance of the speedy shipment of exhibits, especially those assembled by domestic exhibitors. It is estimated that from 25,000 to 30,000 cars of domestic exhibits alone will reach St. Louis during the last of March and the fore part of April.

Galveston, Tex., is celebrating this week because of the completion of the sea wall, erected at a cost of millions of dollars and which is expected to insure the city against any recurrence of the disaster of four years ago. The United States navy is represented at the festivities by several warships, and the German cruiser Gazelle is there.

Advices from the north are to the effect that the Ohio river is again open to navigation, and that the Susquehanna is closed by an ice gorge at Wilkesbarre. Coal shipment down the Ohio will begin at once.

Sour Lake, Texas, lost its main business portion by fire Sunday. Loss $200,000.

Secretary Root has signed an order changing the name of Fort Columbus, on Governor's island, to Fort Jay, its original name.

Representative Spaulding, of North Dakota, has introduced bills to provide for the erection of monuments to the late President McKinley and Alexander Hamilton. The cost of each is not to exceed $100,000.

The "auto" is taking complete possession of east Florida.

A new $5 counterfeit silver certificate has appeared.

A Pretty Present.

I will send a pretty present to the one who sends me the full address of the most stammerers or stutterers by the 1st of February. I want to tell every stammerer in the world how I cured myself at home. They can do the same with ease in one week, or in three days if they come to me in person. Any mother can read instructions sent by mail and cure her child at home. Now, if you are kind and good you will send these poor stammerers' names. Remember the golden rule and God will remember you. I will send the present after I hear from each name. Address Rev. G. W. Randolph, Belmont Hotel, Birmingham, Ala.

The report of the grand jury calls attention to the fact that there are no fire escapes on the Mississippi state hospital for the insane, and demands that the trustees shall supply them. Escapes are also demanded for the government building and all other buildings where the laws require they shall be placed.

Radium and the Age of the S

By Garrett P. Serviss

A NEW phase of the discussion aroused by the wonderf erties of radium has been opened by Professor George win, best known as the son of the father of Darwinism, Darwin, and as a mathematician of great ability, who the tidal theory of the birth of the moon from the ear

Professor Darwin appeals to the newly discovere of energy contained in atoms, and illustrated by the radiation given forth from radium and other substance means of vastly prolonging the age and the future of the sun. Lord Kevlin many years ago calculated, upon the basis then known laws of matter and energy, that the sun could hardly have as a light-giving body more than 100,000,000 years, and upon similar the future duration of the sun has been estimated at not more than 10 and possibly not more than 5,000,000 years.

This, to be sure, would be ample time for the ripening of all present schemes, but it is a brief period in astronomical reckoning, and one likes to think of the sun as going out so soon.

But now comes Professor Darwin with the very comforting assuran the sun must be very much longer lived than we have hitherto su Knowing, as we do, he says, that an atom of matter is capable of co an enormous store of energy in itself, we have no right to assume t sun cannot liberate atomic energy to a degree at least comparable wi it would do if made of radium. And with this new light upon the he sees no reason to doubt the possibility of augmenting the estimate duration of the solar heat to ten or twenty times its present calculated

According to this view, we may regard the sun as having existed least one or two thousand million years, and we count upon its contin illuminate and warm the earth for one or two hundred million years come.

Ingratitude to Birds

Some Suggestions For Their Protec Before They Are Exterminated

By Louis Windmueller

SOME 10,000 specimens of birds have been created for benefit. Carrion would propagate disease without and ravens; owls, buzzards and other hawks prey upon rodents and venomous reptiles; but of all tribes the ins are the most numerous, their services the most valuable min would destroy the grain in the West, the cotton South and the fruit wherever it grows, if birds were to defend them until they ripen.

Aside from the debt of gratitude we owe for their ness, birds claim our affection by the charm of their p but we lay no obstacles in the way of divers enemies secute them. The fiercest of them all, the domestic cat, we permi garden and orchard to prowl and to make the artless bird his prey has time to fly. Instead of checking we countenance the enormous in crease of cats until it is estimated that 5,000,000 of them annually 20,000,000 birds. A license fee is exacted for keeping a watchful should not this rule apply, as it does in some places already, to the pensable cat? A German household must pay a small fee for the pr keeping a single cat.

Besides illiterate Italians, unrestrained American boys indulge mischievous pastime of maiming or killing flying birds with firearm shooters, and in robbing nests of the eggs they find. Such practices hibited by municipal regulations in every city, but laws are disreg surburban districts where nobody is delegated to enforce them.

It is hard to realize how bad taste could have so hardened the some women as to make them deadly foes of the feathered tribes. who are bound to satisfy a cruel desire for the feathers that in fashion demands allow whole species of birds to be exterminated. Th of the South are killed while they breed in order to procure their bridal plumage, and their young are left to die. These birds prey fish, which by tunneling through the levees of Louisiana cause damage. Millions of humming and paradise birds are satisfied to female vanity. Unless checked, ruthless spoliation eventually will late all tribes the plumage of which now gratify and please the f nature.

None of our societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals ha any effort to protect wild birds, although some are more useful and as much care as domesticated animals receive. The association endowed with police powers, could, if they would, do more for the p of birds than all the laws collaborated.

DAMON AND PYTHIAS.

Tale How Two Friends Helped Each Other in Arizona.

The story of Damon and Pythias is recalled by the tie of friendship binding two Arizona cowmen.

Shorty Dallas and Joe Roberts came to Arizona from the Middle States and settled in the Blue River country, near Clifton, which to this day remains secluded and more or less untouched by civilized ways. Their friendship had no limitation, so that when Roberts killed cattle that belonged to another man Dallas also broke the law to aid him.

Roberts was caught red-handed, but with a big six-shooter in either hand he shot his way through a circle of peace officers who surrounded him. With the officers hot after him Roberts rode to the cabin of Dallas at a mad gallop.

Dallas assured the posse in pursuit that he had not seen Roberts and believed he had fled in another direction. His statement was accepted in good faith and no further search was made there.

Roberts rested tranquilly in Dallas's cabin while the search went on. Then he filled his belt with cartridges, stocked his sack with "jerky," and wended his way toward those from which gun men seldom Mexico.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

JANUARY 27TH.

The senate proceedings included a speech by Mr. Simmons, of North Carolina in support of the Panama canal treaty and the passage of a number of bills and resolutions. Mr. Simmons was the first democratic senator to speak in favor of the measure.

The senate committee on foreign relations rescinded its former action in proposing amendments to the Panama canal treaty and will recommend that the senate should act on the treaty as it stands without change.

The senate adopted the resolution authorizing the secretary of state to open negotiations with Great Britain for a revision of the joint regulations for protection of the fur seals of Alaska and also the resolution authorizing the committee on privileges and elections to enter upon an investigation into the charges against Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah.

The following bills passed: Extending to the mints at Denver, San Francisco and New Orleans the privilege of coining more coins.

Authorizing the purchase of a marble bust of General Lafayette.

Authorizing the erection of a bronze statue of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow on government land in Washington.

General debate in the house on the urgent deficiency bill digressed to a discussion of political topics, the race question and aerial navigation.

Mr. Hardwick, democrat, Georgia, made an extended address on the race problem.

Mr. Hemenway, Indiana, from the committee on appropriations, reported the resolution requesting the secretary of war for a statement showing the amount of money disbursed by the department in promotion of flying machine experiments, whether under direction of Professor S. P. Langley or otherwise, with a recommendation by the committee that it be laid on the table.

The house went into committee of the whole with Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in the chair, and resumed consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

JANUARY 28TH.

The time of the senate was devoted to debate rather than to set speeches on the attitude of the United States toward the Panama revolution. There was a variation, however, in that the discussion also had reference to the right of the president to withhold such information called for by the senate.

The immediate foundation of the controversy was the democratic caucus resolution calling upon the president to state whether he had yet supplied all the papers in the archives relating upon the Panama affair.

The joint resolution authorizing the acceptance from citizens of France of a reproduction of D'Angers' bust of Washington was passed.

When Mr. Morgan's resolution calling for Minister Buchanan's letters concerning the amendment to the canal treaty was laid before the senate, Mr. Morgan withdrew it, saying he had been informed that it was the intention of the president to send the document to the senate in executive session.

The house for an hour was entranced by a speech made by Mr. J. Adam Bede, a republican member from Minnesota, who made his maiden go, and won his spurs. His remarks were replete with wit and humor as well as serious thought. Now and then, for purposes of illustration, he would tell a story whose recital greatly amused the audience.

He received the closest attention of republicans and democrats alike, and drew laughter and applause first from one side and then from the other side of the house, and at times both sides of the chamber joined in vigorous applause.

There also was a discussion on finance by Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, besides references to the Panama canal and the race problem in the south.

When the house convened Mr. Vanner, of Nevada, sought to secure consideration of a resolution calling on the secretary of war for information as to what articles manufactured in the department are made by convict labor. Objection to its consideration on the ground that it was not a privileged resolution was sustained. The agreement debate on the urgent deficiency bill was extended.

The house then went into committee of the whole with Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in the chair, and resumed consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The following bills passed: Extending to the mints at Denver, San Francisco and New Orleans the privilege of coining more coins.

Authorizing the purchase of a marble bust of General Lafayette.

Authorizing the erection of a bronze statue of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow on government land in Washington.

General debate in the house on the urgent deficiency bill digressed to a discussion of political topics, the race question and aerial navigation.

Mr. Hardwick, democrat, Georgia, made an extended address on the race problem.

Mr. Hemenway, Indiana, from the committee on appropriations, reported the resolution requesting the secretary of war for a statement showing the amount of money disbursed by the department in promotion of flying machine experiments, whether under direction of Professor S. P. Langley or otherwise, with a recommendation by the committee that it be laid on the table.

The house went into committee of the whole with Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in the chair, and resumed consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

JANUARY 28TH.

The time of the senate was devoted to debate rather than to set speeches on the attitude of the United States toward the Panama revolution. There was a variation, however, in that the discussion also had reference to the right of the president to withhold such information called for by the senate.

The immediate foundation of the controversy was the democratic caucus resolution calling upon the president to state whether he had yet supplied all the papers in the archives bearing upon the Panama affair.

The joint resolution authorizing the acceptance from citizens of France of a reproduction of D'Angers' bust of Washington was passed.

When Mr. Morgan's resolution calling for Minister Buchanan's letters concerning the amendment to the canal treaty was laid before the senate, Mr. Morgan withdrew it, saying he had been informed that it was the intention of the president to send the document to the senate in executive session.

The house for an hour was entranced by a speech made by Mr. J. Adam Bede, a republican member from Minnesota, who made his maiden go, and won his spurs. His remarks were replete with wit and humor as well as serious thought. Now and then, for purposes of illustration, he would tell a story whose recital greatly amused the audience.

He received the closest attention of republicans and democrats alike, and low laughter and applause first from one side and then from the other side of the house, and at times both sides of the chamber joined in vigorous applause.

There also was a discussion on finance by Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, and Mr. Williams, of Mississippi, because references to the Panama canal and the race problem in the south.

When the house convened Mr. Vanner, of Nevada, sought to secure consideration of a resolution calling upon the secretary of war for information as to what articles manufactured by the department are made by convict labor. Objection to its consideration on the ground that it was not a privileged resolution was sustained.

The agreement debate on the urgent deficiency bill was extended.

The house then went into committee of the whole with Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in the chair, and resumed consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

JANUARY 29.

The senate adopted the resolution introduced by Mr. Culberson for the democratic caucus which calls on the president to state all facts bearing on the controversy of Panama.

The vote on the resolution was unanimous, but there was a roll call on the amendments suggested by Mr. Cullom for the republican side of the chamber, calling for the information only in case the president should consider it not incompatible with the public interest to supply it. This amendment was adopted.

Mr. Tillman introduced a resolution asking for more specific information from the secretary of the treasury concerning the nomination of W. H. Crum as collector of customs for the port of Charleston, S. C., than was contained in the letter from the secretary.

The house considered whether members of congress are entitled to be paid mileage a second time. The controversy arose on an item in the urgent deficiency bill providing for two payments of mileage for senators and members of the house on account of the extra session which merged into the regular session.

A point of order was raised by Mr. Maddox, democrat, of Georgia, against the payment of mileage a second time.

The interest manifested in the question was shown by the fact that there were few empty seats on either side of the chamber when the mileage item was reported.

An adjournment was taken before a conclusion was reached.

The house went into committee of the whole with Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, in the chair, and resumed consideration of the urgent deficiency bill. The reading of the bill under the five-minute rule was begun when Mr. Hill, of Connecticut, made a point of order against the paragraph appropriating $100,000 for the expenses of the commission on international exchange, appointed to bring about a fixed relationship between gold standard and silver-using countries. He contended that it was now legislation.

The point of order was sustained and the item was struck out.

Bancroft Fired on Colombians.

The United States gunboat Bancroft reports the attitude of the San Blas Indians at Caledonia bay to be not only unfriendly, but decidedly aggressive.

Last Tuesday men from one of the Bancroft's boats purchased a few cocoanuts from the Indians and paid more than full value for them. That night when it was dark twenty canoes were seen approaching the Bancroft.

The gunboat turned her searchlights on the canoes and it was revealed that each boat carried as many Indians as could crowd in, probably 200 in all. All the men were armed with bows and arrows, guns and other weapons. Their faces were besmeared with paint. Their intentions were hostile. They hoped to surprise the ship.

The commander of the Bancroft ordered the gunboat cleared for action. A quick-firing Colt gun was placed and orders were given the gunners of this piece to keep a ceaseless fire all around the canoes. As soon as the Indians heard this rain of bullets, they immediately began to retreat toward shore.

The gunners were given express orders not to fire at the Indians, so the bullets cut the air and churned the water all around them.

Cattle Quarantine.

An epidemic of splenetic, or Texas fever, is raging throughout the cattle herds of the south. Secretary of Agriculture Wilson says, and quarantine lines for beef are drawn across the continent from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The "deadline" begins at the northern boundary of California, and follows the border line of the state to the south and extends eastward along the southern confines of Arizona and New Mexico, north and southern Colorado, and east to the Mississippi river, and north to the northern boundary of Tennessee, and then follows the northern line of Virginia to Maryland and the ocean. After February 1st no cattle will be allowed to cross the line from the south except under stringent conditions, laid down by the bureau of animal industry.

Our Trade With Russia.

Exports from the United States to Russia in the year just ended aggregated practically $20,000,000. This is more than double the amount of our exports to Russia in 1901, the year in which duties were advanced upon merchandise from the United States entering Russia, and is also double the average for many years preceding that date.

The chief growth in our exports to Russia, in the two years in question, has been in cotton, agricultural implements, copper and its manufactures, and naval stores. In iron and steel there has been a slight reduction. Raw cotton has more than tripled.

RAN A BLOCK

After Getting Three Stab Wounds in His Heart.

Walter Bennett was stabbed to death at Gurley, Ala., Thursday night by E. Conley, a young man of the town. The tragedy occurred on the main street. The two had trouble during the day and early evening, and Bennett was seen to strike Conley, who pulled a knife and stabbed him three times in the heart, and as he turned to run slashed him in the neck. Bennett ran a block into a saloon and fell dead against the bar. Conley was arrested immediately. The prisoner is 18 years old and his victim was 22. Both are well connected.

PULLED UP BY HIS GUN,

Which Was Accidentally Discharged, and Holt is Dead.

While rabbit hunting in the snow near Epps, Evans David accidentally shot and killed Zane Holt.

David had climbed up an embankment and was trying to assist Holt up with the muzzle of his gun, which was discharged, inflicting a mortal wound.

Holt lived an hour. David is prostrated with grief.

Chaffee Wants Land.

Lieutenant General Chaffee, as chief of staff, has made a report to the secretary of war which will be transmitted to congress, urging an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of four tracts of ground, one in each of the four quarters of the United States, for military maneuvers.

General Chaffee says that experience shows that it is not possible to rent suitable tracts. He says investigation indicates a desirable locality in the Donewagn valley in Pennsylvania, one near West Point, Ky., and one in California. Tracts desired must be from seven to eight miles long and from three to four miles wide.

Insurance Reports.

Fire insurance companies doing business in Alabama last year seem to have made good money. Deputy Commissioner E. R. McDavid has been busy several days receiving reports, and while only about one-fourth of the companies have sent in their statements, the indications are that the percentage of losses for the year will be less than half the amount of receipts. This is considered an exceptionally fine showing. The percentage of losses last year was 63.8 and the ratio of losses to premium receipts during the past six years has been 59.6.

Soil Surveys.

Representative Underwood received notice from the secretary of agriculture that the department, upon his request, had authorized a soil survey for Blount county, Alabama. The survey party will give particular attention to the question of fruit, as from the county's location it expects to find some of the desirable fruit soils that have been encountered in similarly situated areas in adjoining states.

Congressman Bowie has been notified that the department will make a soil survey of Dallas county, Alabama, beginning in October.

Buggy Company Burned Out.

At Talladega, Ala., fire destroyed the three-story building of the Hocks-Kyser Buggy Company with the contents. Loss about $6,000, covered by insurance. The building was owned by R. H. Whatley and is valued at $3,000. The origin is unknown.

Fred Smith, brakeman on the Birmingham Southern, was instantly killed at Ensley, Ala., by striking his head against the trestle on the Frisco line. He is supposed to have been standing up on top of the cars when he was struck. The train was going at a high rate of speed.

H. R. Shivers, formerly a gauger in the employ of the federal government, has been indicted by the grand jury at Montgomery, Ala., for making fraudulent entries in the record book in connection with the affairs of the Kohn Distilling company.

The Linden National bank, Linden, Ala., has been authorized to commence business; capital, $25,000.

President Roosevelt transmitted to congress a recommendation that the "very patriotic offer of the Polish organization be accepted," and that instead of the statue of Pulaski (which in the judgment of his Polish compatriots should be equestrian) there be a pedestrian statue of Kosciusko accepted by the government.

In discussing the indictment of Senator Burton, of Kansas, Senator Morgan, of Alabama, said: "If republican senators continue to be indicted in federal courts, I am of the opinion that they will reduce their own numbers to such an extent that we can defeat the president's Panama canal treaty."

Pittsburg capitalists recently purchased property in the vicinity of Five Mile creek, near Birmingham, Ala. Their representatives have been locating a site for a new steel mill to be superior to anything in the south, the furnaces being constructed on the same identical plan as those at the great plant at Homestead, admitted the most successful steel making plant in the world.

The steel mill will be the largest and most modern in the country, and will be located at Boyles, five miles from Birmingham. In addition to the steel plant furnaces are expected to soon follow the announced determination of the purchasers some time ago being now about to be materialized. Several millions of dollars will probably be expended in developing this property.

Filling the Order.

The Ensley, Ala., steel plant is now working upon an order of 5000 tons of steel rail for the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company, being the first consignment of the order for 30,000 tons of rail placed some time ago. The 5,000 tons will make about 200 car loads.

The rail now being turned out is of the heaviest variety, weighing eighty pounds to the yard. It will be sent to various points along the system as completed.

The Cane Crop.

Some cold weather has prevailed during the past week, and in portions of the sugar district a heavy fall of sleet is reported. The general situation concerning the coming crop is favorable, and the outlook is good everywhere.

Shut Down.

The South Chicago steel rail mills, which were scheduled to open this week, will not do so. Instead the plate mill has been shut down, throwing 800 men out of employment.

The shut-down is said to be due to the demand of officers of the Machinists' union for a conference with the officials of the company today relative to the reduction of wages of the machinists. The machinists accepted the cut under protest, and a strike was threatened unless a conference was granted and the wages restored. In answer the company announced the closing of the plate mill.

FOURTEEN YEARS

A Prisoner Mrs. Maybrick to be Released.

A London newspaper says that Mrs. Florence Maybrick, the American woman who was serving a life sentence on the charge of having poisoned her husband, was released from Aylesbury January 25th on special license.

Florence Maybrick, the daughter of the late W. G. Chandler, a banker of Mobile, Ala., was convicted in Liverpool in 1889 of having poisoned her husband, James Maybrick, a cotton broker, who lived part of the time in Norfolk and part in Liverpool. She was sentenced to death.

This sentence, however, was later commuted to life imprisonment.

It is said that the following conditions attach to her release from prison:

"That she will not appear on the public stage or write a book of her experiences, and shall in no way endeavor to attract public attention to herself."

Many efforts have been made during Mrs. Maybrick's imprisonment to have her pardoned, and it was announced on March 23, 1903, on authority of the home office, that she would be released.

Short Weight the Claim.

The grand jury has returned an indictment against J. H. Coughlan, formerly at the head of the cotton firm of Smith & Coughlan, of Birmingham, Ala., charging him with grand larceny.

Several months ago it was charged that the firm of Smith & Coughlan had shipped "short bales" of cotton to several firms in Savannah, Liverpool and other ports. It was alleged that by this shortgae in the weight of bales the sum of something over $200,000 was due the various concerns which had purchased cotton from the firm of which Mr. Coughlan was head. It was further reported that Mr. Coughlan had sent out bills of lading for certain amounts of cotton and that the deliveries did not agree with the weights set down in the bills of lading.

The various railroad companies were at first held responsible for the short weight bales, but they in turn placed the responsibility on Smith & Coughlan and an investigation was begun.

He Deserves Worse.

Advices said to come from authoritative sources in Russia bring a remarkable tale. They state that during the recent maneuvers of Russian troops, Grand Duke Serge, governor general of Moscow, ordered a bridge blown up, forgetting that the structure was crowded with troops. The unintelligent subordinates obeyed the order regardless of consequences, and as a result fifty officers and one thousand men were killed, or wounded. Serge's removal from the army and the loss of his responsible position is said to be imminent.

Decided to Refund.

Attalla, Ala., had an election to decide whether or not the city would issue $20,000 refunding bonds and the vote was 100 for to three against.

During the boom days Attalla issued $50,000 bonds and built an electric light plant and water works system. The plant bankrupted the town and the city defaulted in interest. The light plant has not been operated in five years and over $10,000 has been spent recently on the water plant. Bondholders have agreed to take $20,000 for the debt and hence the election.

It is reported that northern iron is being sold at less than cost.

Progresso, Yucatan, suffered a $2,600,000 fire Thursday.

While hunting at Cottondale, Ala., William Toxey suffered a painful, though not serious, accident. Having failed to notice that the muzzle of his gun had become stopped with mud, he fired and the gun exploded, inflicting a painful wound in his lower jaw.

Postmaster General Payne answered the inquiry of the house as to the "livery" of his department. He says there are no horses or carriages provided for his department except those for himself. He has four horses and three carriages maintained at government expense. The total cost of horses, carriages and harness was $3,005.

M. Bunau-Varilla, the minister from Panama, through his attorney, has made demands for retraction upon the Washington Post and the New York World similar to those made upon the New York Evening Post.

A PATTLED CONVERT.

She talked to me long ago on the Ego of Thought—
A pretty philosopher, too,
Who needed to speak but one sentence to make
A fervent disciple of me;
The fathomless depths of oceans she talked reached,
And heights by no wing ever sought,
While glad and enraptured I listened, as she Discoursed on the Ego of Thought.

The sober light grew in her wonderful eyes;
I watched the rose glow on her cheek;
That's all I remember about the discourse,
Though more such I'd willingly seek;
I understand naught of it all—but I'll swear
That every word of it was true!
(I make this confession to you).

How Jack's Debts Were Paid

By A. B. SCUDDER.

WHEN Aunt Eliza began to cry, Helen never could stand that, so she tried her best to check her aunt's flowing tears.

What was it all about? A trifle? People generally do disagree over trifles. This cause of difference, however, between Helen and her aunt was $20,000, which had been left to Helen by a relative. Helen declared the money did not belong to her.

Helen Reeve was a young widow. She looked very pretty as she stood before her aunt in her half gown of mourning, her wavy black hair combed back from a broad, low forehead, and coiled with an unruly knot at the nape of her neck. Aunt Eliza was not inclined to find fault with the fate that caused her to be the companion of such a charming young woman.

"Not belong to you!" cried Aunt Eliza. "What on earth do you mean?"

"I mean," said Helen, "that this sum will just pay the last of poor Jack's debts, and I am going to pay them."

"There is only one way to 'settle,'" said her aunt, "and that is for you to take this money and be thankful to the good Lord that it has been thrown your way, and not act so ungrateful to Providence for your good luck."

"I think," said Helen, "I see what Providence meant me to do with it. When dear Jack died I know the thing that worried him most during his last days was the money he owed his old friend, Mr. Bethune. Mr. Bethune was ruined, aunty. The greatest happiness that this money brings to me is the thought that I can do him and his family some good. The poor man is blind. They live down near the river somewhere, and are very poor."

Aunt Eliza looked obstinate, but their talk ended in an agreement to see old Mr. Carruthers, the lawyer. He was consulted and would not deny that there was justice in Helen's determination, although he did not consider her called upon to carry it out.

But she did. Fifteen thousand dollars was paid to Mr. Bethune. A letter that she received at this time had the effect of closing Aunt Eliza's mouth, no matter what her inner reflections might be. It was from a daughter of Mr. Bethune, and gave Helen such thanks as made her heart feel warm and her cheeks to glow with delight.

Now there remained $5000 more. The other creditor, Mr. Clarence Bartlett, was a rich man. Battles began again between Helen and Aunt Eliza.

"I have never forgotten what I heard he said about Jack, and he shall have his due if it be only for the opportunity of expressing my feelings. I want Jack's name cleared from every imputation of dishonesty."

"There never was any on it," said Aunt Eliza. "Everybody knew that if he had lived he would have successfully carried out his business."

"Mr. Bartlett said differently."

"I declare, Helen, you make me ill. I managed to get along with the first affair; that turned out a mercy, to be sure, for that poor blind man, but this! Why, I never heard of anything so uncalled for."

But Helen was determined, and in spite of Aunt Eliza the money was ordered to be paid. Then Helen wrote a letter in which she expressed her pleasure in being able to settle the debt, and gave Mr. Clarence Bartlett a rap for having expressed an opinion derogatory to her young husband, signing it "very truly yours," in the most dignified manner.

To Helen's boundless indignation there came a letter from Mr. Bartlett, in which he informed her that she was mistaken as to his ever having blamed her husband, and coolly informed her that although he approved of her wish to settle her husband's debts, she could not do so where he was concerned; that he had always considered her husband a personal friend; that he would not have troubled her with this letter, but for the reason that he felt it due to himself to refute the misrepresentations which had evidently been so deeply impressed upon her mind.

"The most impertinent letter I ever read in my life," she declared to Aunt Eliza. But her aunt would not see it that way.

"I will go and see Mr. Carruthers this very day," cried Helen.

Aunt Eliza could not trust herself to answer. Silence was her only safeguard.

Down to Mr. Carruthers' office rushed Helen, but she had to be content with his saying:

"Very well, Mrs. Reeve, I will do my best."

The days went on, and Mr. Carruthers said that Mr. Bartlett was out of town, so nothing could be done with the money which awaited him.

Summer came, and Aunt Eliza decided that after their worry they needed a change. Aunt Eliza was neither a tyrant nor a miser. She cared little whether Helen had a penny or not; she had plenty for both. But she had chosen to be delighted when Helen's fortune came to her, for she had been left with little and had a great love for beautiful things, and this money would make her feel independent in the gratification of her desires.

"I am sure I am thankful that we have anything left," said Aunt Eliza, and she gave a sigh of relief, as if there had been a time when she thought that Helen was in a fair way to give away not only her own money, but her aunt's, also.

They decided to visit the Yosemite, and Aunt Eliza was in her element. She would arrange and rearrange finery for herself and Helen; refuse to buy a ribbon because they must economize, and next day purchase some article not at all needed, and pay a most extravagant price with smiling satisfaction.

Every one knows the almost impossible roads by stage to "Clark's" in going down the Yosemite Valley. Helen and her aunt had gone as far as possible by rail, and were now in the last stages of their journey behind six horses in the lumbering six-seated coach usually used to finish this trip and convey patrons to their final destination. There were two ladies besides Helen and her aunt, and on the rear seat the brother of the ladies and another gentleman.

Helen was enjoying the ride and paying no attention to the fears and complaints of the others over the roughness of the road. There were magnificent views, and as they went higher the ladies grasped the sides of the vehicle and held on to it in fear and trembling, as they looked down the dangerous mountainside.

Helen had well balanced nerves, and thought of on danger; but suddenly she was conscious of a crash, a fall, one horrible shriek from the other ladies, then it seemed to her that she was rolling on, on into eternity. She stopped at last and lay stil. Was this death?

But after a moment the inconvenience of supporting a weight that lay across her convinced her that she was much alive. She managed to turn partly over and crawl out from under the debris. She was not much hurt.

"Aunt Eliza! Aunt Eliza!" called Helen.

All was silence. She looked about her, but could see only wreckage. A little way up the hill a man lay still and motionless, his white face turned upward in the sunlight. Sudden fear made her turn away. Just then a man came from behind a clump of bushes, pale, and with his right arm hanging helplessly.

"Thank God, somebody is alive!" cried Helen.

"It is a miracle," he faintly answered.

"Where are the others?"

"Oh, I can't tell. I fear they are all under the wagon."

"What shall we do?"

He looked down helplessly at his arm and Helen asked pityingly:

"Broken?"

"Never mind," he said, "we can't lament over that until we know there is nothing worse."

Just then several men appeared, who had been driving in sight of the accident. They first released the ladies under the coach and then placed them gently in a wagon. Finally every one was disposed of but Helen and the gentleman with the broken arm.

"I have a one-seated buck not far from here," one of the mountaineers suggested.

The gentleman looked dolefully at his arm.

"Oh, I can drive, if that's all," said Helen. "Let's go. It's only a short distance. You are suffering terribly," as she saw him growing pale.

"I believe I am," he answered.

They drove off, and after the first few minutes began to talk.

"It seemed to me that we rolled over and over for an endless time," said Helen.

"You did turn a complete somersault. I was thrown off at the first lurch. The elderly lady I do not think is much hurt. Your aunt, you called her?"

"Yes, my aunt."

"Are you frightened?" he asked suddenly, looking at her curiously.

"I don't know," said Helen, "I feel rather wild."

"Few young ladies have as serviceable nerves as yours."

Helen did not answer at once, but cried, as a turn of the road brought a house in view:

"Oh, there is the hotel! I am so glad."

An hour later she was watching by her aunt's bedside. She felt relieved at the physician's assurance that Aunt Eliza was not seriously hurt. For two or three days she was kept a prisoner, but Aunt Eliza was not one to pet ailments, and was soon about.

The next day last one after the accident Helen's driving companion sent to ask after her health, and she was appalled by the name on the card: "Mr. Clarence Bartlett."

Aunt Eliza laughed heartily at the absurd situation.

"I think it is very impertinent of him," said Helen.

"To get his arm broken?"

"To inquire after us."

"Perhaps he does not know who we are," said Aunt Eliza.

"I think I would perhaps like to leave here to-morrow," was Helen's only reply.

Aunt Helen did not argue, as she knew that it would only increase Helen's prejudice, but she proposed to stay where she was.

It was not long before Helen and he met. She was on an upper piazza early one evening, and came face to face with him. His arm was in a sling, and he looked pale and worn, but was evidently pleased to see her again.

He held out his hand.

"I am glad to have made your acquaintance, Mrs. Reeve. You will introduce me to your aunt, will you not? Your husband and I were good friends. I was also a friend of your father, although I was young at the time."

She could not refuse, and he talked so pleasantly that Helen could not help forgetting her prejudice, and did not see her way clear to bringing up the money question. Aunt Eliza was delighted, but shrewdly held her peace.

Such a first meeting as they had had naturally caused their acquaintance to grow rapidly. Mr. Bartlett was most agreeable, and all his efforts tended to make Helen's days happy. They stayed six weeks at the hotel, and it was the evening before they were to go. Helen and he were on the piazza enjoying the sunset, when Aunt Eliza came up with a letter.

"For you, Helen."

She stood and chatted a few moments and then said she must be off and finish packing. Helen still held the letter in her hand, turning it over and over in embarrassment, for she recognized the writing of Mr. Carruthers. She was nervously fumbling at the clasp of the bag at her side, to put the letter out of sight, when Mr. Bartlett said:

"Pray, read your letter."

"It is of no consequence," Helen answered.

"I am not so sure of that," he returned in an odd voice. "At all events, read it, or you will be thinking about it all the evening."

Helen opened the letter and read the crabbed handwriting in great haste. Mr. Carruthers wrote to say that Mr. Bartlett refused to take the money and "wished to hear no more about it." She flushed and glanced at her companion.

He was looking at her with a quiet smile.

"I think I know whom your letter is from," and he laughed.

"Please don't," she said, coloring more brightly, but determined to speak now. "Mr. Bartlett, I want to talk with you about this. I want you to do me a favor, but first promise——" she hesitated.

"You don't want me to promise until I have heard what it is, do you?"

"Only that tiresome money. I want you to take it."

"Oh, he answered slowly and gravely. "Yes, say you will. It will make me so much happier."

He waited a moment, and then said:

"I will take it on one condition."

Something in his voice made her eyes drop suddenly.

"That I may take you with it," he whispered, as he leaned over her. "May I, Helen?" He held her hand now—and it was not withdrawn.—Waverley Magazine.

A Cereal Story.

The refreshing part of a story which the New York Times recounts is not the stupidity of man in his domestic aspect. The particular man concerned is an actor whose wife—an actress—is an earnest advocate of the theory that food should fit the consumer rather than the reverse. Consequently there are periods when milk flows incessantly through the household menu. Again it is hot water, and at other times nuts, fruits and grains alone are relied upon to nourish genius to its finest flower.

Once, in the grain age, the wife was called away to a rehearsal that was likely to last well into the afternoon. She told her husband that he would have to get his own luncheon, and he cheerfully consented to do it.

"I had a fine meal on your new cereal," he said, when she returned.

"What do you mean?" she inquired. "I haven't any new cereal in the house."

"Why, that nutty sort of stuff you left on the dining-room table."

The wife sat down suddenly. "You've eaten up my window garden!" she wailed. "All my petunia, nasturtium and pansy seeds!"

Woman in Masculine Garb.

Since Dr. Mary Walker introduced the idea of women wearing the masculine habit, she has won recognition in a startling way. The male garb is not donned by women for its comforts, but to conceal identity, bury a past, and divert to one side the undesired admiration and attentions of men.

In the present year alone there have been five recorded cases where women have risen to man's commercial and professional stature merely by the aid of his garments. At home the disguise would be doffed, and the prudent, modest housewife and decorous mother would blossom forth. The scorn of men and also their flattery is avoided by a mere change of garments. Women suffragists have long been looking for emancipation from the tyranny of man. Where else can freedom be found so easily as in the robes of masculine dignity?—Boston Advertiser.

INLAND SEA OF JAPAN

Beauties of Yokohama Charming to Eyes of Foreigners.

Yokohama.—It is a most pleasant sensation to find one's self once again entering the Shimonoseki Straits with the prospect of a trip through the Inland Sea, where nature has been so lavish in her bestowal of beautiful things to be admired. Then, too, there is always this interesting place to look forward to as a chance of final enjoyment before taking the steamer for a transpacific voyage. Yokohama to the average foreigner seems to mean far more than Tokio, although the latter is the capital and a very much larger place.

The entrance to the Inland Sea from the westward is through quite a narrow passage, through which the current at certain times of the year attains a velocity of more than five miles an hour. The waters of the sea, bordered with terrace-ribbed hills, villages nestling in cozy little nooks, and the beautiful and varied coverings of the hills form a picture that baffles the power of an ordinary pen to describe with any degree of justice. The care and attention bestowed on all connected with cultivation of the soil is what impresses one particularly and the rice fields are of greatest interest. It also lends diversity of coloring in its many shades of green.

To a Japanese returning home the contrast of coloring that he finds under the bright sunshine of his own country, when compared with the shows offered by some of the countries that he might call his neighbors, must make him more than ever in love with his native land. Where color is so essential a part of any view that the very name for landscape embodies it there can be no wonder that Japanese globe-trotters miss their lovely land; for their word "keshiki" (scenery) means "landscape color," which seems to fully carry the meaning they intend to convey.

In former years the junks were everywhere in evidence, and one seldom saw any other type of craft, but nowadays this has all undergone a very decided change, for instead of the always picturesque junk with its peculiar sails and marvelous gear one finds that the schooner rig has supplanted all others. In numerous cases the native style of hull is still used, but in the vast majority hulls like those we are accustomed to see are the favorites. With their modern civilization utility is apparently the sentiment of the hour.

The way every approach is commanded by batteries with modern high-powered artillery induces the belief that an enemy would have a difficult task to force a passage. On every hand it looks as though Japan had concluded that war was bound to come eventually, and that the way to make it short and decisive was to be prepared. Chimneys smoking along the shores tell the tale of mines being worked and foundries in full blast. New harbors appear in advantageous localities, and the stone breakwaters are evidence of large sums spent in the interest of the maritime portion of the community.

This city was the first treaty port opened to foreign commerce, and at present owes its importance entirely to foreign trade. One recognizes several familiar names given to places about the bay through which vessels pass before reaching the anchorage. Mississippi Bay was one that seemed to require a bit of explanation. It was simple, enough, however, as the Mississippi was one of our famous side-wheel frigates, and she came over here with Commodore Matthew C. Perry when he made his famous cruise.

Yokohama was merely a fishing village in the middle of the last century, but now a fine esplanade of houses in the more modern European style faces the sea and forms a pleasing contrast with those of native architecture. Behind all a bold eminence known as the Bluff is covered with handsome villas, gardens, and winding drives. These are all easily seen from the comfortable seat of a jinrikisha, the universal wheeled vehicle of Japan. This conveyance is a "baby chaise." The latest wrinkle is bicycle wheels, rubber tires included, with long shafts, and a coolie between them who moves on the trot.

When a few years ago the first wheeled vehicle was introduced by an Englishman the natives called it simply a "wheel." The invention has proved a great success throughout the Far East, the Chinese calling it the man-power car. One finds it as far from where it was first introduced as Singapore, where fate has somewhat funnily decreed that it should be drawn by the lazy though mercenary Chinaman, and although so heavily handicapped, it competes successfully with horse and carriage and prevents the introduction of the tram car.

Of course there are horses in Japan that are used for draught purposes, for driving, and for riding. The races next month, for example, are a very important feature of the season, and all hands turn out to see them. They have a very sensible way here of breaking their colts for draught purposes. The colts always run alongside their dams on transport journeys, and thus begin their apprenticeship by learning the roads. As they get a little bigger a wisp of straw is tied to their backs to simulate a burden, and give them the feeling of additional weight without the fatigue. Then, as their strength increases, a real load, proportioned to what they can do, is put upon them, and this increased gradually until they are able to stand a full measure.

The object of a visit to this portion of Japan at the present time is to try and catch the beatings of the public pulse on the subject of war. Rumors of what people thought was about to happen were so very conflicting in Korea and Manchuria that but little satisfaction could be gained by repeated interviewing. Here was the place for news, but instead of finding those having the ability to form well-digested opinions and the willingness to express them, it is almost impossible to get them to talk.

The difference of opinions between the two factions are so very bitter that silence seems the golden mean that must be cultivated. If one starts war topics the forefinger of the party addressed almost at once goes to his lips, to signify that the taboo has been placed on that subject.

Surprise was, without doubt, caused here by Russia's action in presenting a new set of demands in Peking while the Manchurian question was under discussion between St. Petersburg and the representatives from Tokio, although it is quite in the running that these discussions could scarcely be said to have entered a serious phase. The Japanese have not been idling their time, but it is thought highly possible that they have not been very welcome to the Russian statesmen. But as the Japanese demands had been formulated and were really quite generally known, it was thought to be a very unusual proceeding on Russia's part to approach China without making some statement regarding Japan.

Cattle Dipping in Texas.

About 3000 head of cattle were dipped in oil in Colorado, Texas, under the personal supervision of J. B. Goodlett, of Quanah, for C. A. O'Keefe. The cattle are not to be moved from the O'Keefe ranch, but were dipped, believing that it would be a benefit to them. Mr. O'Keefe has a large stone dipping vat constructed on his ranch, and is a firm believer in the efficiency of the dip. Mr. Goodlett, who is the State agent for the official dip adopted by the State Live Stock Sanitary Commission, says that an investigation into the situation has convinced him that there is practically no movement of cattle across the line this winter. He thinks there will be a fair movement in the spring, however, when dipping will be generally practiced. Speaking of the recent dipping in crude Texas oil that was done in his home town under Federal direction, he says it is a conceded fact that oil will kill the fever ticks, but he does not believe that dipping in oil will ever become general. He says that while the oil may not injure the cattle, yet for the period of about two weeks it transforms them into the most disreputable looking beasts that ever walked the face of the earth. In a fortnight the oil has had time to wear off.—Galveston News.

Queen Victoria's Fad.

Among the many peculiarities of Queen Victoria which I have not seen mentioned by any of her biographers, not even by Mrs. Emily Crawford, was her predilection for organ grinders and for strolling players in general, in whom she used to take a deep interest. When out driving she would frequently stop her carriage and have itinerant musicians whom she saw playing brought to her, and would converse with them and liberally remunerate them, while if their stories seemed out of the usual, she would employ the Palace police and detectives to look after them. In fact, the Queen was a perfect benefactress to the itinerant musician and organ grinder, and as they were allowed to approach her carriage by the police in response to her summons without any special precautions being taken, and were, as a rule, recruited from the lowest classes of the Italians, it must be regarded as singularly fortunate that no advantage was ever taken by the anarchists of this peculiar fad of the aged sovereign to do her an injury.

The Benefit of Horseback Riding.

The great good derived from horseback riding is due to the beneficial effect it has upon the circulation. Many people are chronic invalids because of poor circulation, producing congestion of various vital organs. Horseback riding in the open air when the weather permits, in a well ventilated arena at other times, is an exercise that cannot be surpassed as a health giving and health maintaining treatment. I have had sufficient observation in this direction to convince me of the wonderful efficacy of the horseback riding treatment in many conditions, so that I often prescribe it in preference to many of the other so-called physical culture promotors. Often I have seen weak, delicate anaemic girls develop a robust, healthy constitution the result of properly conducted equestrianism.—New York Medical Journal.

Differences in Hand Writing.

A curious investigation by Alfred Binet, of the Laboratory of the Sorbonne, has revealed differences in the handwriting of the sexes. Numerous characteristics are traced—such as carelessness in the writing of women and firmness and simplicity in that of men—and an expert graphologist has been able to give the sex of the writers of 141 addresses out of 180. The writing of old men resembles that of women.

A Trick of the Snake Charmers.

In a recent volume on the snakes of Egypt, Hippolyte Boussac states that the device referred to in the Scriptures of changing a snake into a rod is still practiced by the snake charmers. They touch the snake at a certain place in the neck, when it falls into a cataleptic condition and becomes straight and stiff. It is then restored to its former condition by taking its tail between the hands and firmly rolling.

An agitation has been commenced in New York for a more uniform system of tea inspection.

HANDLING OF FOOD.

Care Should Be Taken in Putting Perishables Away Properly.

It matters little how much care is exercised in the selection of food, the sum expended in its purchase, if it is not properly cared for after it reaches the house. Through carelessness and ignorance the loss is very great, proving that there is more than a grain of truth in the old adage that a woman can throw out on a teaspoon what a man brings in on a shovel.

Salads and vegetables that are in good condition are dumped in a cold kitchen to wilt and wither until the cook gets "good and ready" to throw them away. Meat is left in its paper to absorb the taste and get glued fast to it. Fruit is bruised in carrying it out, butter left uncovered to become rancid, and milk standing to sour.

When green vegetables come home they should be put at once in the refrigerator or into the icebox. Salads may be kept wrapped in a damp cloth, then in a dry newspaper, and put in the air box.

Cereals should be emptied from the paper into proper receptacles of tin or glass and kept closely covered to prevent insects from getting in. Coffee should go from the grocer's paper bag into an airtight canister in order to keep its aroma. Olive oil should be put into a cool, dark place. Cheese, butter, soap and cheese into dry places.

Dried fruit should be kept in glass jars; nuts in a cool, dry place to prevent their getting rancid, and chocolate, cocoa and delicate shells in cold storage. Molasses and syrups need to be where it is cool.

Eggs should be handled carefully so as not to break the membrane separating the yolk and white, and kept in a dry, cool place.

Flour belongs in a bin or barrel raised a few inches from the floor. While wheat flour may be kept in quantity, cornmeal or graham flour should only be purchased in small quantities and kept in tin or glass.

Onions should not be left open, as they are great absorbers. Neither onions, bananas nor muskmelons should be put in an icebox with delicate food.

Winter vegetables should be well matured when gathered, dried thoroughly and then stored in a cool, dry place. Carrots, beets and celery keep better if packed in sand.

Small and soft fruits should be scattered on platters, not left in the boxes as purchased, as their own weight crushes them and they decay. Peaches and fine pears should be removed from a shelf and not be allowed to touch one another. Tomatoes may be ripened by exposure to the sun.

Milk and cream should be kept entirely separate from the other foods, as they absorb odors.

Butter, if purchased in quantity, should have a cloth spread over the top and on top of that a thick layer of salt.

When necessary to take out butter lift the cloth from the side, cut a square, even piece, and re-cover with cloth and salt. If only a few pounds are purchased at a time, keep in a stone or agate pail, cover with a cloth wet out of salt water and the lid.

Lard should be kept in tin cans in a cool place.

Fresh fish should never be permitted to soak in water. Put in a colander directly on artificial ice.

Meat should not be laid on paper as that draws out the juices. If freshly killed, allow it to get chilled before putting in cold storage, otherwise the animal heat is driven inside and causes fermentation, which is injurious. Do not let chops and steaks lie against one another, much loss of juice and steak.

All meats and poultry require a cool, dry atmosphere. If necessary to hang them, suspend with the choicest or tender parts down. Hang lamb and mutton by the shank, and pound on the feet.—Boston Journal.

An Omlette Every Day.

Mr. G. W. Zook essayed to sell all his poultry stock, and though he had done so, but afterward one egg that had escaped the poultryman's axe turned up. Something over two weeks ago Mr. Zook found two eggs, one white and one brown, in the customary nest in the barn, and every day thereafter for ten days he did the same. He had seen but one hen about the place, and it suddenly dawned upon him that his pullet was doing double duty in showing the superiority of the Missouri hen. He set about watching her. For several weeks he noted her visits to the nest and found one white and one brown egg. He knew there were no others in the nest before the hen's visit, and therefore concluded to a certainty that for two weeks the hen had laid two eggs a day.—Maitland (Mo.) Herald.

Dyed His Hair With Ink.

Because she discovered that her octogenarian husband had dyed his hair with ink and so altered his appearance when courting her as to deceive her as to his age, Martha Dickhoph asked for divorce and $1000 alimony at N[illegible] Ia.

A few months ago Martha was a care-free girl in Germany. A letter came to her sister from a relative in America, advising her that Peter Dickhoph, a rich farmer, 44 years old, desired a wife, and suggested that Martha would fill the bill. But the latter was already betrothed, and she passed the bargain over to Martha.

Martha thought well of it, came over and was introduced to Peter. Although she wasn't much impressed with his appearance, she consented to marry him, and she became his wife.

A Head-on [illegible]

By HELEN FARR [illegible]

Copyrighted, 1903, by The Author.

Trenton was half an hour late. A man dropped a bundle of curtain sticks on the live rail at Sullivan square and tied up the L for thirty minutes.

Trenton had an appointment at six with "a man from out of town," Marshal Dix, an old college crony, and now a business associate, and as he looked out of the car at Boylston street the clock in the station stood 6:30 to the minute.

"Hang it! Just my luck! I'll miss the deal," was his mental comment, and he dashed through the turnstile, swinging it around until it whirled like a top, and the next wayfarer had to forcibly stop it. He was up the stairs in one second, across Tremont street in another, and down to the corner of Boylston in another.

Now, as every one knows, who knows Boston, its erratic climate, and the strength and vigor of its proverbial east wind, there is always an interval at tornado sweeping and swirling around the corner of Boylston and Tremont streets. It was a stormy night, the rain was coming down in torrents. Trenton had his umbrella and pulled down over his head and shoulders, and as he rounded the corner he bent almost double, bracing against the gust of wind that met him. Of course he couldn't see in front of him, and the pretty girl in a tweed walking suit, and white beaver hat and black veil, who just then turned the corner on to Tremont street, could not see him, for she had her umbrella pulled down over her face, meeting the same gust of wind, and naturally they collided.

Trenton's umbrella clashed into her small silk one, and the ferrule on the end of his poked a hole directly through it. The ribs of both umbrellas became entangled, and there was a general mix-up.

So engrossed were they in extricating the umbrellas, that neither noticed the other until Trenton spoke.

"Oh, what a beastly shame. I am awfully sorry, don't you know."

Then the pretty girl looked up.

"By Jove!" was all Trenton could say.

By this time they had gotten the umbrellas disentangled. But just then another gust of wind fiercer than the first tore across the common. This time it dislocated the pretty girl's hat, and toppled it down rakily over one ear. She put up both hands to straighten it, and dropped her umbrella and purse.

Trenton stooped to pick them up, and the wind took his hat off and sent it up against a show window. Then the pretty girl laughed.

Then she remem- d and drew herself up haughtily turned her back and began scrutinizing intently the lovely creations of silk and lace behind the plate glass. Trenton remembered, too, with a groan—remembered the quarrel they had had three weeks before, and their parting.

He stole a sidelong glance at her profile and took courage. The saucy little nose was tilted up just a trifle, but he fancied there was a tiny smile lurking in the corner of her month.

"I'll try it again," he thought. "Here goes for my second apology; perhaps

"They always carry off the wreck."

I'll have better luck this time, she doesn't look very formidable."

"Nan, now won't you be sensible? You know I don't care two straws for that girl; she's homely as a mud fence."

The pretty girl turned around suddenly. The lurking little smile had fled. "Jack Trenton, I hate you. You are a perfect hypocrite. Didn't you say you loved her?"

It was Trenton's turn to look serious now. "Nan, what do you mean?"

"Mean? You know what I mean. I heard every word you said that night in the car. Margaret and I sat right behind you, and you never even saw us. We heard your conversation—that is, we heard almost all of it. We heard you say that you never loved any one as you loved—"

"Her brother, Marshal," he interrupted. "That's what I said. We were talking over old times when Marshal and I were at Yale. I met her that day by accident. Simply happened to get into the same car, and took the only empty seat beside her. You wouldn't have me ride on the cow-catcher, would you, just because there happened to be a girl I knew on the train? And naturally as Marsh and I were such old friends we talked of him. We didn't have anything else to talk about. I knew her only slightly, but we had a subject of mutual interest in Mash. Now that's all there was to it, Nan, believe it or not, as you wish. If you call it fair to throw a fellow over and break our engagement just because he happened to say half a dozen words to his chum's sister, all right, go ahead, break it, I won't trouble you any more. Well, I guess I had better be going. Good night, Nan, and—good bye."

The pretty girl had turned again to the window and was gazing at a lovely fluffy white ostrich feather boa. The lurking little smile had crept back to the corners of her mouth.

"Jack!"

Trenton had gone a few steps, but he stopped and came back. She turned around from the window, and looked down demurely at her torn umbrella. Then she put up her hand to her head, gave her hat a little tug and shake, pulled her veil down closer over her chin, and said:

"Jack, do you know what they always do after a head-on collision?"

"No; what?"

"They always carry off the wreck."

Biography of Arthur Sullivan.

B. W. Findon, a nephew of the composer, is writing a new biography of Sir Arthur Sullivan.

BRAIN CHILDREN TRAVEL FAR.

Writings of Miss Carman That Have Seen the World.

Miss Carman, the poet, at the beginning of his literary career, had the usual difficulty with homing manuscripts. He chalked up all desperandum on his desk and kept at work. One belief which never failed him was that everything he wrote must of necessity meet a welcome somewhere, a conviction which always caused a rejected manuscript to take another journey. Some came back so many times that he became deeply interested in them, and gave them names quite apart from their titles, such as "The Flying Dutchman," "The Wandering Jew," "Ulysses," and so forth. He was rummaging through some pigeonholes not long ago when he exclaimed to a friend who happened to be present:

"Why, hello; here's old 'Captain Cook.' Really, I had forgotten the dear old Captain," and he held up a faded sheet of copy.

"Why do you call it 'Captain Cook?'" asked the friend, noticing that the title was widely different.

"Oh, because it circumnavigated the globe," answered the poet. "I sent it to an Australian periodical. It went by the way of San Francisco, and came back via the Suez canal and London. I believe I'll send it to the So-and-So," he added, mentioning the name of a prominently monthly; "they asked me for something the other day. Of course, they rejected it before it went to the Antipodes, but perhaps they'll think it has improved with age."

"Captain Cook" was printed a month or two ago, and was much admired.—Philadelphia Post.

The Song of the Hammer.

At the home of a dame devout
Who in mission work always led,
The sewing society sat about
Plying their needles and thread;
And in a melodious key
Without hesitation or stammer,
Incessantly and relentlessly
They sang the song of the hammer.

Knock, knock, knock,
With never a halt or pause;
Knock, knock, knock,
Without provocation or cause.
Characters white as snow
Are daubed with spots of black,
While these righteous, merciful sisters saw
To cover the heathen's back.

Knock, knock, knock,
None whom they know is spared;
Knock, knock, knock,
How their neighbor's faults are aired!
The absent members, too,
Come in for their share of abuse,
While these worthy dames, with much ado,
Sew shirts for the heathens' use.

Knock, knock, knock,
While the hours are dragging slow;
Knock, knock, knock,
Till they all get up to go.
Their work for the day is o'er,
Their duty done with zest,
And when each is at home alone once more
She'll trim up all the rest!

Oh, men with sisters dear,
With wives and sweethearts glad,
Did you ever happen to hear
Them giving their friends the gad?
If not, sneak home some day
And list to the sewing club's clamor
As they sing that old familiar lay Entitled "The Song of the Hammer."
—William F. Kirk in Milwaukee Sentinel.

Bald Heads in Colombia.

If there are any bald heads in the machine and land forces that go to Panama they may succeed in finding the celebrated cure that gave back to the late Major Fitz Hugh Edwards his splendid shock of hair. Edwards was as bald as the American eagle, says the New York Press. Somewhere on the Charges river he met a band of Indians who laughed him to scorn when he removed his hat. Having winning ways, Edwards soon made himself agreeable, and the chief of the tribe said in the native tongue, "We will give you cover for your naked skull." He remained there nearly a year and came back to New York with much better hair than he was born with. As hair restorers the Colombians are par excellence, differing entirely from our North American Indians, who took all the hair they could scalp.

Foolish Bother.

A controversy has been started in England over the statement in a death notice that "Mrs. Spurgeon entered heaven at 8:30 this morning." The vicar of Milton took exceptions to the declaration and in the course of a sermon said it was absurd to suppose that the spirit enters heaven at the moment of death on earth. This has brought out letters from many people who side with the preacher or oppose his view of the case. No wonder Mr. Chamberlain is alarmed. How can a country whose inhabitants become excited over the mere experiences of the soul after quitting this world expect to retain its commercial supremacy?

Be Moderate.

There was a Man once who Had a Bul'dog with a forged restraint attached to Him, and one Day this Man went out to the Bulldog's lowly Residence and said:

"If I were to Unchain you, would you Appreciate the Favor?"

"Why," said the Bulldog, "I would fairly eat you Up with Joy."

"Your Gratitude is a Trifle overexpressed," said the Man, as he Walked away and Ordered an Extra Chain to be hitched to the Dog.

The moral of this is: Don't Waste Your Superlatives; You May Be Misunderstood.—Baltimore News.

It Sometimes Happens.

"Of course," says the shoe dealer, "there are times when it is necessary to stretch the truth a trifle."

"Yes, sir," answered the head salesman, "and often a fellow has to stretch a lie."

"I don't see how."

"Well, when a woman with a No. 6 foot declares that a No. 3 shoe is just her size and asks you to put it on the shoe stretcher overnight, 'just to make the instep a little higher,' That's one of the times."

A FOUR DOLLAR BILL.

Drummer's Shrewd Scheme That Proved a Winner.

"But I tell you," said the bank clerk, "it is betting on a sure thing. No one ever saw a four-dollar bill. There is no such thing."

"I don't want your money," said the drummer, drawing his chair closer to the country store stove, "but you were so cock-sure that I thought you might like to bet. They may not have four-dollar bills in Five Corners, but they have them in New York, all right."

"Take him up for $2," said the livery stable man, "and I'll go him for the same amount."

The drummer was absorbed in his newspaper.

"I'm in for another $2," chipped in the storekeeper.

Nothing doing with the drummer.

"Got him treed," snikered the bank clerk, and everybody laughed.

"You fellows mean it?" asked the drummer.

"Sure's eggs is eggs," replied the storekeeper.

The drummer took out a bulky pocketbook and with impressive deliberation laid on the table a letterhead of the Leven Little Tailors:

To bill rendered...$4.00

The silence was profound. "Well, I guess we'll step across to the hotel for a round on me," said the liveryman, "and then I must be getting home to supper."

Little Kindnesses.

If you were toiling up a weary hill,
Bearing a load beyond your strength to bear,
Straining each nerve untiringly, and still Stumbling and losing foothold here and there,
And each one passing by would do so much
As give one upward lift and go their way,
Would not the slight reiterated touch
Of help and kindness lighten all the day?

If you were breasting a keen wind, which tossed
And buffeted and chilled you as you strove,
Till, baffled and bewildered quite, you lost
The power to see the way, and aim to move,
And one, if only for a moment's space,
Gave you a shelter from the bitter blast,
Would you not find it easier to face
The storm again when the brief rest was past?

There is no little and there is no much,
We weigh and measure and define in vain
A look, a word, a light responsive touch,
Can be a minister of joy to pain.
A man can die of hunger walled in gold,
A crumb may quicken hope to stronger breath,
And every day we give or we withhold
Some little thing which tells for life or death.
—Sarah Chauncey Woolsey.

A Relic of Herodotus.

Recent excavations on the site of ancient Naucratis on the delta of the Nile have brought to light, among other things, a possible relic of Herodotus, to whose description of the luxurious Greek settlement we owe most of our knowledge of it. He visited the city in the latter part of the fifth century B. C. The relic in question is the base of a painted vase inscribed "Herodotou.' This vase was found within the Hellenic precinct, and seeing the comparative rarity of the name, and the coincidence of the date of the vase, as judged by its fabric and the lettering of the dedication, with the probable epoch of the Halicarnassian's visit, it is a plausible guess that this vase had some direct connection with the father of history.—Kansas City Journal.

Sewing Bees to Rescue.

According to South African Exports there should be an increased demand for soft goods in British East Africa. A notice in Nairobi, by John Ainsworth, the sub-commissioner, states that natives entering the town must be decently clothed. Missionaries, settlers, etc., are asked to encourage the wearing of cloth by natives in their employ; while the police and government officials have instructions to warn the blacks that they will not be allowed in Nairobi unless they are wearing at least an ordinary loincloth. So civilization stalks on. Soon, we suppose, there will not be left anywhere one clad as "nature first made man."

Peacocks or Men.

From London comes the report that men there are being induced by tailors to do everything they can to bring about a men's dress reform. The effort is to get the customers to wear colored material for evening clothes. There are shades of blue, green, crimson, plum and other varieties of rich color which look well by artificial light. Few men have had the courage to identify themselves with the innovation. Those who do lay themselves liable to the suspicion that they are not men, but peacocks.

Athabasca Land.

Many thousands of square miles along the Peace River valley in Athabasca are very fertile, growing luxurious grass and excellent wheat. But no settlers as yet are found in that far northern region; and the only purpose of the Hudson Bay company is to turn the local wheat into flour for its agents scattered through that region and thus save the high cost of importing flour.

Origin of Tuberculosis.

Prof. Behring's fundamental proposition regarding tuberculosis is that as a general rule it has its origin in early infancy, and that contrary to the view of Prof. Koch, the vehicle for the conveyance of this latent infection is milk.

"When I was state's attorney of McDonough county," said Lawyer William Prentiss, "there was an epidemic of horse stealing there that had perplexed and maddened the farmers of the district.

Suspicion centered on a man named Jerry Willetts. When they spoke of horse stealing they spoke of Willets in the same breath.

"Under these conditions I sent down as detective to the scene of the horse thieves' operations a little Swede named Oliver Johnston, with instructions to pose as a farm laborer in search of work and if possible to ingratiate himself with Willetts. He succeeded in gaining Willetts' confidence. Then one night came a grand horse-stealing raid, and the proof seemed so strong against Willetts that he was arrested and charged with the offense.

"Johnston played his part well. To my satisfaction he informed me that Willetts and his counsel had suggested that for a substantial bribe he should swear that he spent the night of the horse stealing in Willetts' house—although he was twenty miles away at the time—and that Willetts did not leave the house that night.

"Here was a trap ready to spring. On my advice Johnston pretended to acquiesce in the accused man's proposition. When he came to the witness chair, however, he dropped the mask.

"'Where were you the night of Jan. 1, the date of the horse stealing?' asked the lawyer for the defendant, in a voice that foretold triumph.

"'I spent that night at my friend Bill Pringle's, about twenty miles distant from Willetts' house,' replied the detective.

"'But—but have you not stated that you spent that night in Willetts' house?' inquired the lawyer in sudden dismay.

"'I did, but I was not on my oath then and I am now. Willetts asked me to swear that I was in his house that night and I agreed to do so at the request of the state's attorney.'

"The lawyer for the defense, seeing the fatal trap, hurled an imprecation at me across the table. The defendant's wife and sisters gave evidence that he was at home all the night in question, but this did not avail him; he was convicted and sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

"Later I discovered that Willetts was perfectly innocent of the horse stealing, that his neighbors had formed a conspiracy to railroad him to the penitentiary and, becoming aware of their intentions, he had endeavored to secure what would seem disinterested evidence in his favor.

"I got him out of prison after he had served fifteen months of the sentence he received on account of trying to manufacture a superfluous alibi."—Chicago News.

An Old Time Favorite

An old lady sat in her old armchair,
With wrinkled visage and disheveled hair,
And hunger-worn features.
For days and for weeks her only fare,
As she sat there in her old armchair,
Had been potatoes.

But now they were gone; of bad or good
Not one was left for the old lady's food
Of those potatoes.
And she sighed and said, "What shall I do?
Where shall I send and to whom shall I go
For more potatoes?"

And she thought of the deacon over the way,
The deacon so ready to worship and pray,
Whose cellar was full of potatoes.
And she said, "I will send to the deacon to come;
He'll not mind much to give me some
Of such a store of potatoes."

And the deacon came over as fast as he could;
Thinking to do the old lady some good,
But never for once of potatoes;
And he asked her at once what was her chief want;
And, she, simple soul, expecting a grant,
Immediately answered, "Potatoes."

But the deacon's religion didn't lie that way;
He was more accustomed to preach and to pray
Than to give of his hoarded potatoes;
So, not hearing, of course, what the old lady said;
He rose to pray with uncovered head;
But she only thought of potatoes.

He prayed for patience for wisdom and grace;
But when he prayed, "Lord, give her peace,"
She audibly sighed, "Give potatoes."
And at the end of each prayer which he said
He heard, or thought that he heard, in his stead,
That same request for potatoes.

The deacon was troubled; knew not what to do;
'Twas very embarrassing to have her act so
About those carnal potatoes;
So, ending his prayer, he started for home,
But as the door closed behind him he heard a deep groan,
"Oh, give to the hungry potatoes."

And that groan followed him all the way home,
In the midst of the night it haunted his room,
"Oh, give to the hungry potatoes."
He could bear it no longer; arose and dressed,
From his well-filled cellar taking in haste
A bag of his best potatoes.

Again he went to the widow's lone hut;
Her sleepless eyes she had not yet shut;
But there she sat in that old armchair,
With the same wan features, the same sad air;
And, entering in, he poured on the floor
A bushel or more from his goodly store
Of choicest potatoes.

The widow's heart leaped up for joy;
Her face was haggared and wan no more.
"Now," said the deacon, "shall we pray?"
"Yes," said the widow, "now you may."
And he kneeled him down on the sanded floor.
Where he had poured his goodly store,
And such a prayer as the deacon prayed
As never before his lips essayed.
No longer embarrassed, but free and full,
He poured out the voice of a liberal soul;
And the widow responded aloud, "Amen,"
But said no more of potatoes.

And would you who hear this simple tale
Pray for the poor; and, praying, "prevail?"
Then preface your prayer with alms and good deeds;
Search out the poor, their wants and their needs;
Pray for peace and grace and spiritual food,
For wisdom and guidance, for all these are good,
But don't forget the potatoes.

Lessons from Dogs

"We may learn a good lesson from our good friend the dog now and then," said a man who is always befriending members of the canine tribe to a New Orleans Times-Democrat writer, "and we should remember the fact at times when we are inclined to quarrel with some of the more worthless members. Already we have learned a lesson in constancy of friendship from the dog and men of letters have scarcely praised the virtues of mankind more than they have praised this virtuous attribute of the dog. The dog is a good friend to his master, a faithful companion who shares his master's fortune whatever it may be. No dog was ever known to desert his master because fortune or fate had shifted from the palace to the hovel, from affluence to grinding poverty. The dog will remain fast when other friends higher in the scale of animal development will desert and pull away to where the pastures are greener.

"But I was thinking more particularly of another good example which humankind may find in the dog's conduct, and it is a lesson which we may ponder with profit at this season of the year when one's diet becomes of so much importance in the maintenance of health. Despite a popular belief to the contrary, did you know it is a fact that a dog rarely eats more than his stomach can handle? Did you know that dogs as a rule eat very lightly and very discreetly when they are sick? Whether you know it or not it is a fact, and it is something that we can't say of man. At least we can't say as much for all men. Dogs seem to know intuitively what is good for them. They know when they are sick that they must eat lightly and be careful about the kind of food they eat. Nature, after all, seems to take pretty good care of the creatures, though nature kills dogs, just as she kills other things in her vast domain."

On Pressing Business.

The Hon. "Champ" Clark recently told of a case brought up in Missouri in which one of the lawyers engaged tried to serve his client by throwing suspicion on a certain witness during the course of his cross-examination.

The first question put was:

"You admit that they were at the prisoner's home every evening during this period?"

"Yes, sir," replied the witness.

"State whether you and he were interested in any special transactions, such as, for instance, business or otherwise."

"Yes, sir; we were."

"Oh, ho!" exclaimed the wily attorney. "Then you will no doubt be good enough to inform us now and to what extent, also the nature of the business in which you were jointly interested."

"I haven't the least objection in the world," cheerfully answered the obliging witness. "If you want to know—I was courting his daughter."—Philadelphia Post.

In the Corn Belt.

A friend of mine, a clergyman, and a very close observer, told me that upon one of his trips through the West almost every man he met and spoke with used profanity, but finally he found one man who talked to him for twenty minutes without using an oath. As they were about to separate my friend shook hands with the stranger and said:

"You don't know how glad I am to have a chance to have a talk with a man like you. You are the first man I have met for three days who could talk for five minutes without swearing."

The stranger was so surprised and shocked at this deplorable state of affairs that he instantly and innocently ejaculated:

"Well, I'll be damned!"—Prof. T. N. Carver in The World's Work.

THE UNION.

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama.

Wallace C. Edler, Ed. and Pub

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.

For advertising rates, call at the office, Sixth street, opposite court house.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?

THE REASON WHY.

Referring to the letter of Mr. W. R. Jackson, which appears in this issue, in our opinion the reason for the "kicking" he speaks of is that the great majority of republicans recognize the fact that President Roosevelt is not a safe man to have at the head of the republican army. He might, perhaps, command a brigade under orders successfully, but he is too erratic and impulsive to be trusted with the supreme command.

The party never elected Theodore Roosevelt president. He only became so through accident (mores the pity) and his course for the last two years in Alabama and elsewhere, his referees' open buying of support for him with places, has disgusted the great mass of republicans who are such from principle, and not for pie, and alienated them from him, but NOT from the party. Thank God, the republican party does not depend upon any one man, but lives through the vitality of the principles on which it is founded. True republicans naturally turn to Senator Hanna as one who would come nearer to making a worthy successor to the sainted McKinley than any one else in sight at present, and they are going to put him in command. "D. V."

The democratic executive committee of Chilton county met in Clanton on Tuesday and fixed the date for the county primary the same as the state, April 11th. Delegates will be selected on the same day to meet in convention at Clanton and select delegates to attend the state convention and nominate presidential electors. The plurality rule is to govern in the primary, so in a little over two months we will know what county democrats are to have the empty honor of "holding the sack."

Monday was the last day of grace for paying poll taxes and Collector T. J. Hubbard was all day at the court house to give every one an opportunity to be a man; there have been 1,147 polls collected for 1903, not quite 75 per cent of those liable, so there are a good many "political eunucks" in Chilton county this year.

The leaders of the Chilton black and tans openly state that they intend to give the populists of Chilton county trouble. We suppose they will vote the democratic ticket.

Two lives were lost in a $400,000 fire in Knoxville, Tenn., Tuesday.

Rumor has it that the democrats formed a club in Thorsby last Friday night. Several black and tan republicans and other nondescripts are said to have joined. They claim twenty-odd in all in the club. Our informant said the proceedings were a cross between a circus and a gas well, as they had a clown and sundry "hot air" statements. Politics makes strange bed fellows.

The regular republican organization of Chilton county has been in full accord with organized anti-democracy, and in the coming election in November intends to "stand pat" on the same policy.

Every man who voted for the republican nominees in 1902 is entitled to and is hereby cordially invited to participate in the republican convention at CLANTON on Saturday, February 13, 1904.

COUNTY COURT.

Judge Adams disposed of the following cases Monday: Dick Gaines, charged with carrying concealed pistol, gave bond to the grand jury; Walter Lawhorn, Major Oden and Fanny Goodgame, all colored, were charged with assault and pleaded guilty.

COUNTY ALLIANCE.

Chilton county Farmers' Alliance met with Union Alliance on Tuesday, January 26, 1904, and was composed of representative citizens from a large portion of the county. It was well attended considering the inclement weather, and was harmonious in the transaction of a considerable amount of business, part of which was instructions to our county lecturer to visit the neighborhoods of former alliances and lecture and organize. The singing of hymns No. 256 at opening and No. 232 at closing was very appropriate and carried us back to the good old times twelve years or more ago. A vote of thanks to the good sisters and brothers of Union Alliance for the bounteous table set before us and their hospitable treatment while in attendance upon the alliance. The next county alliance will meet with Collins chapel on Thursday, April 7, 1904, at which time we will have visiting brethren from other counties and hope all alliancemen will organize and be represented at that meeting.

Yours truly,
ALEX G. DAKE,
Secretary-Treasurer Chilton County Farmers' Alliance.

NOTICE!

Headley & Rutherford have dissolved their partnership in the ginning and threshing business by mutual consent and Mr. Rutherford will continue the business.

REPUBLICANS OF CHILTON COUNTY.

In obedience to a resolution passed by the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County at its meeting on January 11th 1904. I hereby call a mass convention of the Republican Electors of Chilton County to meet at Clanton, Ala. on Saturday February 13th 1904. for the purpose of electing delegates to the Republican State and District Conventions, and to transact such other business as may be properly brought before it.

J. B. Downs, Chair. Com.
Alex G. Dake, Secretary.

HUNTING ACCIDENT.

W. F. Littlejohn's son, Jadie, while hunting Thursday last, happened to a bad accident. As he was getting over a fence the rail turned with him and his gun was discharged, the load going through the calf of his leg. Doctors Hayes and Johnson were called in and dressed the wound, and the boy is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances. The doctors say no permanent injury will result, which is gratifying when we think what might have been.

JEMISON, ALA.

Editor Union:

Our town is booming right along. Two more new houses just completed, one by Lowe and the other by Croff McNeil. Spring has opened up and the farmers are buying lots of fertilizers in preparation for a big crop this year. Things are lively enough around here, so that the calaboose is frequently occupied, but "all's well that ends well." C.

The New York Sun has an elaborate and breezy sketch of a young man, Loyal L. Smith, by name, who came to that city from Chicago about four years ago and began to speculate in Wall Street. He was daring, reckless and successful, and he soon found himself a winner to the extent of $5,000,000. And he has got it yet. This is where the unique feature of the case comes in.

Pickles, according to Police Captain Wohlleben, of Jersey City, N. J., are a main cause of suicide, comments the New York World. Germans eat more pickles per capita than the people of other nations, and the rate of suicide in Germany is exceptionally high. Logic is logic. Even those who cannot wholly agree with the captain's conclusions must at least admit that pickles have exerted a malign influence on Miss Clarice De Young, of Jersey City, in prematurely revealing the secret of her marriage to Gregory Filmore. The knot was tied early in September, but the young people swore each other to secrecy, not admitting their parents to their confidence. All went well till last Thursday, when the bride ate a hearty lunch of gherkins before retiring. In her broken slumber came terrifying dreams. She saw her loved one enveloped in flames with no one near to rescue him, and she shrieked aloud: "Save Gregory! Save my husband!" The household was aroused, a mother's watchful ear caught the name and the secret was out. The pickle had done its work.

When it is said that the total stock and bond capitalization of all the railroads of the United States amounts to $12,543,000,000, and that the combined debts of the governments of France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States amount to $12,411,000,000, some idea is conveyed of the magnitude of the railroad interests. They represent in the nominal value of their securities one-eighth of the wealth of the United States, now the richest country on the globe. It costs twice as much to operate the railroads as it does the Federal Government, and their receipts last year were two and a half times as large as those of the Government. They carried last year passengers whose number equalled forty-five per cent. of the entire population of the earth, and their freight tonnage practically represented the total weight of all the products of the country, or consumed in the place of production. Taking together the stockholders and employes of the railroads and their families it is probably not too much to say that 10,000,000 people are virtually interested in the prosperity of the railroads.

London is wrestling with the street car problem and trying to prevent overcrowding, and the authorities think they have hit at last on an effective remedy. It was found to be useless to arrest and fine conductors for taking more than a legal complement of passengers, and therefore the plan of arresting the surplus passengers is being tried. If cars enough to carry all the passengers without crowding can be and are provided, the new plan may work when people become used to it, but if London traffic conditions are like New York's, the efforts of the police to discourage strap-hanging will be about as effective as bailing out the Thames with pint cups. Imagine the police of New York trying to arrest the solidly-packed contents of a rush hour on the elevated road! One way to prevent New Yorkers from crowding the street cars to the limit of cubic capacity would be to put two-thirds of them in jail and keep them there. But we haven't jails enough. Another way is to build more railways on, above and below the ground and run more cars. The idea of punishing passengers for the failure or inability of a railroad corporation to carry them in decent comfort after taking their money is distinctly British in its brilliancy.

CLANTON HIGH SCHOOL.

The work in the advanced department of the Clanton school continues to grow in interest and enthusiasm. The pupils show remarkable zeal in the preparation of lessons, and are eager to grasp any new thought. The students are to be highly commended for the part they take in the chapel exercises each morning. The school seemed to enjoy the "snowball game" on Thursday and Friday very much. Several who have been absent on account of measles have come back to school. The new classes which have been organized lately are doing good work and seem to be highly pleased with the studies which they have taken up. The Lafayette Debating Society is progressing nicely under the management of the following officers: Prof. H. T. Wallace, president; J. E. Robinson, vice president; S. C. Matthews, secretary and treasurer; J. W. Woodyard, chaplain; Jerome Williams, critic; Allie Smith, doorkeeper. We have only been organized for a few weeks, but there are a great many improvements in our work. We are going to give a public debate soon, and we hope all will come.

A MEMBER.

INTERMEDIATE DEPARTMENT.

This department is progressing nicely. There are a great many pupils who are out of school on account of measles, but we hope to see them in again soon. There are a few pupils who have just come out of the primary into the intermediate, and we are all glad to have them in our room. These are Grace Sawyer and Clark Harper. We are sorry to say Clark has been out of school several days on account of sickness. John Candler is in again after an attack of measles.

INTERMEDIATE PUPIL.

PRIMARY ROOM.

We have a number of new pupils today and our room is full. Most of the pupils who had measles have returned. We enjoyed playing in the snow so much last week, but now it is all gone. The third grade has had ink wells put in their desks lately and all are well pleased with them.

PUPIL.

THORSBY, ALA.

Editor Union:

This weather reminds me of the Scriptural text, which says "and he went down to a pit, and slew a lion, on a cold snowy day." Well, it seems that some of the "demmies" imagine that they will slay a lion, as they are coming out this cold snowy weather and making known their wants unto the people, but the boys say it is not what you want, but what you get that does you good, and they may go down to the pit, but will hardly kill the lion. Sure they are getting hungry for pie, or they would keep their heads in their holes until the weather is better, for it will be a cold trail, anyway.

Now, we asked a "good" demmy the other day to give us one good reason why any pop or rep should vote the democratic ticket and he was as the man without the wedding garment. He was speechless, only he said that they were going to carry the county tais time, so I guess they have been consulting the witch of Endor and are backing up their courage with something up their sleeve, but, like Saul of olden time, are working for their own destruction, for never have the people been more determined; while they say little, yet they are more thoroughly united, for while some renegades and traitors are gone from among them, yet those same renegades and traitors are a source of weakness and confusion to those with whom they consort. I am told that one of the announced candidates was soliciting populists to give him support in the democratic primary. Well, now, isn't that democratic, but populists are not fools and consequently will just let the other fellows do their own voting.

Well, we congratulate Judge Adams on his graceful retirement from politics, for he reminds one of Eesop's hungry fox that had been on a long journey and coming to a trellis of fine grapes, but too high to reach, so master fox looked with watering mouth and longing eyes, but seemg the impossibility of reaching the grapes, tucked his tail and walked away muttering, "They are sour things, anyway."

Yes, it must be a sad condition of mind and heart for any man to realize the fact that his own course of conduct has alienated the confidence and affection of life long friendships by deserting his post and turning his guns upon those who were ever ready to support his every movement, and would stand to the last ditch in support of his honor until, until!—well, boys, there is one thing we know: that whether men may rise or fall we are contending for the right of humanity and that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and it is no less so today than ever before; therefore, let us take heart for the future and be on our guard, and just one more thing let me say. Let us come to the proper support of the Union, recognizing the fact that it is fighting the battles of the people against tremendous opposition, a cunning and unscrupulous foe, so if you want a better paper give it better support, for of this fact I am persuaded that the common people fail to realize the necessity of properly supporting their own literature X-RAY.

A. L. Wambem and W. M. Pierce, of Thorsby, were in Clanton Saturday.

Wiley Gore, of Collins chapel, was in town Friday, and bought him a new wagon and harness.

A carload of the celebrated Studebaker wagons just received by W. I. Mullins. This is his second car load this season.

Rev. B. H. Vickers was in Clanton Saturday.

A. H. Collins, of Thorsby was in town Saturday.

J. J. Culp, of Lomax, was in Clanton Saturday.

A car load of steel ranges and cooking stoves, including the celebrated "Iron King," just received by W. I. Mullins.

John Buck Baker, of beat 9, was in Clanton Tuesday.

Jim Collins, of Lomax, spent Tuesday in town.

Forrest Williams, of Jumbo, took in Clanton Tuesday.

See that beautiful line of watches at Upchurch's drug store.

Lee Vickers was in town Tuesday.

W. H. Peoples, of beat 7, was in Clanton Saturday.

C. W. Hubbard and wife, of Liberty Hill, were in town Saturday.

100 tons of the famous "Sea Fowl" Guano for sale at W. I. Mullins'.

W. B. Cooper and wife, of beat 6, were in Clanton Saturday.

M. B. Culp, of beat 6, was here Saturday. He has been sick for several weeks, but is well now and intends going back to work on the railroad.

The greatest stock of hats in Clanton is at W. I. Mullins'.

D. E. Knight, of Energy, paid us a welcome visit Monday.

W. H. Conway, of Union, was in Clanton Monday.

Before buying your watch don't fail to see those at Upchurch's drug store.

B. H. Wells, of beat 10, was in town Monday. He has been sick for some days, but is getting all right now.

For Armour fertilizer, the "Sun Rise" brand, you must go to Judson Strock. He keeps it.

There is a carousal (or Johnny-go-round) in town. Will be here all this week, and the fore part of next week. Part of the proceeds go to the Clanton school fund, and as there are no objectionable "annexes" along, you need not hesitate to patronize it.

Attorney Holley, of Wetumpka, is in Clanton looking after his canvass for the circuit solicitorship.

W. I. Mullins bought one bale of cotton this week, for which he paid $99.44. E. E. Plier was the lucky man that got the money.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Israel J. Chambers and Miss Zilla Pearl Andrews.

Robert Cofer and Miss Nancy E. Rodgers.

Juro Barkle and Miss Lona Kelley.

SUCCESSFUL LUMBERING.

The Gullahorn saw mill will move this week to a point about one and one-half miles from Knights Ferry and three miles from W. W. Wadsworth's broad gauge railroad, which will be their shipping outlet. They have bought between one and two thousand acres of Virginia pine timber, and the outlook for them is very good.

Uncle Tom and his son, Len, are hustlers and will get all there is in sight.

SUDDEN DEATH.

Doris, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Speigner, died Friday morning and was buried in the Clanton cemetery in the afternoon. The little one was taken with convulsions Thursday night and was dead in less than twelve hours. The sympathy of our people is with the bereaved parents. "Suffer little children to come unto Me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Editor Union:

I hear so much kicking about President Roosevelt in the republican party. Now, I would like to ask them what is wrong with the present administration? Isn't the times all right? Everybody working at good wages that wishes to work. Cotton bringing the highest price since the civil war. We are at peace with the whole world. Of course, Mr. Hanna is a good man, and would make a good president, but I can't see any gain to the republican party to split at this time. Remember the split on Harrison and Blaine and the compromise on electing Grover Cleveland. Such things could happen again.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Professor Bone's school has had to close on account of the measles in our community. We are sorry, for all are well pleased with the professor, as he is a faithful and energetic teacher.

Rev. Lynch is pastor at Pleasant Grove church this year.

I am proud to state that the people of my community are very much interested in my general welfare. I've been visiting a place of much interest for two years, and my neighbors are sending messengers to investigate the matter. Boys, what about those new buildings going up around Pleasant Grove? Does it mean somebody's sweetheart?

ONE OF THE BOYS.

MARS HILL.

Editor Union:

Just a few lines from this place, to say we are all right, everybody one way, and we feel sure now that we will elect our county officers in Chilton just as we have done in the past. Nearly all of our people have paid their poll tax and are ready for the fray. A few deserters from our ranks can not change us, and a TRAITOR like the Banner can never do us any harm. Benedict Arnold and Judas Iscariot could never accomplish anything after their treachery. Some one writing in the Banner says there is no use of having two parties. Well, brother, if you taink that way, come along and join us. We will do you good. We extend the bread of life to all. Our doors hang wide open. Of course, there are a few we would hate to take in, but we will shut our eyes and extend the right hand of fellowship. So if you think one party is sufficient, close up your shack and walk in our temple. You say you have reformed. We had no reforming to do, and as we are the largest crowd, which you know, you could not expect us to join you democrats. Besides, you democrats have everlastingly laid out in the cold all who have tried joining you before. They are turned beyond hope of resurrection. Suppose we call the roll of a few who have tried it. Pink Moore was one of the best men in the county. Where is he? Joe Vanderveer made a good clerk and is qualified to fill any office—one of the smartest men in the state. Where is he and what could he be elected to? Lee Hayes made a good sheriff, had a large following. He tried the democrats. Where is he? They won't even have him on their committee. Rev. R. M. Honeycutt, who was the strongest man politically that ever lived in Chilton, with all of his following and past record—what did the democrats do to him? Laid him to rest alongside of the others. Judge Adams, a strong man. He went out of the people's party like a storm, such as swept Moundville off the face of the earth lately, and lo and behold, where is he? Stretched out on the same cooling board, but we must give him credit for having a little more sense than the others. He realizes what he has done, and has called a halt, and let me say right here we all admire Adams for being honest enough to confess his mistake. Now, the thing for him to do is to return to the people that have done so much for him in the past, but if he keeps his word and don't let the democrats use him as a cat's paw (like they did Honeycutt) we people will still have a warm feeling for him. But, dear readers, if such men as Vanderveer, Moore, Honeycutt and Adams can't command any respect in the democratic party, what can a common farmer expect? Would they recognize him? No, a thousand times no. Now, brother farmers, let's all stand together just as in the past, stay in the people's party. Stay away from the democratic primary, because in the first place they do not want us if they thought enough of us would go in to have any effect on their nominations they would put up the bars, and as a matter of fact for the last ten years haven't they always put the bars up when there was any chance to get the populists in their party? What did they do here two years ago? Just think a moment and you will see it as I do and never go near a democratic primary. I consider it an insult now for them to ask us in, for they have nothing to offer; they have killed and driven every friend of the people out of their party. Where is Joe Johnston? Well, one word about candidates. Some of the democrats will come around now and say: "Come, populist, and vote for me in our primary. I've always worked to get the bars down and take the populists in, but the other fellows would not do it." Remember the primary two years ago when Johnston run for governor. But the people of Chilton need no advice as to democrats. WE KNOW THEM. Well, I had like to have forgotten Wilson Sorrell, Charles Lowery and Deason. Of course they held jobs given them by the populists, but when they go out I reckon they can't see anything but the democratic party, which is mostly composed of defeated populist candidates. I reckon the old maxim will apply, "Misery loves company." I reckon Lowery and Sorrells have gone from the way Lowery writes in the Banner. A man is known by the company he keeps. Populists and republicans, stand firm and "keep in the middle of the road," and when the proper time comes we will select a good ticket and ELECT IT hands down.

The Snail and the Race Horse.

Do not revile the patient snail
Because he crawls so very slowly,
As a race-horse he would fail
Without doubt, this creature lowly.

But think of this, and answer true:
Would the race-horse on the track
Than the snail much better do
With his stable on his back?

—F. C. Gordon in St. Nicholas.

The Game of Lord Lochinvar.

The bigger the space, the more exciting is the game. A large ring is formed, of girls and boys, sitting cross-legged on the ground. They represent the wedding guests of Scott's famous old ballad, which you must read to get the rhymes straight.

The bride must sit in the center, and the company must sing:

"Oh, young Lochinvar is come out of the West;
Through all the wide border his steed is the best.

Lochinvar now approaches, riding a broomstick, then the father of the bride—"the fair Ellen"—sings:

"Oh, come ye in peace, or come ye in war,
Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochinvar?"

Then Lochinvar, galloping up, jumps suddenly from his steed, springs into the ring, seizes the bride, and the company gives chase. If the runaways are caught before they get "over the border," Lochinvar has to try again. But if they succeed in escaping past the border the game is won. Lochinvar must be daring, for the chances are against him.—Los Angeles Times.

Soap Bubble Parties

These are most interesting for all sizes and ages. Good clay pipes and castile soap, and bowls enough to go round, are the needful things; also a room which will not be hurt by a sprinkling of soapsuds; and one thing more, the smaller the child, the bigger the apron to cover him.

A little glycerine in the lukewarm soapsuds will make the bubbles brighter and more durable, and if a thick shawl is spread on the floor, they will bounce upon it like transparent balls.

A bubble tournament is great fun. Arrange sides with leaders, of course. Let one side step forward in a line, with pipes and bowls; then the leader starts and sees how many bubbles he can make with one dip of his pipe. Each of his followers does likewise, while some one not in the game keeps the score. Then the other side takes its turn, and the side which blows the greatest number is the prize-winner.

There are many different ways of enjoying this pretty pastime, and science has discovered several methods of heightening the colors in the bubbles, increasing the size, and making them last for several minutes before bursting.—Los Angeles Times.

What Boys Should Know.

A philosopher has said that true education of boys is to "teach them what they ought to know when they become men."

1. To true and to be genuine. No education is worth anything that does not know how to read and be true and genuine in action rather than be learned in all sciences and in all languages and be at the same time false in heart and counterfeit in life. Above all things, teach the boys that truth is more than riches, power or possessions.

2. To be pure in thought, language and life—mind and body.

3. To be unselfish. To care for the feelings and comfort of others. To be generous, noble and manly. This will include a genuine reverence for the aged and for things sacred.

4. To be self-reliant and self-helpful even from childhood. To be industrious always, and self-supporting at the earliest possible age. Teach them that all honest work is honorable; that an idle life of dependence on others is disgraceful.

When a boy has learned these things, when he has made these ideas part of him, however poor or however rich, he has learned the most important things he ought to know.—Scottish American.

The Sly Opossum.

To the casual observer the opossum is a brainless, slow-going, lazy beast, with scarcely enough energy to eat his food. But I fancy that there is a good deal more of the knave than the fool about him, and that his apparent stupidity is but a part of his business policy. Helpless as he often seems to be, he usually has a snug hole to crawl into when he wishes to sleep, and he seldom goes hungry when there is any food to be had. Although he is slow, he is persevering, and manages somehow to capture many animals which have much greater speed. Squirrels, for instance, often fall a prey to him in the open woods, and once, when I left an opossum for a few hours in the same room with some red squirrels, he had captured and half devoured one before I returned. Rats, mice and rabbits he also captures, probably by lying in wait for them, and insects he obtains in various ways. Birds' eggs he regards with much favor, and he finds a great many, both on the ground and in the trees, during the nesting-season. Young birds, too, are hunted for and devoured, and occasionally the old birds themselves fail to escape him.

But he is not dependent on animal food, for all is grist which comes to his mill. He is fond of nearly all the wild fruits and berries he finds in the woods and fields, and will even come into the orchards and vineyards to sample the cultivated varieties.—Woman's Home Companion.

Tessie's Learning.

Tessie is showing herself to be a worthy member of the famous canine family of the Boxies. She has progressed so far that she is even considered capable of giving lessons in Sunday school. She can tell the number of the Apostles, the number of the sons of Abraham and even the number of the chapter in which the day's lesson is to be found.

One of the most remarkable feats which quite eliminates the possibility that she has been coached, is her ability to tell a number written on a blackboard while both she and her master were out of the room and erased before they returned.

The ordinary man who hears of Tessie's achievements will be apt, if he is not wholly incredulous, either to pass them off as the result of trickery on the part of her master or else to attribute them to some mysterious telepathic power. Whatever is the truth, it is by no means necessary that either of these explanations should be accepted.

Intelligent dogs have always an excellent understanding as to whether their conduct at any particular time is pleasing to their masters or not. There are acts they have learned not to do at all, and there are acts that they know they are expected to do. There are still other acts in the border land concerning which, and concerning the results of which, their brains are continuously busy. Not being endowed with human language, they gather knowledge as to approval or disapproval of what they do by signs, among which are to be reckoned their master's words. As their senses are keener than human senses in many ways, they are doubtless keener than human beings in detecting the smaller signs of favor or disfavor, or rightness or wrongness.

Now, when Tessie barks a number of which some stranger is thinking, it is highly probable that she uses this faculty. She does not have to tell the number all at once as a human being would. She goes at it in instalments—one, two, three, or five barks—till she has barked enough. It is not stretching our knowledge of dog nature to believe that if she stops too soon she can note signs of continued expectancy on the part of the stranger, or that when she has barked the right number she can note signs of satisfaction, which give her the signal to stop. Her feats are more complicated when she barks a compound number, as twenty-five—first two barks then five—but the explanation may be the same.

If this is actually Tessie's method there is nothing about it to detract from her fame. Indeed, the keenness of her intelligence is all the more emphasized.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Racing With a Moose.

Ernest G. Judkins, bookkeeper for the Kineo Company, had a remarkable experience with a bull moose on the carriage road to Deer Head Farm, two miles from Kineo.

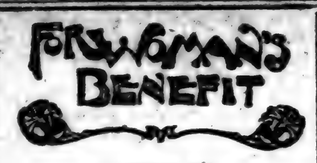
Mr. Judkins was taking a morning ride, galloping along a level stretch, when the horse came to a standstill with a jolt and a snort. Looking ahead, Mr. Judkins saw a bull moose feeding on the tender sprouts of the bushes growing by the roadside, not sixty yards away. Mr. Judkins's first impulse was to ride the moose down; but he thought better of this, and hooted to attract the animal's attention and possibly to frighten him from the road, so that he could proceed, but the moose fed calmly on. At the end of a few minutes the beast moved down the road in search of more food, and Mr. Judkins followed at a respectful distance, hooting until his throat was hoarse, but he might just as well have whispered, as far as the moose was concerned. This proceeding was repeated over half a mile of road.

At the end of that distance, the moose faced about and began feeding toward the horse and rider, casting an unconcerned look in their direction every now and then, and Mr. Judkins' steed did the backstep for a few rods. This was a little too much for the horseman, and, becoming impatient, he gave a tremendous yell to attract the attention of the moose, which was successful, plunged spurs into the horse, and made for the impudent highwayman, pell mell.

With the first leap of the horse, the indifference of the moose changed to concern, and, turning abruptly about, he started down the road at a great, clumsy trot. This put a new and interesting phase to the situation, and urging on his horse, Mr. Judkins proceeded to have his turn at the sport, only hoping that the moose would keep to the road. The moose obliged in this particular, and the horse was a good one, and entered into the spirit of the chase, but try as he could, the distance between him and the fleeing animal did not lessen materially.

"I never saw anything like it," said Mr. Judkins to the correspondent. "That great, ungainly animal trotting on ahead as clumsily as a razor-back runs, and maintaining his lead with apparently no effort whatever, while my horse was legging it for all that was in him. I had heard that moose had speed, but when I started after that bull I would have laid ten to one odds that I could overhaul him inside of 200 yards—that I could have ridden all around him."

After a hot race covering fully half a mile, the moose turned into the forest and disappeared. From now on Mr. Judkins will carry a carbine when he rides!—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.



The Bridal Veil.

The most important of all the accessories of bridal attire is the veil, about which there hangs an aroma of sentiment and romance, whether the veil be a wisp of tulle of a priceless cobweb of hand-made lace which has cost its weight in diamonds.

There have been countless stories in which the wedding veil has played a prominent part since the days when the sailor youth bound for the Southern seas brought home to his betrothed a bunch of the graceful white coralline still known to the peasant as mermaid's lace, and the girl, already a worker in points, imitate the pretty seaweed in decorating her wedding veil and thus introduced the delicate guipres which in the sixteenth century were worn by all Europe.

In many of the royal families of Europe the wedding veil of the mother is used by the daughter, but more frequently the lace is specially made. In the case of the wedding veil of the present Queen of Italy a splendid example of the finest Burano needlepoint was prepared.

The design was of renaissance style, graceful arabesques covering the whole of the square with the exception of one corner, which was of the plain hand-made net seme with small spots, and with a tiny border; this was for covering the face, the more elaborately designed portion hanging at the back over the long court train.

The bridal veil of Queen Alexandra was of Honiton lace sprigs applique on machine made net; the national emblems, treated in a natural manner, were used as the pattern.

The veil of Queen Victoria was made at Beer, South Devon, and exactly matched the Devonshire lace dress, which was worn over soft white satin; this dress was of Honiton guipure—that is, the motifs were unified by bars, instead of being appliqued on to net.—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

Woman at Her Best.

Every girl should marry. As wife and mother, she is at her best. Denied of this, her birthright, she is like an odorless flower, or a blossomless tree. I do not advise my girl friends to marry for the sake of marrying nor for a home. Marriage without love is the greatest mistake in the world. But there are many foolish girls who throw away the love of a good man simply because they are not quite sure that he is the right man, or with a vague idea that something better may come along, says the Indianapolis Sentinel. Very often when it is too late they find that after all he was the right man. The average girl does not take love half seriously enough, she is so used to semi-serious love affairs—understandings I believe they are called—that when the real thing comes her judgment is warped and she finds it difficult to analyze her feelings. I would say to all mothers, try to keep your girls from these understandings. They rub the bloom off the rose and damage its sweet freshness. Of course, no well brought up girl looks on every man she meets as a possible husband, but the right man is sure to come some day, and with that day in view I say to every girl, hold yourself in dignified readiness to meet it. Love is the greatest thing in the world. Do not let it slip your grasp. Comport yourself in such a way that when the right man comes you can with clear and unfaltering judgment recognize him. Then marry him.

About the Bath.

Never bathe when overheated.

Do not prolong the bath beyond a reasonable time.

Never bathe when exhausted and feeling ill.

Wait more than two hours after a meal before bathing.

If you are chilly and a cold bath makes you shiver it is not the best sort for you to take.

Delicate people had better not bathe until several hours after breakfast.

Dry the body quickly, using a dry bath brush or a Turkish towel to stimulate circulation.

In cold weather one should not go out for some time after a hot bath.

Opinions differ as to the relative merits of a cold or a hot bath. Neither kind will do for all. The individual constitution must be consulted. Medical authority maintains that children and elderly persons ought never to bathe in water below seventy degrees Fahrenheit. Where cleanliness is the main object, the water should be from seventy-two degrees to ninety-eight degrees. Where the bath is to serve as a powerful stimulant, as in cases of illness, it should be from ninety-eight degrees to 115 degrees.

The temperature of water for a cold bath should range from thirty-two to sixty-five degrees.—New Haven Register.

Plants Need Damp Air.

The woman who likes to convert her house into a conservatory always puts off the day of "starting the furnace" as long as possible. When the children begin to sneeze, and the entire family complains of rheumatism, she gives in.

Furnace heat seems to remove all the dampness from the air, and that moist condition so conducive to the health of growing plants is not found. The difficulty may be overcome in a measure by placing pans of water around the furnace, inside the furnace pipes below the registers, or anywhere that rapid evaporation may be induced. This will soften the atmosphere and help the plants to breathe. Palms, rubber plants and all other potted house plants should be well guarded from draughts, but kept in light and well ventilated places. Don't place a tall plant in a dark corner. It may look well, but it will droop and probably die of asphyxiation. Plants usually grow well in a kitchen, because of the evaporation of water as the kettle puffs and boils on the range.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Caring For Your Clothes.

Any woman with a limited amount on which to dress should learn the value of looking after her clothes and putting them carefully away each time they are worn. In doing this she will find her gowns will last twice as long and look well to the end.

Sew up a seam the minute it starts to rip. Fasten on a button of a hook and eye if they are loose, and don't use pins if you wish to preserve your gowns.

For the protection of light dresses hang your closet with unbleached muslin sheeting. Have plenty of hooks and skirt hangers—the three-cent wooden ones are the best—and hang up every gown after you have taken it off, after you have brushed it if it is dusty. When a gown becomes soiled, send it to the cleaner's before it is too dirty to be remedied. You will be repaid for your trouble and always have something ready to wear.

Alexandra Loves Dogs.

Queen Alexandra, who has made her yearly visit to Denmark, the land of her girlhood, is fond of dogs, and has all sorts, sizes and breeds. She possesses great skill in training them, and the pets which she has about her are all capable of wonderful tricks. But there was one dog upon which her Majesty confesses that in vain she used to cast longing eyes. It was a famous performing dog named Minos, and it was the rage as a society entertainer. Invitation cards at great London houses used to bear this strange announcement: "To meet the dog Minos." The following story of this remarkable creature is often told by the Queen, according to an English contemporary: "Upon one occasion, when bidden to carry a handkerchief to the most beautiful lady in the room the mischievous fellow sprang up to Queen Victoria and laid it at her feet. The latter laughed merrily, flicked the dog in the face with her own handkerchief and bade him do his duty honestly. Thereupon the dog picked up his handkerchief, and, in great humility, approached Queen Alexandra, then the Princess of Wales, lay down and placed the handkerchief before her."—Leslie's Weekly.

How to Make Soft Curls.

If very soft curls are desired—little ringlets which cover the temples—it is better to use only water. Let the hair be well washed and dried; then wet the lock well with water and shake it out. Shake until half dry and put in kid rollers in such a way that all the hairs are exposed to the air. When dry, take down, and a very nice set of little ringlets will be found. The secret of curling the hair on the kid or other curler is to let it remain up until every particle of moisture is gone. Hair will often appear to be perfectly dry, when it in reality contains a little dampness. Then it is taken down too soon, with the result that it immediately loses its curl.—New Haven Register.

Against Food Adulteration.

The State Federation of Women's Clubs of North Dakota, 900 strong, is lending its powerful sentiment against the use of adulterants in food and for the prosecution of those who violate the law. The federation has agreed to devote a portion of its time to the special consideration of adulterated foods.—What to Eat.

Sleeves, evidently, are growing smaller, and the inconvenient puff below the elbow is doomed to quick extinction. The ruffle sleeve, reaching to the elbow, with a tight-fitting undersleeve, is a satisfactory and becoming substitute.

A black velvet gown has very short sleeves. They are more shoulder caps, cut in points, and almost tight fitting. The undersleeve is of the heaviest Russian lace, tight except at the wrist, where they are slightly fulled. The gown is cut out a bit at the throat to show a guimpe of the lace.

A smoke-gray crepe de chine gown is made with an Eton jacket over a white lace blouse. The jacket has a border of rich gray lace, three narrow box pleats, running from the shoulder to the edge, and a band of lace insertion bordering the pleats. A picture hat of gray lace and ostrich feathers accompanies this gown.

Recently experiments with a view to preserving the calorific properties of hard coal by immersion in salt water were made, and it was demonstrated that a loss of one per cent. occurred. The Kitten and the Hatpin.

A small kitten, the property of John M. Yore, 710 First avenue, St. Joseph, Mich., is dead. The fact itself is not startling, but the manner of the kitten's death is so unusual that it has aroused much interest on the part of neighbors, physicians and veterinarians in this city.

The kitten, in a moment of excessive playfulness, twelve days ago, swallowed a hatpin. The animal was only four months old and of the usual size for such an age. The hatpin was seven inches long, with a stone head. Mr. Yore noticed the kitten playing with the ornament, which came from his daughter's hat. Soon afterward the pin was missing. Search was futile, and the kitten, which continued to be as sportive as ever, gave no symptoms of distress until a few days ago, when it became ill and subject to fits. This started a controversy in the household. One side asserted that the kitten had swallowed the hatpin. The other ridiculed the idea as physically impossible. Neither would weaken, however, and finally Mr. Yore became convinced that the only means of solution of the mystery lay in a searching examination of pussy's anatomy. No X-ray being handy, chloroform and a knife were used. The result was the recovery of the hatpin at the cost of the cat's life. The pin had been swallowed, its white head going down first, the metal body following until the point found a lodging place in the animal's throat. Before the dissection took place the case was placed before a physician and two veterinarians. In their opinion they declared that the kitten could not have swallowed a pin of such length. Later when the pin was produced and shown to them they expressed much astonishment.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"Love Interest."

A weekly contemporary, says the London Graphic, remarks that "love interest" is being relegated to a subordinate place in modern fiction. There probably never was a time in the history of literature when really great novelists could not dispense with that interest and yet hold the attention of their readers. Cervantes did so in "Don Quixote." So did Dickens in "The Pickwick Papers," and Disraeli in "Vivian Grey," and Zola in "La Debacle," and there are many other instances. At the same time it stands to reason that, as civilization becomes more complicated, the novelists will become less and less disposed to harp continually upon a single theme. Women, in particular, have more interests in life than they used to have, and women are the novelist's most faithful clients. Their lives, like the material world in general, progress "from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity." Etcetera, etcetera. The Spencerian philosophy, which explains so many things, explains also the deposition of the love interest from its sovereign place in contemporary romance.

SOLOMON-LIKE JUDGMENTS.

Cases in History a Local Justice Dispenser Ran Across.

A Magistrate of this city said the other day that while studying famous lawsuits and decisions of tory he had been amazed to find judgment of Solomon paralleled in half dozen cases. One of these c he had come upon in the Gesta manorum. A certain traveler had in a foreign country, and three yo had each laid claim to being the ma only son. He had had only one and for the judge to ascertain wh of the three claimants was the ri ful heir seemed an impossible t By no means at a loss, however, Judge ordered the dead man's b to be brought forth and bade the t claimants to shoot at it with arro Two shot; the third, with tears in eyes, refused; and to him, of cou the property of the dead man awarded.

Another case, the Magistrate s was to be found in the Harleian M Two babies played together by Ganges, when an alligator swallow one up. Two mothers then claimed the remaining baby as own, and the Judge, even as Solo had done, bade them to take hold the legs and pull, whereupon the t mother's identity revealed itself.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I have been so blessedly helped through the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I feel it but just to acknowledge it, hoping that it may help some other woman suffering as I did.

"For years I enjoyed the best of health and thought that I would always do so. I attended parties and receptions thinly clad, and would be suddenly chilled, but I did not think of the results. I caught a bad cold eighteen months ago while menstruating, and this caused inflammation of the womb and congested ovaries. I suffered excruciating pains and kept getting worse. My attention was called to your Vegetable Compound and the wonderful cures it had performed, and I made up my mind to try it for two months and see what it would do for me. SCIENCE NOTES.

Flowers out of the natural season are usually obtained by keeping the young plants in cold, dry houses, and forcing them later by heat and moisture.

Why do mosquitoes bite human beings? According to Dr. Santos Fernandez, of Cuba, it is because the females cannot form their eggs without sucking some warm blood. If they fail to get it they lay no eggs.

The dog grows for two years and lives for ten or twelve. The cat grows only for about eighteen months and may also live for ten years, in very exceptional cases for twice as long.

The atom of hydrogen is the smallest of the "ultimate atoms" of the chemists, but it is 1780 times as large as the corpuscles which have recently been demonstrated as the elements of the atoms.

A sand worm of the northern and western coasts of France seems to have a sense of time. It is known as "convoluta," and M. Behn states that it makes green spots on the sand at low tide and disappears as the tide rises, and continued this course during the fourteen days in an aquarium.

Great Britain is to have an habitual criminal law resembling those of some of our states. According to the Daily Mail the plan now under consideration is that of an industrial penal settlement for the special benefit of such "habituals," where special efforts would be made to reform them and opportunity given them of regaining their liberty by industry and good conduct, but only on probation.

A curious investigation by Alfred Binet of the Laboratory of the Sorbonne has revealed differences in the handwriting of the sexes. Numerous characteristics are traced—such as carelessness in the writing of women and firmness and simplicity in that of men—and an expert graphologist has been able to give the sex of the writers of 141 addresses out of 180. The writing of old men resembles that of women.

CINEMATOGRAPH IN SURGERY.

The Machine Improved So as to Seem to Throw Moving Objects in Relief.

The cinematograph, in addition to its many other uses, is now adapted to the clinic. The machine commonly displayed has, however, been improved upon for the surgeon by the addition of an ingenious appliance by which photographic projections seem to be thrown upon the screen with the relief that accompanies the same scene in nature.

This has been done in Paris. To look at the picture of a surgeon performing an operation as it is thrown upon the screen it exhibits no special peculiarity.

But when the same picture is examined through a small apparatus consisting of two aluminum plates with some mechanism between apertures for the eyes, there are seen plainly as in life all the details of the operation. The illusion is so perfect that the man looking at it might almost imagine himself present at the operation.

The value of the apparatus, which is the invention of Dr. Doyen, a French surgeon, is that it is possible with its aid to display before the eyes of almost any number of students typical surgical operations in their minutest details and in the most life-like aspect.

Later it is expected to be able to affix the apparatus to opera glasses so that it may be used in the same manner with ordinary cinematograph pictures. The invention has received warm praise from several learned societies in London before which it has been exhibited.—New York Sun.

British Birds for Canada.

An attempt on a large scale to introduce English song birds into British Columbia is at present being made. The Victoria (B. C.) Natural History society is taking out from England about 500 birds, consisting of 100 pairs of goldfinches, 100 pairs of larks, and 50 pairs of robins. They go by way of New York to Victoria. In accordance with the arrangements that have been made, half of the consignment will be placed in Vancouver and taken care of there until next spring when they will be distributed throughout the woodlands of the lower mainland. The remainder will be placed in Beacon Hill Park aviary and kept until spring when they will be given their liberty at various points on Vancouver island. It will be very interesting to hear if this extensive scheme of acclimatization proves a success.

Submarine Hotel in France.

A submarine hotel near Perdun, on the south coast of France, is proving a great attraction. Quite a number of guests are entertained there during the summer months. The building is of steel on a rock foundation, and has been fitted with large plate glass windows, from which the guests may look out on the peculiar form of life under the water at a depth of 36 feet. Machinery at the surface pumps air into the rooms for those visiting below, and at the same time drives away the impure air through draft tubes. It was in this hotel that the famous novelist Richeburg wrote some of his best stories when taking his annual vacation.

WOMEN ARE ESPECIALLY LIABLE TO COLDS

Colds Invariably Result in Catarrh, Which Sets Up a Host of Distressing Diseases.

PE-RU-NA Both Protects and Cures a Cold---Read Proof.

Miss Rose Gordon, 2102 Oakland av., Oakland Heights, Madison, Wis., writes:

"A few years ago I caught a severe cold, which resulted in chronic bronchitis and catarrh. Our family physician prescribed medicines which gave temporary relief only. I began taking Peruna and improved at once. Two bottles cured me. I recommend Peruna to all sufferers, and am most grateful to you for your valuable medicine."—Miss Rose Gordon.

Washington, D.C., 609 H street, N.W.

Dear Dr. Hartman: "I used to think that the doctors knew all about our aches and pains and were the proper ones to consult when sick, but since I have been sick myself I certainly had good reason to change my mind. During the winter I caught a heavy cold, which developed into catarrh of the bronchial tubes and an inflamed condition of the respiratory organs. The doctors were afraid that pneumonia would set in and prescribed pills, powders and packs until I sickened of the whole thing, as I did not improve. One of the ladies in the Home had a bottle of Peruna and she advised me to try that. Shortly after I began using it I felt that I had found the right medicine. I used two bottles and they restored me easily and pleasantly to perfect health. While my stomach was very delicate, Peruna did not nauseate me in the least, but gave me a good appetite, and I wish to express my gratitude to you for restored health."—Miss Rosalie Von Struenning.

CATCHING COLD

Is the Beginning of Most Winter Ailments—Pe-ru-na Protects Against and Cures Colds.

There is no fact of medical science better established than that a teaspoonful of Peruna before each meal during the winter season will absolutely protect a person from catching cold. Now, if this is true (and there is no doubt of it), thousands of lives would be saved, and tens of thousands of cases of chronic catarrh prevented, by this simple precaution within reach of every one.

After a cold has been contracted a teaspoonful of Peruna every hour will shortly cure it, leaving no trace of it behind. After chronic catarrh has become established, or the first stages of chronic bronchitis or consumption have been reached, it will take much longer to effect a cure.

It seems strange that as well known and well established as these facts are any one should neglect to profit by them, and yet no doubt there are many who pay little or no attention to them and go on catching cold, acquiring chronic catarrh, bronchitis and consumption.

Catarrh May Permeate the Whole System.

Mrs. Mary E. Sampson, West Derry, Rockingham County, N. H., writes:

"I had terrible headaches, both ears run and I was nervous all the time, also had trouble each month; was deaf in one ear for thirty years. I took six bottles of Peruna and one of Manalin, and am happy to say that it is the best medicine that I ever used. I am not so nervous, my appetite is good, everything I eat agrees with me, and I am feeling better in every way. I think Peruna is a godsend to women and a blessing to suffering humanity." — Mary E. Sampson.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

COSTLY COTTON BROKE BAXTER

Big Brokerage and Commission Firm Forced to the Wall.

DONE BY "KING" SULLY

Failure Attributed to Manipulations of Bull Clique--Had Branch Offices Throughout the South.

A. B. Baxter & Co., brokers, of New York, with 138 offices in the United States, 38 of which are in the south, failed Saturday. It is said that the failure will amount approximately to $3,000,000, thought the exact figures will not be known for several days.

A New York special says: Daniel J. Sully, the cotton king, cleared $800,000 Saturday morning in the spectacular rise of July cotton, which touched 16.86. He bought 200,000 bales Friday morning at 16 and sold out Saturday at an advance of from 60 to 80 points.

Directly charged to the operation of Sully in the market was the assignment of A. B. Baxter & Co., dealers in stocks, bonds and cotton, at No. 61 Broadway, with offices in all the principal cities of the United States, mostly in the south and southwest. The failure involved $200,000. The firm assigned for the benefits of creditors to George J. Vestner.

The officers are A. B. Baxter, president; W. W. Vensel, treasurer, and Felix P. Lipp, secretary. The company was incorporated in 1902, with a capital of $300,000. The concern is the largest of its kind on this continent and its operations have been on a mammoth scale.

The assignment was not filed in New York 1:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, and there was no hint of it before the close of trading on the cotton market at noon. At the office of Baxter & Co. it was said that it would take several days to estimate the liabilities and assets which could not, it was said, be estimated now.

George J. Vestner, the Baxter firm's assignee, is a lawyer in the office of McIntyre, Cantor & Adams. John F. McIntyre said for the assignee of the company:

"The company has a large number of branch offices, one in nearly every principal city of the south and west. It has 30,000 miles of leased wires, and pays $30,000 a month tolls to the telegraph companies. As soon as we assigned we wired all our branch offices not to accept another cent from customers.

"What caused the suspension was the continued rise in cotton. Most of our customers in the south and west, who had been long on cotton, went short recently, thinking the high water mark had passed, but when Sully continued to send cotton up we called on our customers for more margins.

We thought we saw hope when cotton fell off 50 points Friday, but when it rose 75 points Saturday and the majority of customers failed to respond to requests for more margins, we had to assign."

CASH TO EASE COLOMBIA'S HURT.

Democratic Senators Favor Paying Her Liberally for the Loss of Panama.

For three hours Saturday the democrats of the senate discussed plans for united party action in support of the Bacon resolution for paying Colombia $10,000,000 in cash for the loss of Panama. During the discussion it developed that if the senate will take action on the lines of this resolution democratic opposition to the ratification of the Panama treaty will be withdrawn. No final action was taken, however, as there is to be another caucus on the subject.

The republican attitude on the question of paying Colombia the sum stated for a quit claim deed to her interest in the canal zone was made known to the senators in the caucus. The republicans, it is understood, have already agreed to satisfy Colombia in this matter, but they propose to have the canal treaty ratified before they make the deal public.

Going to Pensacola.

The construction of part of the Frisco-Rock Island extension south was announced some time ago under the name of the Memphis and Gulf railroad. Its ultimate destination is just now being generally made known. The work on the extension of the new road from Aberdeen to Columbus, Miss., is to be commenced at once, and from that point the general line of route is to be through Pickens, Greene, Marengo and Monroe counties, in Alabama, crossing the Louisville and Nashville road in the vicinity of Flomaton, and into Florida direct to Pensacola.

The war department has published a book entitled The Military Policy of the United States," by the late Major General Emory Upton. General Upton's military career, according to Secretary Root, who directed the publication, was one of exceptional excellence and brilliance, and no one was more fit than he to undertake such a difficult task as the writing of this book. Although written a quarter of a century ago, this particular work on military policy was never before published by the government. Secretary Root rescued it from the millions of documents in the archives of the war department and has caused it to be published for the reason that General Upton's plans and recommendations were prophetic and are as sound today as they were when written.

Several months ago a drop forge company was organized by Bessemer and Birmingham, Ala., capital, a site selected and work on the foundations begun, but for reasons satisfactory to the officers work was stopped. It has been learned upon good authority that arrangements are being perfected to resume work, and when begun the construction will be pushed to completion. Material amounting to several thousand dollars has been placed on the ground and everything is being gotten ready to go to work.

Expected reaction came in the cotton market Friday morning, and longs went wild in their efforts to liquidate Their offerings swamped the market for a while and prices went down from 45 to 86 points. The prominent bulls were heavy buyers at the decline and even at the lowest buying orders of a few hundred bales would send the market up 10 points.

The state of Alabama is holding 200 bales of cotton which was raised on the state farm by convict labor.

The Sheffield Coal and Iron Company's mines have been closed indefinitely.

All the open hearth furnaces of the Ensley steel plant are in operation.

Representative Lamb, of West Virginia, introduced a bill appropriating $1,200,000 to the Negro Development and Exposition Company of the United States of America, incorporated under the laws of Virginia. One million dollars is to enable a creditable exposition to be made by the company at the Jamestown exposition to be held in 1907, and $200,000 is to pay bounties and arrears, pay due estates of deceased negro soldiers of the civil war.

Seizure Was Illegal.

Twelve Spanish fishing smacks were seized near Key West by the United States government about the beginning of the Spanish war and the vessels were sold as prizes. The owners appealed and the supreme court decided the seizures were illegal, and on a second trial the district court awarded damages. From this action of the district court the government appealed, and the supreme court sustained the action of the lower court. The claimants will be paid at Key West, and their claims aggregate $55,855.

$100,000 FIRE.

Clarksville, Tenn., Business Section Suffers Heavy Loss.

At Clarksville, Tenn., fire Monday night caused damage estimated at nearly $100,000. It destroyed Weaver & McCauley's liquor house, W. S. Russell's grocery store and Gerhart & Son's drug establishment, while the furniture stock of C. F. Couts suffered from water. Wires and cables of the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph company were also destroyed. The estimated losses are:

THE NEW GOVERNOR

Outlines His Policy and Asks for Cooperation.

Luke E. Wright and Vice Governor Henry C. Ide, of the Philippines, were inaugurated Monday. There was an imposing demonstration, including a brilliant military pageant, about 3,000 troops being in line.

After taking the oath of office Governor Wright delivered his inaugural address. Governor Wright invited attention to the improvements that had been accomplished in the Philippines under American rule, and declared his intention of adhering to the principles of the Taft administration. He urged Americans to establish cordial personal and business relations with the Filipinos, who must constitute their chief customers. In conclusion Governor Wright asked for the sympathetic cooperation of all classes to whom, he said, were assured equal opportunities for advancement.

Site Purchased.

Ten acres of land has been purchased between Ensley and Pratt City by the Southern Street Car Manufac- Ala., by the Southern Street Car Manufacturing company. The work of erecting the plant, it is stated on reliable authority, will begin in thirty days. It is stated that the original plant will cost $100,000, being a two-story building 300 by 300 feet. The capital stock of the company, which is now $50,000, will be increased at an early date to $500,000. The company will employ 1,000 men at the outset, and this force will be increased. W. G. Pilkington, of Virginia, is president of the company, while J. W. Gilliam, also of Virginia, is secretary and treasurer. This company owns a number of patents on street car devices.

MYSTERIOUS DEATH

Leads to One More and Three Children Are Orphans.

The remains of Ernest A. Penick, a well known citizen of Yazoo City, Miss., who disappeared from his home several days since, have been found in Panther creek swamp and the body bears signs that he was assassinated.

When the news of the death of her husband was conveyed to Mrs. Penick, who was then in bed with an attack of pneumonia, she steadily grew worse and died a few hours later. Three little children are left orphans by this double tragedy, one of whom is a mute.

South Dakota Wins.

The case of the state of South Dakota vs the state of North Carolina was decided by the United States supreme court favorable to South Dakota. The case involved the validity of a mortgage on stock of the North Carolina railroad company, given by the state of North Carolina to secure the payment of state bonds given in aid of the road in 1867.

The state of South Dakota holds ten bonds of $1,000 each under a gift, the amount due "on coupons attached" being $27,000.

A YOUNG WIDOW

Is Left by a Fatal Mine Accident to Paul Long.

Paul Long, who married only two months ago, was run over by a trip of cars on the slope loading at Pratt Mines, Ala., Thursday morning and met a horrible death. He was employed as motorman on one of the electrical motor cars in this mine, but not feeling well started to leave the mine and instead of going out of the manway started up the slope. He was struck by a trip of cars and was horribly crushed.

It is stated that the body of the operator killed at Moundville is not that of Clarence P. Seymour. His wife refused the remains.

Dr. J. M. Lindley, president of the National Public Health association, who has just returned from Havana, where he made an investigation of the method of quarantine, has been arrested, charged with libeling the members of the Mobile, Ala., quarantine board. He gave bond and was released. It is believed a trial of the case will be had in February.

Word has been received of the death of "Pig" Melton, which occurred a few days ago at Pineapple, his home. Young Melton was the young man who, while playing in a game of craps with some negroes the day before Christmas, became engaged in a fight with them and was shot in the leg. The outcome of the fight was a lynching and the burning of half the town.

The report of Mrs. Maybrick's release is now denied, although she has been removed from prison.

William C. Whitney, former secretary of the navy, has undergone an operation for appendicitis and is considered a very sick man.

It will take years to complete the double tracking of the Queen and Crescent from Cincinnati south, which work is under headway. It will represent an investment of millions of dollars, and is considered one of the biggest problems in railroading. The contract for double tracking two miles of the line was recently let. This will cost $10,000 per mile.

President Buchanan's Sad Love Sto

By Myrtle Reed

AMONG other things the fifteenth President, James Buc was remarkable for his lifelong fidelity to one woman.

After he left the Legislature, and took up the pra law, he became engaged to Anne Coleman, the daug Robert Coleman, of Lancaster.

She is said to have been an unusually beautiful gi extremely sensitive. On account of her sensitiveness was a rupture, for which neither can be blamed.

One day, out of the blue sky, a thunderbolt fell. Buc received a note from Miss Coleman asking him to release her from gagement.

There was no explanation forthcoming, and it was not until long ward that he discovered that gossips and busybodies had gone to Mis man with stories concerning him which had no foundation save in the chief-making imaginations.

After all his efforts at re-establishing the old relation had proved he wrote to her that if it were her wish to be released from the enga he could not but submit, as he had no desire to hold her against her wi

The break came in the latter part of the summer of 1819. He threw self into his work with renewed energy, and later on she went to visit in Philadelphia.

Though she was too proud to admit it, there was evidence that the tiful and high-spirited girl was suffering from a heartache. On the n December she died very suddenly, and her body was brought home week after she left Lancaster.

The funeral took place the next day, Sunday, and to Robert Col the girl's father, the heart-broken man wrote a letter which in simple stands almost alone. It is the only document which remains, but in few lines is hidden a tragedy:

Lancaster, December 10, 18

My Dear Sir—You have lost a child, a dear, dear child. I have lo only earthly object of my affections, without whom life now presents a dreary blank.

My prospects are all cut off, and I feel that my happiness will be with her in the grave.

It is now no time for explanation, but the time will come when yo discover that she, as well as I, has been much abused. God forgive t thors of it! My feelings of resentment against them, whoever they m are buried in the dust.

I may sustain the shock of her death, but I feel that happiness h from me forever. The prayer which I make to God without ceasing I yet may be able to show my veneration for the memory of my de parted saint, by my respect and attachment for her surviving friends. Heaven bless you, and enable you to bear the shock with the fortitu Christian.

I am forever your sincere and grateful friend,

A Fruitful Vision.

How the Fresh Air Movement Began in the Penn sylvania Mountains.

By Jacob A. Riis.

THERE rises before me the wraith of a village church in the mountains of Pennsylvania. It is Sunday morning at midsu In the pulpit a young clergyman is preaching from the tex asmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even the ye did it unto me." The sun peeps through the windows, climbing roses nod. In the tall maples a dove is cooin drowsy hum of the honey-bee is on the air. But he recks these, nor of the peaceful day. His soul has seen a vision of hot and streets, of squalid homes, of hard-visaged, unlovely childhood, of mankind in His image twisted by want and ignorance into monstrous deformity the message he speaks goes straight to the heart of the plain farmers benches; His brethren these, and steeped in the slum! They gather rou after the service, their hearts burning within them.

I see him speeding the next day toward the great city, a messenger and pity and help. I see him return before the week's end, nine stary chins clinging to his hands and the skirts of his coat, the first Fresh Air that went out of New York, twenty-seven years ago next summer. I s big-hearted farmers take them into their homes and hearts. I see the summer wind put back color in the wan cheek, and life in the sh and starved frame. I hear the message of one of the little ones to her left behind in the tenement: "I can have two pieces of pie to eat, and says nothing if I take three pieces of cake!" and I know what it to them. Laugh? Yes! laugh and be glad. The world has sorrow Let in the sunshine where you can, and know that it means life to the now and a glimpse of the hereafter. I can hear it yet, the sigh of the mother under the trees on Twin Island, our Henry street children's s home: If heaven is like this, I don't care how soon I go."

For the sermon had wings; and whithersoever it went blessings spr its track. Love and justice grew; men read the brotherhood into the s and the fields and the woods, and the brotherhood became real. I see tod lard Parsons, the minister, so longer so young, sitting in his office in t bune Building, still planning Fresh Air holidays for the children of the stony city. But he seeks them himself no more. A thousand churches ties, kindergartens, settlements, a thousand preachers and doers of the b hood, gather them in. A thousand trains of many crowded cars carry to the homes that are waiting for them wherever men and women with hearts live. The message has traveled to the farthest shores, and now the Christian world is there a place where it has not been heard and b Wherever it has, there you have seen the heart of man laid bare; a sight is good.—The Century.

GREAT FIRE IN BALTIMORE!

Wholesale District of City is Wiped Out in Mammoth Conflagration.

LOSS OF MILLIONS

unday Blaze Starts in Heart of Maryland's Metropolis and Cuts a Wide Swath of Destruction.

The most destructive conflagration the history of Baltimore occurred nday and Sunday night, raging prac-ally unchecked during many hours, mpletely destroying scores of the gest houses in the wholesale dis-ct, involving losses which cannot be accurately estimated.

The fire broke out shortly before 11 lock Sunday morning in the whole-e dry goods store of John E. Hurst Co., on Hopkins place, in the heart the business district, with a series loud explosions, which were heard remote parts of the city and spread h fearful rapidity.

n a half hour there were a dozen warehouses in the wholesale dry ds and notions district burning cely.

The entire vity fire department was ed out, but was utterly powerless check the spread of the flames, ch were aided by high winds, and noon there were roaring fires in at st thirty big warehouses and the flagration was steadily eating its into successive blocks east, north, t and south.

uilding after building fell a prey the flames, and apparently there no check to the frightful sweep destruction.

n Baltimore street, the block east Hanover, and after that the block the south side to Charles street, ke out in flames, the Consolidated Company's building and Oehm's e hall burning fiercely.

eanwhile there were stores north Baltimore street being similarly umed. Mullin's hotel caught and r buildings near it. West of Lib-street, on the south side of Bal-ore, the block was doomed, and the Baltimore Bargain House also ght. Down in Hopkins place, re the conflagration started, st's building and other wholesale es on both sides of the street, bled and fell.

Spectacle of Ruin Appalling.

he big dry goods house of Daniel er & Sons and R. M. Sutton & were seen aflame and along Ger-street, east and west from the st building, there were a dozen ings burning and scores more atened. The spectacle of ruin and ruction from any point in these ed blocks were something appalias & Kemper's big wholesale , on Baltimore stret, quickly mbed to the flames and the walls with a crash that was heard for es. The Hurst building was ut-destroyed.

Hopkins place the Hopkins Sav-bank and the National Exchange were gutted by flames, while the street were the ruins of E. Hurst & Co., and next to it cht, Jr., & Sons, in flames. Ad-g was the large building owned e William Hoch Importing Com-which was also destroyed.

oss the street the Stanley & Drug Company was quickly in while fronting on the Baltimore side of this block were the Rox-Rye Distilling Company, the building occupied by Silberman & Todes, the house of Allen Sons & Co., which had hardly been completed, while next to it was the establishment of M. Moses & Co. On the corner was the building occupied by the Messrs. Sugar & Shear, and several other smaller concerns. All of these were swallowed up in the flames, and, in fact, the whole block was nothing but a cauldron of fire.

At 1:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon Mullens' hotel, a seven-story structure, was in flames from garret to cellar and its great height and narrowness, which acted as a sort of flue, converted the doomed building into a huge and dreadful torch.

Other Cities Send Aid.

Though every bit of fire fighting apparatuus in the city was called into requisition as the flames continued to spread the firemen realized that they had a task before them which was too great for them to combat. Telegrams for fire engines were sent to Washington and Philadelphia and about 1 o'clock six engines arrived from Washington and four from Philadelphia and joined in the battle with the flames.

Engines from stations in Baltimore, Howard, Anne, Arundel and Hartford counties arrived as soon as possible. Water plugs in every section within a radius of half a mile from the fire were in use, and it is roughly estimated that there were 350 hose lines all playing at one time upon different parts of the conflagration.

Owing to the great congestion of fire apparatus, the crowds of people and the general confusion, many engines from out of town were unable to find a place where they would be of any service.

At 7 o'clock Sunday night the situation was so desperate that Chief Hoston decided that the only thing left to do was to dynamite buildings at threatened points and thus prevent, as far as possible, a further spread of the flames.

At 3 o'clock Monday morning the fire still raged. So far as known no serious casualties were reported. Telegraph, telephone and electric wires of all kinds were prostrated.

The fire covered an area of three-quarters of a mile in length by nearly a quarter of a mile in width, taking in many of the most important buildings in the city. The loss, it is believed, will reach $100,000,000.

President Palma's decree increasing the rates of Cuban customs duties in accordance with the authority given him by congress has been promulgated.

The rates are considered more favorable to Europe than America. The latter hoped that a 30 per cent increase, which is the maximum rate allowed by congress, would have been placed on goods which the United States cannot manufacture in competition with Europe.

WAR NEWS IN WASHINGTON.

Associated Press Advised of Diplomatic Rupture Between Russ and Jap.

The Associated Press at Washington was informed Sunday bt the Russian embassy that the Russian government has received a note from Japan announcing the discontinuance of negotiations and the interruption of diplomatic relations.

Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador, upon receipt of the cablegram from St. Petersburg, called upon Acting Secretary of State Loomis and informed him of the interruption of relations.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FEBRUARY 3RD.

After almost allowing the amendment to the urgency deficiency appropriation bill proviaing for a loan of $4,600,000 to the St. Louis exposition to get through without any discussion whatever, the senate changed its tactics just as the vote was about to be taken, and began a debate on the loan provision which continued for about four hours, and was still in progress when the senate adjourned for the day.

The debate was precipitated by a point of order made against the amendment by Mr. Bailey, who maintained that the national government was not, as such, concerned with the success or failure of any exposition.

Indiana and Kentucky locked horns in the house. The debate, which involved nearly every member of both state delegations, was fast and furious. Kentucky demanded of Indiana the return of W. S. Taylor, that he might be tried for the assassination of William Goebel.

The attack was made by Mr. James, of Kentucky, and the defense was led by Mr. Crumpacker, of Indiana. The diplomatic appropriation bill was under consideration at the time, with Mr. Lacey, of Iowa, in the chair.

FEBRUARY 4TH.

The senate chamber again was the arena of political debate with the provision in the urgent deficiency bill for a loan of $4,600,000 for the St. Louis exposition the basis for the discussion.

The resolutions introduced by Mr. Tillman making inquiry of the secretary of the treasury concerning the appointment of W. D. Crum as collector of the port of Charleston, and directing the senate committee on judiciary to make an inquiry as to what constitutes a recess appointment to office, were taken up.

Mr. Tillman claimed that in the Crum case the statute had been violated and in the case of General Wood the constitution had been opposed.

He further said that Crum was not a fit man for the position and that the community had made many protests against his selection.

The judiciary committee will report to the senate what constitutes a recess and what recess appointments are.

The principal feature in the house was the rivalry between republican leaders for the honor of moving an adjournment. It fell to Mr. Grosvenor.

The diplomatic bill, carrying $1,993,600, was passed.

FEBRUARY 5TH.

The political debate in the senate on the proposed loan of $4,600,000 to the St. Louis exposition which has been in progress on a point of order for the past three days came to a close through a vote which left the provision in the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was passed.

After the vote on the deficiency bill, speeches in support of the Panama canal treaty were made by Mr. Mallory, of Florida, and Mr. Heyburn, of Idaho.

Mr. Mitchell, from the committee on postoffices, made a favorable report on the resolution ordering the postmaster general to send to the senate the reports made on the irregularities in the postoffice department for consideration. The resolution was adopted without debate.

A bill was passed providing for the transportation of six hundred teachers from Porto Rico to and from the United States next summer for purposes of study.

Adjourned till Monday.

Mr. Sheppard, democrat, of Texas, one of the youngest members of the house, made a determined effort to bring about a reform in the matter of distribution of seeds by the government. He contended that the present system was bad.

Mr. Sheppard's first move was to have struck from the agricultural appropriation bill certain sections providing the machinery for the distribution of the seeds authorized to be purchased under the bill. In this he was successful, his point of order being sustained by the chair, but by an overwhelming vote the house promptly added the sections to the bill by way of amendments.

Mr. Lucking, of Michigan, calling attention to the manufacture and distribution of black-leg vaccine by the agricultural department, said he would offer an amendment restricting the number of doses that may be given away by the government. He contended that the amount now given away is detrimental to private enterprise.

The agricultural appropriation bill was passed, and the house adjourned until Monday.

ON THE STATE LINE.

Old Controversy Between Alabama and Florida.

Special Agent G. W. Lee has filed in the office of the secretary of state the field notes of the strip of land on the Florida border, and they become a matter of record.

The filing of these notes recalls an old struggle between Alabama and Florida for a strip of several thousand acres of valuable timber lands. Many years ago two surveyors named Coffee and Whitney ran border lines between Alabama and Florida, and each of these lines has since taken the name of the surveyor. The Coffee line runs parallel to the Whitney line from the Chattahoochee river, about two miles north for a distance of about seventy miles. Florida claimed the Coffee line to be correct, but when the dispute was finally settled Alabama was victorious and the Whitney line declared the proper one.

While the dispute over the wedge was being waged, the Alabama field notes were compiled and filed according to the Coffee line, and consequently since the settlement of the dispute persons desiring the use of the field notes of the "wedge" have been forced to go to Florida for them.

Attention was directed to this matter by former Secretary of State McDavid, which resulted in the last legislature making an appropriation of $200 to have the field notes made.

NOT YET APPREHENDED.

Assault and Arson at Phoenix City, Ala.

The person or persons who burglarized the house of Sam Waller, west of Phoenix City, Ala., Friday night, set fire to the residence and then shot repeatedly at various members of the family, are still at large.

It is now believed that one burglar was responsible for the reign of terror. Mr. Waller is an old man and went to town for help. After his departure the two ladies there, his wife and a Mrs. McCroan, had a perilous experience. As they left the house a man met them in the yard and cursed them. They finally took refuge in a servant's house, turning out the lights. The burglar broke the door down and entering, set fire to a bed there. Mrs. McCroan was badly cut and Mrs. Waller thought her husband dead until his return at the head of the rescuing party.

FORGOT THE DYNAMITE.

Both Hands Blown Off and One Eye Gone.

D. C. Wolf, a miner employed at the Bradford mines in Jefferson county, Ala., is in the hospital in a critical condition, the result of an accident. It appears that Wolf was preparing a "shot" in the coal, and after putting in his explosive lighted a stick of dynamite. Forgetting that he had lighted the dynamite, so it is stated, he started to get out of his room in the mine to escape injury from the "shot" in the coal. The dynamite which he carried in his hands exploded. Wolf was knocked down and rendered unconscious. When men in the mines heard the two explosions, one from the "shot" and the other from the dynamite, they ran to the place and found Wolf in a horrible condition. Both of his hands were blown off, one of his eyes entirely destroyed and the other seriously injured. In addition to this he was horribly bruised. The man's condition is such that there is not much hope for his final recovery.

On Friday, February 19, the property of the defunct Bessemer, Ala., Savings bank will be sold at public auction. As early as practicable the first dividend will be paid to the late institution's creditors, which, it is expected, will be between 30 and 35 per cent of the total claims filed. The receiver has on hand $32,000 and $4,500 of county script.

Mrs. Betsy Allen, who lives in Paint Rock, Ala., celebrated her 104th birthday last week. Those who know her say that she is really that old.

Jackson county, Alabama, farmers are preparing to plant most of their land in cotton.

In 1903 there were 116 miles of new railroad track built in Alabama.

A One-Legged Marshal.

Thomas Crow was elected marshal of Courtland, Ala. Crow has been marshal of the town for a number of years and held the office up to October last, when in an attempt to arrest a negro he was shot so seriously in the leg that amputation was necessary.

While Mr. Crow now has only one leg, he insists that he can discharge all of the duties of marshal, and a majority of the people of the town seem to agree with him, as he was elected by a handsome majority. Courtland now, so far as known, has the only one-legged marshal in the state.

THE COOSA'S POWER

To Be Utilized This Summer by New Company.

Arrangements have been made to organize a company to be known as the Coosa Water Power Development company with a capital of $250,000. It is said that northern men of prominence in financial circles will be interested.

The lands and water power privileges in Calhoun county have been purchased, and the right to build the dam across the abandoned portion of the river secured from the secretary of war, and the probate judge has had a jury make report and assessment of damages, all of which are of record in Calhoun county.

The company will build the dam this summer, and erect power plant and lay off manufacturing sites. Negotiations are being made with eastern parties to build a cotton duck mill, and with western parties for a large reduction plant.

The large lake formed by the dam will be used for boating and fishing, and a park will be arranged there.

West End Progress.

The city council and citizens of West End, Ala., are contemplating the institution of municipal ownership, and their first move in this direction will be the erection of an electric light plant and installing of a water works system. It is proposed that these two moves will be made by the city alone, and that no company will be given stock in the enterprises. If the plans that the council of the city have on foot are realized, in the near future bonds amounting to $100,000 will be floated and work on the propos...ons will be immediately undertaken.

The Cane Crop.

Correspondents record in their letters the successful prosecution of field work and spring planting, and in a number of instances the work of putting down the seed for the coming crop has been completed, this being in strong contrast to the situation at this time last year, when in a number of cases not a stalk of spring plant cane was yet in the ground, the extremely wet and disagreeable weather having prevented the inauguration of this work.

Oldest Mason Dead.

Judge Green D. Campbell died at his residence in Scottsboro, Ala., Friday morning. He had been an invalid for a year, being totally blind. Judge Campbell was one of the most prominent citizens in the county. He filled some of the highest offices and represented Jackson county in the legislature.

Judge Campbell was the oldest living Mason in Alabama.

Fatal Wreck.

While running at the rate of fifty miles an hour and twenty minutes late, a Southern passenger train from Demopolis, Ala., collided, head on, with an extra freight train from Meridian, Miss., near York, Ala., Monday. The engineer and fireman on the passenger train were instantly killed, the express messenger and postal clerks, Eastman and Watson, and several passengers were seriously injured. The engineer's head was completely severed from his body.

Hand Mangled.

Lawrence Ezell, an employe of the Gulf Red Cedar mills at Paint Rock, Ala., had the misfortune to get his hand caught by a belt and drawn into some machinery, which mangled it to such an extent that amputation was necessary.

W. Cameron Forbes, of Boston, has been offered the place on Philippine commission made vacant by the promotion of Governor Taft.

At Lakeland, Fla., an entire block was burned Monday morning. The loss is estimated at $75,000 with insurance of about one-third. The cause of the fire is unknown. The entire burned district will at once be rebuilt.

One person has purchased $12,000 worth of property in Pensacola, Fla., which he proposes to sub-divide.

Tore House Down Over Their Heads.

The entire family of A. A. Willbanks, of Pinckney City, had a narrow escape from death Sunday at noon.

While the family were seated at the dinner table lightning struck the house and tore out the whole front side, destroying one chimney and doing other slight damage. The lightning skirted the entire house, but the damage was confined to the front side. Fortunately no one was hurt.

Despondency over poor health caused Reese McCurdy, son of Captain W. D. McCurdy, of Lowndesboro, Ala., to shoot himself through the head Monday morning.

HAY-SPRITES.

The sun is hot on the hayfield,
It pours on each new-cut heap,
The little weary hay-sprites
Have crept underneath to sleep.

How they wrestled and leaped this morning
Whilst the haymakers tossed the hay!
And now in their prickly caves
They have hidden themselves away.

But soon when the elm tree shadows
Grow longer over the grass,
And the trees wake up and rustle
And the winds of the evening pass,

Then the sprites creep out of the darkness
And blink in sleepy surprise,
And stretch their little thin bodies
And rub their little black eyes.

They ride on the angry beetles,
And chase the bumble bees,
Till the mists rise up in the valley
And the moon comes over the trees.

Folks say it's the wind that rustles
And stirs the new-mown hay,
But it's only the little hay-sprites
Come out in the dusk to play.

A PAPER HERO

By WALTER G. PROCTOR.

Copyrighted, 1903, by The Authors Publishing Company

"Mornin', Mary; 'nother letter from Fred, I 'spose—t'as the South Africa stamp on't," said the postman, handing a letter to the rosy-cheeked maiden waiting for him at the gate in the break of the hedge.

Blushing, Mary took it and hastened to the rosebower in the corner of the garden where she had spent the last blissful hour with Fred before his departure for the front. To her it seemed a fit place to read his letters.

She read and re-read this particular letter. Then with bounding step and happy heart she ran into the cottage and threw it into her mother's lap.

"Read it, mother," she exclaimed. "What do you think? Fred's a hero."

While her mother was reading the letter, some of Mary's girl friends came in.

"The postman says you've a letter from Fred," said one; "do tell us the news, Mary; there's a dear."

Only too anxious, Mary took the letter from her mother.

"I'm only going to read the news to you, girls," she said, excitedly; "but that's enough. Fred's a real hero. He's saved a whole battalion. Here's what he says:

"'I expect you have read about it in the papers by this time. But there, you don't know yet. Our battalion was ordered to take a strong position held by the Boers, from which they have been sneaking out and doing a lot of mischief lately, blowing up trains and cutting off transports. We started out bright and early without transportation, and with only three days' rations. We marched until noon, when we encamped and rested until sunset. Then we resumed our march, and marched all night, in order to surprise the enemy at dawn.

"'We had to cross a river to get to them. That river came near being the slaughter-house for the whole battalion—it was for quite a number. The road to the ford ran through a deep gorge which opened into a narrow valley, walled in by steep hills, and through which flowed the river. We cleared the gorge and our vanguard was already half-way across the river, when the enemy opened fire on us from the hills on the opposite side. Somehow they had heard of our intended attack. We were completely surprised and at their mercy. We were in the open and unprotected, while not a head of the enemy could be seen. From every rock belched forth fire and bullets. In a moment all was confusion. Our colonel, a conspicuous mark for enemies' bullets, kept his wits, however, and ordered the battery to play on them. But it was no use. There was nothing to do now but to retreat, and our colonel reluctantly gave the order.

"'But no sooner had we right-about-faced than we were met by a murderous fire from the hills we had just left.

"'"Volunteers to man the guns," our colonel yelled. "Pepper the hills and cover our retreat."

"'It was almost certain death to touch those guns, but I dashed for them and a dozen fellows followed me. Nearly all were shot down before we reached the guns, but I shouted for others to come on.

"'The bullets were striking all around me, several passed through my clothes, and one knocked off my hat, but we got the guns into action long enough to enable the battalion to re-enter the gorge, where we were protected by the rocks. How any of us escaped is a mystery. We were compelled to leave the guns in the valley, but once under cover of the rocks, we were able to prevent them falling into the hands of the Boers.

"'When night came on the colonel called for volunteers to save the guns. Again I led a few men to the guns and brought them in. A few doses of lyddite cleared the hills of the enemy and enabled our ambulance corps to attend to the wounded and bury the dead. The colonel complimented me and recommended me for promotion.'

"There, what do you think of that, girls," cried the delighted Mary, as a vision of Fred, with her arm in his, walking along the street, floated before her eyes.

"Oh, do send his letter to the paper," advised Sadie Hopkins.

"Yes, Mary, do," entreated the others.

"Do you think they would print it?" she asked.

"Think? I know they would," replied Sadie. "Copy the part you read to us, Mary, and send it in; it will appear next Sunday."

And so it came about that one of the foremost weekly papers of London published an account of the heroism of Fred Marlow.

Col. St. Quentin sat in the corrugated iron shanty which served for his headquarters. He had just been receiving reports from the blockhouses scattered along the railway. He was wishing something would turn up to break the monotony of the situation and dispel the ennui that had crept upon him. Just then his orderly entered.

"Hello, Pemberton," he exclaimed. "Any news? Confound it, there is not a Boer in the country, and I don't see the necessity for keeping us here in this blooming country now, alternately roasting and shivering. Kitchener has them about all corralled."

"No news of Boers around here, colonel," replied the orderly, saluting, "but I have some news from the front by way of London."

"Gad! what is it?" asked the colonel. "Anything important? Not peace, eh?"

"Oh, no. It's an account of some of our past exploits. Read that," and the orderly took from his pocket a copy of the Weekly News, indicating with his finger the part he desired the colonel to read. The latter read the article through, looked at the date of the paper, and then at his orderly.

"That's rich, isn't it?" he remarked. "It's too good to keep to ourselves. Pass the order around, Pemberton, to have the men parade and formed into a square."

"Good. Now for some fun," soliloquized the orderly, as he started to deliver his colonel's orders.

When the men formed, the colonel, standing in the center of the square, read to them an account of the wonderful achievement of one of their number. When he had finished reading, he addressed the battalion:

"I feel that an apology is due from me to the brave fellow in our ranks whose gallant deed has so long been unrecognized. But the fact is, I had never heard of it until to-day, when I read the article in this paper. However, to make amends for our past neglect, I now call upon you to give the hero three hearty cheers."

The battalion responded with three mighty cheers.

Fred Marlow was wishing the ground would open and swallow him.

THE TAMING OF A TIGER.

How Clever Showman Got the Best of Ferocious Man-Eater.

"The trainers of wild beasts," said John Lover of the Zoo, "sometimes show a good deal of originality in devising means to subdue intractable animals. For instance, there was a showman I used to know named Melchior. He once bought for a song a magnificent Bengal tiger, getting it so cheap because it had already killed two men. This tiger had a ferocious nature. Melchior at first would put his foot or his hand into the cage, but from the way it would leap at him he knew that to put himself entirely in its power would be suicide. Nothing he could do would establish a friendly relation between himself and the tiger. Some originality was needed, and Melchior showed it by taking some old clothes, stuffing them with rags and throwing them in the cage. The tiger in a jiffy tore the old clothes to pieces, thinking them a human being. Next day, and the next day, and the next, Melchior continued to throw in to the tiger stuffed figures, and the tiger continued to destroy them; only, as time passed, the animal ceased to put heat into its work, and in the end, to make a long story short, it gave up altogether these attacks on the scarecrows—it would just play with them or else not notice them at all. Now was Melchior's time. He opend the cage door one morning, walked in boldly and slapped the tiger familiarly on the back. It gave him a friendly look and purred. It took him, you see, for another mannikin. It lived seven years with Melchior and finally died of heart trouble, and through all those seven years it was as gentle as a kitten. A child could have handled it."—Philadelphia Record.

Was He Joking?

Several Philadelphia men recently went on a gunning trip to Virginia. The first evening they elected to stop at a little, out of the way hotel. Along with the other guests they had repaired to the dining room for supper, and had been seated some little while when the proprietor appeared in the doorway and to their astonishment recited in stentorian tones the bill of fare.

One of the party inquired later why this novel method prevailed in lieu of the usual printed cards.

"It's a practice I began some years ago," replied the proprietor with a smile, "when I kept a hotel in another state. Most of my guests were members of the legislature, and they couldn't read."

Dancing for Children.

It is never a good idea to send a child to the dancing class so distractingly gowned that she cannot put her mind on the instructions of her teacher. A simple little frock, not any more "frilly" than any afternoon pique dress she might wear, is best. And for Reginald the same notion is the most satisfactory, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. Do not insist on making him tog out as brother Will would when going to his first big dinner. It seems almost a shame to insist that children should wear high buttoned or laced boots for the dancing class, but it is by far the most sensible, for until the ankles are strong and not prone to any turning the high shoes, with, however, very low heels, are the best.

Spirit Photography.

An Irish woman went to a photographer's and, after stating that her husband was dead, requested a picture of him. On being asked for a likeness, she said:

"Shure, if I had wan picture of him, wat wud I come here for?"

The photographer, always ready for fun, replied:

"If you give me $5 and a description o fyour husband, I think I can accommodate you."

"Well," answered the woman, "he had red hair, gray eyes, was tall an' thin and rather narvus."

On receiving the picture, and with tears streaming from her eyes, she said:

"Oh, Dennis, how you have changed!"

Turtle Off Britain.

A huge turtle was found off the island of Lewis last week. The fishermen had never beheld such a "queer beast," and got it into their boat and brought it across to Mallaig with their cargo of fish. They were considerably astonished when a gentleman staying at the hotel there informed them that the creature was worth more than the whole of the rest of the catch. They sent it off to the Birmingham market along with the other fish, and were delighted beyond words when they shared the resulting check. It is exceedingly rare to find turtles off the coast of Britain.

A Good Fit.

Senator Matthew Stanley Quay drifted into the lobby of the Arlington in Washington in a spick and span new suit of clothes and a Southern member of Congress congratulated him upon his appearance.

"Good fit—eh?" said Quay, much pleased.

"Fit! Sets better'n a hen, Senator!" was the reply.—New York Times

KING OF THE MASTODONS.

Remains of Enormous Animal Found in New York Village.

In the village of Belvidere, west of this city, says a Hornellsville (N. Y.) dispatch to the Chicago Chronicle, have been discovered the bones of a mastodon, from all appearances the king of his race of prenistoric animals. The first bone discovered, which was about four feet in length, was taken to Bradford, and there Dr. James Johnson, formerly connected with the Smithsonian institution, pronounced it to be a portion of a rib of a mastodon. Dr. Johnson notified Alban Stewart of the institution of the find and he came to Belvidere. Together the two scientists took a force of workmen and began making excavations along the railroad.

Thus far three ribs and four vertebrae have been unearthed. This makes a section of the animal's back about eighteen inches in length. The largest mastodon ever unearthed is in the Smithsonian institution, and the vertebrae of his skeleton are five inches in width, the whole animal being twenty-five feet long and thirteen feet in height.

Each of the vertebrae of the animal discovered near Belvidere is six inches in width, thus making the animal when alive the largest known at this time. Compared to other mastodons, he would stand like a Jumbo compared to the ordinary elephant.

Mr. Stewart is authority for the statement that these are by far the largest bones of any animal ever discovered. He asserts that the animal must have lived 25,000 years ago.

STANLEY AS A FIGHTER.

Lord Wolseley Gives High Rank to Famous African Explorer.

A thoroughly good man was Henry M. Stanley, whom I first met in the Ashanti expedition. No noise, no danger ruffled his nerve, and he looked as cool and self-possessed as if he had been at "target practice." Time after time as I turned in his direction I saw him go down to a kneeling position to steady his rifle as he plied the most daring of the enemy with a never-failing aim. It is nearly thirty years ago, and I can still see before me the close-shut lips and determined expression of his manly face which, when he looked in my direction, told plainly I had near me an Englishman in plain clothes whom no danger could appal. Had I felt inclined to run away the cool, firm, unflinching manliness of that face would have given me fresh courage. I had been previously somewhat prejudiced by others against him, but all such feelings were slain and buried at Amoaful.—From Lord Wolseley's Recollections.

Her Sense of Humor.

Drew J. Linard, a civil engineer who had charge of one of the most difficult divisions on the Oroya railroad, recently completed in Peru, is nearly always accompanied by his wife when engaged in his various engineering enterprises. Once while riding mule-back through the mountains in Nicaragua they came to a point from which could be seen both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. Mr. Linard says he gazed at the sight for several minutes, deeply impressed by its magnificence, and then, his wife reaching the spot where he stood, he said to her:

"Bella, what do you think of this view? Here you can see both oceans at the same time!"

She glanced carelessly from one ocean to the other and replied: "Oh, so you can. How funny!"—New York Times.

Precautions to Evade Grip.

"The so-called evidences of grip which usually appear every winter," said a well-known physician, "are more imaginary than real. Although this troublesome disease has never yet reached the dimensions of an epidemic, it shows a marked increase immediately after a fall of snow. This is entirely due to peculiar atmospheric conditions which follow a snowfall, and which affect the bronchial system in such a way as to bring about the unpleasant grip. After an unusually severe snow storm, a number of years ago, I had as many as eighty calls a day, all pure cases of the grip. It is the day after the snowfall that one must take the necessary precautions to evade the disease."

Youngster Was Game.

Bourke Cockran has a pious neighbor with a 15-year-old son who does not promise to be exactly "a chip off the old block," this little incident leading him to that conclusion: Not long ago the father discovered to his sorrow that his boy and several others of the neighborhood had a habit of matching nickels. The wrathful parent led the erring lad to the time-honored attic where hangs a certain strap. The boy didn't have any agreeable impression of what was to come, and, on the ground that it is only the first plunge that counts he called out:

"Say, dad! I'll go you heads or tails for two lickings or none!"—New York Times.

Last Tag for Looking.

Just a vision of golden hair,
And eyes of blue, a lovely pair,
Laughing at you from behind a chair;
"Last tag for looking."

Upon the street I ree her pass
A smiling, charming, little lass,
Who calls up through my window glass;
"Last tag for looking."

A sunshine girl with a sunshine heart
From whom you really hate to part
When once you've heard her say, so smart:
"Last tag for looking."

"The best of friends must part," they say:
Mine eyes are filled with tears to-day
Because my sweet has gone away—
"Last tag for looking."

The Dentist's Side of It

"Now, then, growl!"

I didn't know he thought it. Certainly there was no murmur from his lips, as the dentist turned away from my chair. But, however that may be, the complaint was stayed on mine, and I looked curiously at the man as he stood there where the sunlight shone full upon him, gently brushing a slender, delicate film of steel with a piece of soft chamois skin.

Then he paused and turned toward me. In my eyes he surprised a question. There was something of embarrassment in his, like a man accustomed to certain amenities which he had overstepped for the moment. I put it into the word:

"Well?"

"Yes, I almost said it aloud."

The dentist laughed. I joined him. There was no denying it—he had thought it.

"Try to look at it from my standpoint," he said. "I know it is painful to you, but think of the sacrifices I make."

I said I would try—go ahead. The tooth had ceased asking for further recognition.

"I can't make friends," the dentist resumed, "like the lawyer or the doctor who relieves pain instead of creating it, nor like the merchant who sells you goods you really don t want, or the—but why enumerate? The dentist stands alone."

"But," I interjected, "you charge so—"

"Tut, tut," he said. "The price is reasonable campared with other skilled effort. But I want to tell you my side of it. You look like a good fellow. Sit there and listen."

Flattered—and as the tooth had ceased hurting—I was quite willing. The dentist resumed:

"All day I labor for the good of humanity, without thanks. Do you ever—any of you—think of the sacrifices I am required to make? If I want a cocktail I must refrain; if I like onions with my steak I only dare to look at them; if I enjoy a cigar I cannot take a whiff of it, nor a cigarette—until the day is done."

He began rolling a cigarette with manifest pleasure.

"All day I must attend to the woes of others—eye teeth, wisdom teeth, molars—pains, aches, tears, howls and unkind feelings when it is all past."

He blew thick clouds of smoke from his nose with great satisfaction.

"But it is pretty hard to feel friendly toward you when you cause us pain every time we come to see you," I suggested.

"That's it. You only take a cursory view of the case. Don't I relieve the pain finally? The dentist is looked upon by his patrons as a skilled instrument of torture—a sort of refined affliction come to curse humanity. You look at it yourself, as it appears to me every day, and think how you would like it. I don't have the satisfaction of the barber, who may gag his customer and tell him the neighborhood news, or give him the freedom of speech to which every citizen is entitled and engage him in a political discussion while he operates on him."

"But that wouldn't be fair when you charge by the hour," I could not help interposing.

"Oh, pshaw! That isn't it. The patient's nerves are in no condition to enjoy interesting conversation—and there is another sacrifice we are required to make. No odorous foods, no drinks, no tobacco, and stand on your feet all day for the benefit of humanity, and then humanity gets grievously sore after it is all done. We are only permitted to express our feelings silently, and sometimes we are caught in the act at that."

The dentist drew another dense volume of smoke in for a delicious visit with the air cells, and accepted the sympathy of the thirteenth and last patient of the day.

Man and His Ideal

Does a man ever marry his ideal girl? I can't quite remember the date when my ideal girl first began to stand out distinctly in my mind, but I think it was when I was 25. She was a heroine of a book I had read, or, rather, a girl made up of the virtues and graces of a dozen heroines. She was the most adorable creature that ever was pictured. Her hair was a golden bronze, fine, silky, glossy and long. No hair but this kind ever appealed to me. At first her eyes were gray, but I changed them to a sky-blue because I discovered that that sort is the most innocent and girlish. She was very tiny, just a little armful that I could pick up. Her hands were small, slender and very pink, and her feet were just big enough for baby shoes.

In other ways she was a very wonderful creature. She could be childlike and pleading, tender and womanly, cheerful and industrious, self-reliant and strong, a Joan of Arc, and a baby by turns. I imagined her in times of plenty sitting at my feet like a child wife, in times of hunger turning out a huge beefsteak pudding; in the springtime, scouring the house from top to bottom; a ministering angel in sickness, the fairest of the fair at a dance; timid when I felt strong, brawny when my confidence was low.

That's the sweetheart I chose, and, having thus set her up—a creature of beauty, wit and work—the next thing was to find her and marry her.

I met a girl with golden-bronze hair, but she was tall; so, without considering her further, I tried again. Soon I was introduced to one with just the slight figure and appealing blue eyes of my ideal. Unfortunately her hair was a rusty red, and when I imagined her at my hearth I closed the acquaintance.

Strangely enough, within a week I met a girl who might have been the twin sister of the last, with this difference—she had the exact golden bronze hair of my ideal. I was overjoyed. I loved her as soon as I set eyes on her hair and face, but I hesitated when I saw her hands and feet. They were large—huge! How could I kiss and fondle hands like those? We parted.

Since that I have met many girls who were nearly like my ideal, but not satisfactory. Those who were tender and childish could not cook or mend; those who could cook and mend were big and practical. One of them I nearly became engaged to. She was pretty, slight, all I wished but for one thing, or rather two—her eyes were a pale red. Many times I looked into them, trying to make up my mind if I could accept them in place of blue. If I never looked into them excepting at twilight we might be happy. I thought; but supposing some time in the morning sunshine I took that small face between my hands and looked for two blue eyes, to be met by pale red ones! My love would surely die. I dared not risk it.

Does a man ever find his ideal? And, if he does, is she the sort that would make him happy? I have my doubts. At 29 my bronze-haired, blue-eyed ideal is but a memory; and I'm afraid if I met her now, radiantly perfect, I should not suffer a heart throb.

Another has taken her place. One day a medium-sized girl came along—a girl with brown hair, brown eyes, a cheery, good-fellow laugh, and a heart bursting with affection. She has laughed me into liking her very much. What the next step will be I cannot tell, but I doubt if a man ever marries or wants to marry his ideal girl.—New York American.

Christ and His Work

That Jesus of Nazareth was a carpenter by trade before He began His ministry is generally assumed. Painters and poets have represented Him as working beside Joseph at the carpenter's bench. The assumption rests, however, upon a single sentence in St. Mark's Gospel. In the parallel passage in St. Matthew He is spoken of, not as a carpenter, but as "the carpenter's son." There is no other mention in the Gospels elsewhere in the New Testament.

That Jesus was a woodworker of some kind was a tradition early current, and yet evidently received with some doubt. Justin Martyr, one of the earliest Christians after the apostles whose writings have come down to us, says that Jesus "was deemed a carpenter, for He was in the habit of making plows and yokes." As will be shown later, this probably means only that Jesus had enough knowledge of woodworking to make certain agricultural implements. In fact, the recorded sayings of Jesus according to the careful analysis of them in the current Craftsman tend to show that His regular earthly vocation was quite other than the carpenter's.

Jesus in his sayings shows familiarity with domestic, commercial, professional and agricultural life. The grinding of grain, the making of bread, the mending of clothes, the washing of dishes, are used by Him as illustrations. He knows the ways of the banker and the money lender, of judges, lawyers, policemen, criminals and physicians. He quotes the current prices of articles of trade. He has observed children at play and the professedly devout at prayer. He knows the details of feasts and weddings even to the order of the guests at table and the proper kind of garments. But the references to these things are rather those of an observer from the outside than of an expert from the inside.

Even if He did make plows and yokes, as Justin Martyr says, it would seem to have been as a part of farm work rather than as a carpenter. The a preacher and teacher should have neglected to draw illustrations from his own trade which He had seen His father practice when He was a boy is incredible. The only conclusion seems to be that the passage in St. Mark's Gospel is based on a misunderstanding of the fact stated in St. Matthew's that Joseph had ceased to ply his trade before Jesus was old enough to be interested in it, and that Jesus himself was not a carpenter, but a shepherd and farmer.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

An Awkwar

By Helen For

ENGAGED to be married, Cousin Abigail? Is it really true?"

Little Dorothy Wallace looked up into the sober face of her forty-year-old spinster relative with delighted expectation and maiden curiosity. Miss Abigail Pendasset laughed rather awkwardly.

"Well, I suppose it must be, Dotty, because, you see, here is the diamond ring on the forefinger of my left hand, and there are the dressmaker's hard to work in the little back parlor. If it wasn't for those two things I might think the whole affair moonshine."

"And does he love you, Cousin Abigail, very, very much?"

"He says so."

"Oh!" sighed Dorothy, "it must be so nice to have a real lover all of one's own!"

"Have you one, Dotty?"

Dorothy colored radiantly, and her eyes involuntarily fell.

"I—I don't know, Cousin Abigail."

"Then I'd make it my business to find out if I were you," said Miss Pendasset, rather tartly. "Don't let any of the fellows play fast and loose with you, Dotty. I didn't."

"But, Abigail, you are so different."

"Different? I'm a woman, I suppose, and quite as liable to be made a fool of as any other of my sex. We're all fools, Dotty, to a certain extent. And now mind what I say to you, and don't stand any flirting."

"But you haven't told me his name yet, Cousin Abigail," interposed Dorothy, evidently rather anxious to change the subject. "Is it Squire Peckham?"

"Squire Peckham? No, indeed; what nonsense is the child talking? It is Captain Summerson."

"Captain Summerson!"

"Yes; isn't it a pretty name?" said Miss Abigail, with more of maidenly consciousness than Dorothy had ever before seen her exhibit. "He's as handsome as a picture, too; is in the regular army, and, to say the truth, a few years younger than I am. He'll be here this evening, and you shall be introduced, Dotty. You'll like him—everybody likes him."

Dorothy Wallace sat with downcast eyes, and a round pink spot on each cheek, while Miss Abigail, the frostwork of her reserve now fairly broken through, chatted on and told her all the incidents, past and present, of her engagement to this Adonis of the regular army.

"Now I said to him, the very night he proposed," wound up Miss Abigail, "that I had the prettiest little cousin in the world, whom I should write to at once, to come and be my bridesmaid. So here you are, Dotty, and you must come in and see the pink silk I have selected for your bridesmaid's dress."

"Did you tell him my name?"

"Yes, of course. Why?"

"Oh, it's such a funny, old-fashioned name," laughed Dorothy, rather constrainedly. "Come, let's go and look at the silk!"

Captain Alfred Summerson called as usual that night. He was a tall, handsome, sentimental young fellow, ten good years the junior of his bride-elect, with no end of poetical quotations on his lips, and the most seductive way imaginable of lowering his voice to a whisper when he came near a pretty woman. He was dressed in a suit of dove-color, which was unusually becoming to his dark, rich beauty, and was formally introduced to Miss Pendasset's cousin.

"You needn't color up so, Dotty," said Miss Abigail, laughing; "Alfred won't eat you up."

"Is it necessary for my fair fiancee to go bail for my harmless disposition, Miss Wallace?" sighed the captain, in his most honeyed tones.

Dorothy did not answer. She only stitched on at her work with increased diligence.

The days went by, the wedding day at the old Pendasset manor house drew nearer and nearer. Miss Abigail was, to use her own expression, more forcible than eloquent, "over head and ears" in the manifold preparations for the coming event. Little Dorothy Wallace helped her with zeal enough for half a dozen, and nobody, in the hurry of the occasion, noticed how pale and thin the child was getting.

"Mercy upon us!" said Miss Abigail, with a little sigh, "I shall be glad when it is all over!"

"So shall I!" echoed Dorothy, almost inaudibly.

It was just a week before the day appointed for the wedding, a balmy September twilight, and Captain Summerson, later than usual, arrived on his usual visit.

"Is your mistress at home?" he asked of Hester Brya, the head factotum.

"Miss Abby is to hum," jerked out Hester, who, besides heartily disliking the captain, was too republican a New Englander to recognize any created female as her "mistress."

"Where is she?"

"In the settin' room."

"And Miss Dorothy?"

"She's in the little south room, where the plants is."

"Very well, my good woman, that like onions with my steak I only dare to look at them; if I enjoy a cigar I cannot take a whiff of it, nor a cigarette—until the day is done."

He began rolling a cigarette with manifest pleasure.

"All day I must attend to the woes of others—eye teeth, wisdom teeth, molars—pains, aches, tears, howls and unkind feelings when it is all past."

He blew thick clouds of smoke from his nose with great satisfaction.

"But it is pretty hard to feel friendly toward you when you cause us pain every time we come to see you," I suggested.

"That's it. You only take a cursory view of the case. Don't I relieve the pain finally? The dentist is looked upon by his patrons as a skilled instrument of torture—a sort of refined affliction come to curse humanity. You look at it yourself, as it appears to me every day, and think how you would like it. I don't have the satisfaction of the barber, who may gag his customer and tell him the neighborhood news, or give him the freedom of speech to which every citizen is entitled and engage him in a political discussion while he operates on him."

"But that wouldn't be fair when you charge by the hour," I could not help interposing.

"Oh, pshaw! That isn't it. The patient's nerves are in no condition to enjoy interesting conversation—and there is another sacrifice we are required to make. No odorous foods, no drinks, no tobacco and stand on your feet all day for the benefit of humanity, and then humanity gets grievously sore after it is all done. We are only permitted to express our feelings silently, and sometimes we are caught in the act at that."

The dentist drew another dense volume of smoke in for a delicious visit with the air cells, and accepted the sympathy of the thirteenth and last patient of the day.

His Ideal

Strangely enough, within a week I met a girl who might have been the twin sister of the last, with this difference—she had the exact golden bronze hair of my ideal. I was overjoyed. I loved her as soon as I set eyes on her hair and face, but I hesitated when I saw her hands and feet. They were large—huge! How could I kiss and fondle hands like those? We parted.

Since that I have met many girls who were nearly like my ideal, but not satisfactory. Those who were tender and childish could not cook or mend; those who could cook and mend were big and practical. One of them I nearly became engaged to. She was pretty, slight, all I wished but for one thing, or rather two—her eyes were a pale red. Many times I looked into them, trying to make up my mind if I could accept them in place of blue. If I never looked into them excepting at twilight we might be happy, I thought; but supposing some time in the morning sunshine I took that small face between my hands and looked for two blue eyes, to be met by pale red ones! My love would surely die. I dared not risk it.

Does a man ever find his ideal? And, if he does, is she the sort that would make him happy? I have my doubts. At 29 my bronze-haired, blue-eyed ideal is but a memory; and I'm afraid if I met her now, radiantly perfect, I should not suffer a heart throb.

Another has taken her place. One day a medium-sized girl came along—a girl with brown hair, brown eyes, a cheery, good-fellow laugh, and a heart bursting with affection. She has laughed me into liking her very much. What the next step will be I cannot tell, but I doubt if a man ever marries, or wants to marry his ideal girl.—New York American.

ing of grain, the making of bread, the mending of clothes, the washing of dishes, are used by Him as illustrations. He knows the ways of the banker and the money lender, of judges, lawyers, policemen, criminals and physicians. He quotes the current prices of articles of trade. He has observed children at play and the professedly devout at prayer. He knows the details of feasts and weddings even to the order of the guests at table and the proper kind of garments. But the references to these things are rather those of an observer from the outside than of an expert from the inside.

Even if He did make plows and yokes, as Justin Martyr says, it would seem to have been as a part of farm work rather than as a carpenter. That a preacher and teacher should have neglected to draw illustrations from his own trade which He had seen His father practice when He was a boy is incredible. The only conclusion seems to be that the passage in St. Mark's Gospel is based on a misunderstanding of the fact stated in St. Matthew's that Joseph had ceased to ply his trade before Jesus was old enough to be interested in it, and that Jesus himself was not a carpenter, but a shepherd and farmer.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

TWO NURSES.

In the soul's chamber, reft and bare,
When the soul may not weep,
Comes tossing in the nurse, Despair,
And drugs it off to sleep.

But in some watch, ere night be dead,
Another takes her place;
At dawn, above the soul's dim bed,
Hope bends her beaming face.

An Awkward Mistake

By Helen Forrest Graves.

ENGAGED to be married, Cousin Abigail? Is it really true?"

Little Dorothy Wallace looked up into the sober face of her forty-year-old spinster relative with delighted expectation and maiden curiosity. Miss Abigail Pendasset laughed rather awkwardly.

"Well, I suppose it must be, Dotty, because, you see, here is the diamond ring on the forefinger of my left hand, and there are the dressmakers hard to work in the little back parlor. If it wasn't for those two things I might think the whole affair moonshine."

"And does he love you, Cousin Abigail, very, very much?"

"He says so?"

"Oh!" sighed Dorothy, "it must be so nice to have a real lover all of one's own!"

"Have you one, Dotty?"

Dorothy colored radiantly, and her eyes involuntarily fell.

"I—I don't know, Cousin Abigail."

"Then I'd make it my business to find out if I were you," said Miss Pendasset, rather tartly. "Don't let any of the fellows play fast and loose with you, Dotty. I didn't."

"But, Abigail, you are so different."

"Different? I'm a woman, I suppose, and quite as liable to be made a fool of as any other of my sex. We're all fools, Dotty, to a certain extent. And now mind what I say to you, and don't stand any flirting."

"But you haven't told me his name yet, Cousin Abigail," interposed Dorothy, evidently rather anxious to change the subject. "Is it Squire Peckham?"

"Squire Peckham? No, indeed; what nonsense is the child talking? It is Captain Summerson."

"Captain Summerson!"

"Yes; isn't it a pretty name?" said Miss Abigail, with more of maidenly consciousness than Dorothy had ever before seen her exhibit. "He's as handsome as a picture, too; is in the regular army, and, to say the truth, a few years younger than I am. He'll be here this evening, and you shall be introduced, Dotty. You'll like him—everybody likes him."

Dorothy Wallace sat with downcast eyes, and a round pink spot on each cheek, while Miss Abigail, the frost-work of her reserve now fairly broken through, chatted on and told her all the incidents, past and present, of her engagement to this Adonis of the regular army.

"Now I said to him, the very night he proposed," wound up Miss Abigail, "that I had the prettiest little cousin in the world, whom I should write to at once, to come and be my bridesmaid. So here you are, Dotty, and you must come in and see the pink silk I have selected for your bridesmaid's dress."

"Did you tell him my name?"

"Yes, of course. Why?"

"Oh, it's such a funny, old-fashioned name," laughed Dorothy, rather constrainedly. "Come, let's go and look at the silk!"

Captain Alfred Summerson called as usual that night. He was a tall, handsome, sentimental young fellow, ten good years the junior of his bride-elect, with no end of poetical quotations on his lips, and the most seductive way imaginable of lowering his voice to a whisper when he came near a pretty woman. He was dressed in a suit of dove-color, which was unusually becoming to his dark, rich beauty, and was formally introduced to Miss Pendasset's cousin.

"You needn't color up so, Dotty!" said Miss Abigail, laughing; "Alfred won't eat you up!"

"Is it necessary for my fair fiancee to go bail for my harmless disposition, Miss Wallace?" sighed the captain, in his most honeyed tones.

Dorothy did not answer. She only stitched on at her work with increased diligence.

The days went by, the wedding day at the old Pendasset manor house drew nearer and nearer. Miss Abigail was, to use her own expression, more forcible than eloquent, "over head and ears" in the manifold preparations for the coming event. Little Dorothy Wallace helped her with zeal enough for half a dozen, and nobody, in the hurry of the occasion, noticed how pale and thin the child was getting.

"Mercy upon us!" said Miss Abigail, with a little sigh, "I shall be glad when it is all over!"

"So shall I!" echoed Dorothy, almost inaudibly.

It was just a week before the day appointed for the wedding, a balmy September twilight, and Captain Summerson, later than usual, arrived on his usual visit.

"Is your mistress at home?" he asked of Hester Brya, the head factotum.

"Miss Abby is to hum," jerked out Hester, who, besides heartily disliking the captain, was too republican a New Englander to recognize any created female as her "mistress."

"Where is she?"

"In the settin' room."

"And Miss Dorothy?"

"She's in the little south room, where the plants is."

"Very well, my good woman, that will do; you needn't bring lights at present," said the captain, gayly tiptoeing off, down the broad, matted passage.

"Good woman, indeed," muttered Hester, turning her head; "I ain't his good woman, and I'm thankful to Providence there ain't no chance of my ever being. I do b'lieve Miss Abigail left her common sense behind her when she promised to marry him. But there's no fool like an old fool," and Hester descended into the kitchen, treading somewhat of her resentment under her quick, emphatic footsteps as she came.

And the captain, instead of proceeding at once, as a liege lord should have done to the sitting room where he had been told that his intended bride awaited him, turned down another corridor that led to a pretty little south room, its glazed walls checkered with the indistinct shades of foliage from the vines outside.

Starlight and twilight together disclosed only a solitary figure sitting there. The captain stole toward it.

"Dotty, my darling."

A slight start, that was all the answer he received.

"Dotty, love, why are you so silent?" He half knelt beside her, taking possession of the hand that hung listlessly by her side. "Now, I know you are angry with me, but is it my fault? You should pity me rather, for being tied for life to a cankered old maid, with nothing to sweeten the bitter dose but the money bags she represents. What else can I do? You do not know—you never can know—how wretchedly I am fettered by those confounded debts which must be paid. I am a drowning man, and Abigail Pendasset is the straw that I cling to. I know, as well as you do, that she is old, ugly and unattractive, but she is my fate. I cannot avoid her. Dear Dotty, you have refused to allow me one single chance to speak to you since we have met, but I have not forgotten the delightful days at Long Branch, and never shall. I love you now as dearly as I did then. I shall always love you, and you only, Dotty. There is no reason why you shouldn't spend half your time at Pendasset House Manor, Dotty, if you play your cards well. We may be very happy yet, and—hush, who the dedce is that?"

The sound of approaching footsteps broke in upon the tete-a-tete—and the next moment Captain Summerson found himself alone.

His visit that evening was unusually pleasant. Miss Abigail was in the highest spirits, and even Dorothy Wallace was a trifle more sprightly than her ordinary mood. Captain Summerson stayed late—and, after he was gone, Abigail went into her cousin's room.

"Dotty," says she, "I've found out a thing or two!"

Dorothy looked up.

"What are they, Abigail?"

"One's that you used to know Captain Summerson at Long Branch."

"It is quite true," said Dorothy, calmly.

"Why didn't you tell me before?"

"What was the use? He chose to meet me as a stranger—why should I rake up the past?"

"Yet you cared for him once?"

"Once—but not now."

"Are you quite sure?"

"Yes, quite."

"I am glad of that, Dotty Wallace," said Miss Abigail, in a voice that trembled slightly, as she reached out to clasp the other's hand in hers. "Yes, I'm heartily glad—because, if you have trampled the thing called love under your feet, I can do the same, and I will."

"Abigail, what do you mean?"

The bride-elect laughed hoarsely.

"Only that the captain made a little mistake to-night. I was sitting by myself in the south room, and he mistook our identity—he thought he was talking to you. A 'cankered old maid'—that was the polite epithet he applied to the woman he has pledged himself to marry within the week; and he went on to vow that he always had loved you, and always should, although he couldn't make you his wife!"

And Miss Abigail proceeded to unbosom herself of the whole story, Dorothy listening, pale, quiet and silent.

"And what shall you do, Cousin Abigail?" she asked, when finally the spinster came to a full stop.

"Do? What did you do when you discovered that the man was a villain? Cast him off, to be sure."

"And break your heart?"

"My heart isn't made of such brittle materials, fortunately," said Miss Abigail, with a grim smile. "We will both see him to-morrow, Dotty, and we'll send him about his business with as little delay as possible."

When Captain Alfred Summerson called the next day, he was ushered into the presence of Miss Pendasset and her cousin, sitting together in the south room.

"Well, captain," said his promised bride, composedly, "which is it?"

"Which is what?" demanded the somewhat puzzled son of Mars.

"The one you made love to in here last night? Ah, you don't quite comprehend. You thought it was Dorothy Wallace, but it was I. Beware of love in the twilight, captain; it makes an awkward tangle, sometimes. In this case it has opened my eyes to the fact that you are a villain. Dorothy, I believe, knew it long before, and neither of us cares to have the pleasure of your acquaintance any longer. Good morning, captain."

"Good morning, captain," sweetly echoed Dorothy, with a malicious sparkle in her eyes.

"But, ladies," began the bewildered young man.

Miss Pendasset rang the bell violently.

"Hester, show the captain to the door. If he should ever call again, you needn't admit him.

And thus sneaked the valiant Captain Alfred Summerson out of the substantial old manor house, which he had hoped so soon to call his own. Nor was honest Hester's chuckle, as she bolted the door behind him, the least of all his mortifications.

"I guess, my dear," shrewdly observed Miss Pendasset, "it will be some time before he makes love again to two at a time."—New York Weekly.

HIGH COLLARS CAUSE HEADACHE

Moreover, They Are Bad For One's Nerves, This Man Says.

"You may not know it, old fellow, but there is a very intimate connection between the high collar and the headache," said an observant man, "and I have proved my faith in the statement by refusing to wear collars of the high sort. It is a bad business, my boy. High collars choke up the veins and arteries and interfere to some extent with the circulation of the blood in the neck and head. Do not understand me to be knocking any particular brand of high collars. So far as the appearance of the high collar is concerned, I confess that I like it.

"In my own case it has been a great blessing in at least one way, for fellows with long necks, you know, do not look so well when you harness them up in low collars. My neck is long, long as a crane's, and the high collar has kept me from leaving too much of it exposed. Why, I've go so much neck that when I first began to wear low collars I was almost ashamed to venture out into the street. I felt like I was but half dressed, and the feeling was not so far wrong at that, for the low collar does leave a good part of my anatomy open and above board, as it were. But this fact does not bother me now. I simply don't care at all. Exposed neck is a whole lot better than headaches, and you know, old chappy, I was speaking of headaches just now. That's what I wanted to tell you about. The high collar does something more than interfere with one's circulation. It scratches and irritates the skin, keeps one chin at an unreasonable, uncomfortable and unnatural angle, and causes one to acquire a nervous frigidity sort of habit.

"When you meet your friend who is in the habit of wearing a high collar pay particular attention to the way he moves and holds his head. It isn't at all natural. It is all due to the high collar. Mark you, there are high collars, and high collars. Some of them approach rationalism in neck dress. Others are about as far from it as it is possible to get without engulfing the whole head. But, of course, every fellow to his own liking in these matters. I wear low collars because they are comfortable, and because I believe the high collar is a producer of headaches and a bad thing for one's nerves generally."—Dallas News.

A Nervy Hold-Up.

Alexander Erickson was the bravest man I ever saw. He was a small man. He arrested criminals and desperadoes without even a pocket knife in his hand. The consciousnes of some one hurting him was entirely foreign to his nature. As an officer he carried a pistol, not as an intimidator, but as an "executioner."

Within my time in Texas (and I am not an old man, either) two stage coaches containing about twenty-three passengers were stopped and all the valuables of the passengers taken by one man. The robber made them all stand in a row and "hand over." The route was only traveled by one coach, but on account of the large number of passengers an additional coach was put on that day. The robber stopped the first coach and made the passengers get out. When the passengers in the first coach were lined up the second coach made its appearance. He made them get out and then told them he didn't expect two coaches. That was nerve. A Jew insisted on retaining enough of his money to get his dinner. The robber took all and then gave him back fifty cents, and the Jew got into an argument with him as to the amount being sufficient to get a meal. That was cheek. The robber went off with all the money of the twenty-three passengers, and yet there were many brave men in that caravan, but discretion was the better part of valor. A shot from one of the twenty-three would have caused the robber to shoot, and several would have been killed. That's the way they looked at it. A Thompson, Erickson or Woodlief would not have hesitated. Discretion was the last thing any of them would have thought of. It never would have occurred to them that somebody was going to be hurt.—Correspondence in Forest and Stream.

The Advantages of Absence.

Children who are inattentive, disobedient and altogether disagreeable with their mother will almost change their character when their father comes in from his business, not necessarily that they love him better than they do their mother, but because he is fresh and new and interesting; a delightful person because he is a novelty.

A very rich woman said once that she visited her children in the nursery once a day. Whatever the pressure of her engagements, the hours from 5 to 7 were kept sacred to the children. To her children she is, and always will be, a sort of goddess, a wonderful being, who never scolds nor spanks, but reads to them and plays and talks with them, then flits away, to return for the same dear programme to-morrow, and to-morrow, and all the days. She is an advent to them, a constant joy.

When two people with personalities of their own spend all the time together, is it any wonder if each loses something of the delight that ought to come from the companionship? It is better for some women to try systematically to escape from their children once in a while, both for the children's sake and the mother's. Children are pleased to see the mother when they meet after a parting, and all enjoy each other's society much better for the parting.

Does all this sound heretical? Well, it is worth while to observe when one has the opportunity, and see if "judgment in absence" is not an excellent thing.—Chicago Journal.

Fortune in Unanswered Letter.

The recent death of Lord Rawton, Disraeli's secretary and the executor of his estate, brought to light the following explanation of how Mrs. Brydges Willyams came to leave her fortune to Lord Beaconsfield: "Dizzy received one morning a letter from Mrs. Willyams—whom he did not know—in which she said that she had read his novels with much interest, and would like to make his acquaintance. She also asked a question which rendered it necessary for him to answer the letter. Unfortunately, the letter was left in his greatcoat pocket, and Dizzy did not wear the coat until several months after, when he happened to be in the south of England, and in the very town in which Mrs. Willyams lived. Coming across the letter in such circumstances it occurred to him to call upon her, and Mrs. Willyams was so flattered at, as she thought, his carrying the letter so long about him, and then calling, that she decided on leaving him her fortune! That shows how wise it is not to answer letters," added Lord Rawton.

The Dalrymple Curse.

In reference to the supposed curse pronounced on the descendants of the first Earl of Stair, unhappily notorious for his connection with the massacre of Glencoe, a Scottish correspondent informs us that the actual words of the original curse are still extant, in the words (and terrifying words they are) of a Gaelic poem written by Jean Macdonald, the sole survivor of a large family that perished in the massacre. The last three lines run thus: "May fear and terror haunt their pillows! May their wives ever prove barren. And my thousand curses attend them!" A startling comment on this malediction is that the second, third, fourth, sixth, seventh and eighth Earls of Stair all died without issue—a circumstance probably unique in the annals of the peerage. The family of the first (the Glencoe) earl became entirely extinct in 1840, and the succession passed to the desendants of his next brother, Sir James Dalrymple, from whom came down, of course, the much respected peer just deceased.—London Daily Chronicle.

FOR WOMAN'S BENEFIT

Why Capability Wins.

The best way to meet a false assertion is to grant all of it you can in fairness and then mercilessly demolish its vital part.

It may be admitted that, if higher education meant more scholarship, if happiness meant mere contentment, and if marriage meant mere housework and child-bearing, then the higher education of women would not tend to happiness in marriage.

Perhaps this is what the objectors have in mind—in which case they themselves need a little higher education on all those subjects.

Every progressive faculty of a college or university to-day knows that education means full development of all the faculties, and that girls need that even more than boys—because they are to be mothers, says Charlotte Perkins Gilman in Success.

An increase in all directions—larger power, knowledge, skill and experience—these tend to make a wiser and more capable woman, and a wise, capable woman will be happier in marriage than an ignorant, weak one; unless—and perhaps this is what they mean—unless it is assumed that men average poorly, that they are low, coarse, vicious things, and that an improved variety of woman would be miserable where those of the old kind were happy in their ignorance. This is untrue at both ends, and ignorance is not necessarily bliss. A mud turtle may be happier than a skylark, but he does not look so.—Mirror and Farmer.

Tests of Real Character.

To know how to expect little and enjoy much is the secret of success.

Great calamities are not the most severe tests of fortitude. In times of heavy affliction the knowledge that our acquaintances are watching how we acquit ourselves has a wonderfully bracing effect.

Cheerfulness under blue skies and sunshine may be only a reflection of the cheeriness of the suroundings. It is the gray day and the hard road that test the real courage and sunniness of the heart, says The Gentlewoman.

It is while you are patiently toiling at the little tasks of life that the meaning and shape of the great whole of life dawn upon you. It is while you are resisting little temptations that you are growing stronger.

We are none of us perfect in this world, but a good many of us look complacently at ourselves in the glass sometimes and cheerfully think that we are pretty near it.

Our birthdays, after we grow wise enough to understand their significance—what are they but warnings that sound at intervals from off the rockbound coast of time?—Mirror and Farmer.

A Hair Dressing Match.

Twenty young women, mostly nice looking, and all with handsome hair hanging down their backs, sat in a row on arm chairs in a large hall the other night. A crowd of onlookers, including deputies and representatives of the Ministry of Commerce, gathered, but allowed sufficient elbow room to twenty men armed with brushes and combs who stood at attention, and then at a signal all set to work at once to do the ladies' hair. When a quarter of an hour had elapsed another signal was given, and the competitors all ceased their operations, some of the coiffures being left unfinished, with stray locks hanging down. The jury of the Syndical Chamber of Coiffeurs, of Paris, which had arranged the contest, then examined the heads of hair and awarded about a dozen prizes, including a prix d'honneur given by the Minister of Commerce. A ball followed, and the ladies who had kindly lent their locks for the contest did not lack partners, each, of course, dancing the first waltz with the competitor who had dressed her hair.—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

Brittle Finger Nails.

It is almost impossible to keep brittle finger nails in a shapely condition. Close cutting does not improve matters, and it detracts greatly from the appearance of the finger tips. Begin at the root of the evil and feed the nails. Before retiring rub the nails freely with sweet oil or vaseline and wear loose kid gloves to protect the clothing and bedding. The gloves should be perforated at the palms and the middle of the fingers to admit a free circulation of air. Wear gloves whenever possible while sweeping and dusting, or doing other rather course work, for the texture of the skin is thus preserved and damage to the nails prevented. After washing dishes wash the hands in clear warm water, rinse in cold water, anoint the nails with a little vaseline and wipe away all surplus. Keep up the treatment of the nails daily for a month, and you will see a marked improvement.—New Haven Register.

Charming Women at the Bar.

In the case of woman and the bar, the Law Journal does its best to look at the matter from the point of view of public interest. How would the woman barrister affect the administration of justice? It would be a hindrance. "When we consider with what zeal and emulation, with which the legal proceedings are conducted in our courts, how keen and close and personal is the struggle of advocacy which they involve, a change in the direction of the lady barrister is greatly to be deprecated. Introduce charming woman on the scene, and what man with the ordinary instincts of chivalry but must lower his lance before such an adversary, must feel himself at a disadvantage, disarmed, shorn of half his fighting strength? And with this feeling the efficiency of our present system, with its free and equal terms of combat, its frank exchange of friendly buffets, must needs suffer."

To Develop Your Neck.

Every girl wants a pretty neck. So here are some exercises she may try to develop herself with if she is one of the unfortunate thin girls.

Stand erect, with the arms at the sides, then lift them up vertically, drawing in a deep breath. With the arms in this position raise upon tiptoes, throw the head back, touching at the same time the hands at the back of the head, and let out the breath as the arms come slowly down.

A second is to raise the arms above the head in front of the body, with the hands relaxed and the backs of the wrists upward, bring them back and downwards to the sides, then up above the head again. These movements must be done slowly and harmoniously, not in a quick or jerky way.—New York Evening Journal.

To Look Slight.

Nothing is prettier and more becoming to a fair, slight woman with a pretty complexion than white, but white must be carefully avoided by her sister of too ample charms.

Black is the color for the stout woman, especially if she be of the black-eyed and black-haired type. A black gown will make her look slighter than anything else, while pale blue, light gray and nearly every shade of red will make her "too, too solid flesh" most undesirably self-assertive.

A subdued shade of blue, heliotrope and olive green, with black, may all be advantageously worn by the stout woman, who will also find mauve and the higher shades of green, used in decoration about the throat and shoulders, very helpful in diminishing the effect of her size.—Home Notes.

Tender Feet.

Tender feet are very painful and require special attention daily. A treatment given each night will work wonders. Bathe the feet in warm water to which a heaping teaspoonful of borax has been added, wipe quite dry and scrape all callous spots with pumice stone, then dip them in cold water to prevent taking cold.

To harden feet a salt bath is invaluable. After it sponge the feet and ankles with alcohol.

To reduce swollen feet use only moderately warm water and an astringent made by two ounces each of rock salt and powdered alum, mixing and putting two teaspoonfuls to four quarts of water.

New Bridal Veils.

Every bride likes to have something new and original in her costume for that occasion of occasions. Here is a pretty idea that will be something new, and yet true to the old custom of the veil.

You can have any material that you choose that is soft and filmy. Then have wreaths of garlands painted in the most delicate shades and flowers. The conventional orange blossoms are, of course, the most appropriate, but the pale tinted wreaths are charming and relieve the all white of the regulation bride attire.

Velvet For Housewear.

Odd shades of velvet, made up in picturesque style with deep-pointed lace cuffs, lace collar, deep-jeweled girdle, on long, flowing and graceful lines, are much favored for house wear.

Bud and Blossom Effects.

Silk crochet "dingle dangles" are in such favor that bud and blossom effects in chiffon carry out the same idea in trimmings for evening dress.

Allover Lace Gowns.

Allover lace gowns in alencon, guipure, Irish and Renaissance laces are worn as much as ever. They are made over soft taffetas veiled in chiffon.

Velveteen of Fine Quality.

Never were velveteens used with better effect nor of finer quality.

FASHIONS OF THE DAY

Buckles of fur on hats.

The Japanese netsukis lose none of their vogue.

The most elegant gowns are really the simplest.

Fish-scale bow knots make handsome hair ornaments.

Millinery roses this winter are little bits of things in velvet.

Muffs are very, very big, but fortunately lighter than they look.

Two or three kinds of rare lace are combined in the best shoulder collars.

Strappings of stitched and cut cloth are among the most accepted trimmings.

Green velvet leaves are used extensively for the decoration of evening gowns.

Tips of jet or metal finish the ends of the ostrich quill, which is supposed to show on the hat.

A revival in the way of dress accessories are the many new ruchings for the neck and sleeves.

There is no limit to the hand bags, chatelaines and purses, and nearly all are quite expensive.

Small fans are generally covered with tiny spangles, which flash like brilliants when in motion.

One of the button fads is to stud collar and belt with buttons resembling gold or steel nail heads.

THE UNION.

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama.

Wallace C. Edler, Ed. and Pub

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.

For advertising rates, call at the office, Sixth street, opposite court house.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

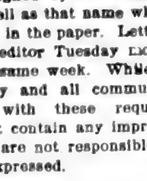
The Yellow Jacket, published biweekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



ABOUT VOTING.

Many persons propound the following questions as to who are entitled to vote in the coming primary:

First—Can a person who registered under the constitutional plan in one county and who has since moved to another and been a citizen thereof for more than twelve months vote in the coming primary?

Second—Can one who has been absent from the state and has never registered, but has paid all poll tax, vote in the primary?

To the first question we answer that any person who has regularly registered in any county in this state can secure a statement to that effect from the probate judge of the county in which he registered and on that be entered on registration rolls of the county to which he may remove, of course, if subject to poll tax that must be paid, no matter where residence may be.

To the second we answer that no person can vote without having been registered in the county in which he claims residence.—Montgomery Advertiser.

An Iowa man has gone insane because he could not sell an ear for $5000. Why didn't he raise Iowa corn, then he could sell all the ears he wanted?

Every man, woman and child in the United States took, on an average, sixty-three rides on the street cars last year, according to a recent report of the census bureau. That was thirty-one rides more than they had taken in 1899.

The people of New York spent over $4,000,000 in the last season to see whether one horse could run faster than another, and the state was enriched by more than $300,000 paid in taxes on the receipts of the tracks. All of which would be accepted by the Turks and the Chinese as conclusive evidence of the Caucasion's insanity.

Writing on the subject of duck-hunting, Mr. Cleveland observes: "If it be said that the gratification of bringing down ducks pays for all the suffering of their pursuit, the question obtrudes itself: How is this compensation forth-coming in the stress of bad luck or no luck, and how is it that the duck-hunting propensity survives all conditions and fortunes"

SHELBY COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

The republicans of Shelby county met in mass convention at Columbiana on February 6, 1904. The body was called to order by J H. Page. T. R. Lovett was elected chairman and A. P. R. Dahl secretary of the convention. The convention by a unanimous vote elected delegates and alternates to the state and district conventions. The following resolutions were presented to the convention by A. P. R. Dahl and adopted by a unanimous vote, viz.:

"Whereas, An effort is being made to disrupt and destroy the republican state organization of Alabama, and

"Whereas, It is necessary for all loyal republicans to act and sustain the action of the state convention of September, 1902, we, the republicans of Shelby county in convention assembled,

"Resolve, 1. That the delegates and alternates elected by this convention shall attend the regular district convention which has been called by Chairman J. W. Kitchens to meet at Talladega on February 23, 1904.

"2. That the delegates and alternates elected by this convention shall attend the regular state convention which has been called by State Chairman W. I. Wellman to meet in Birmingham on May 10, 1904.

"3. That the delegates elected by this convention to the state and district conventions are hereby instructed to cast their votes as a unit on all questions coming before said conventions."

The convention then adjourned.

Secretary.

MARS HILL MURMURINGS.

Plenty of rain, farm work progressing slowly.

Our Sunday school still shows increasing interest.

Rev. W. A. Wood filled his regular appointment here Saturday and Sunday. A well filled house on Sunday, though the weather was bad.

Mr. A. Gentry, of Jemison school, paid a flying visit to his home Sunday.

Our literary school by Professor J. H. Anderson is still moving along nicely with good attendance, and he is doing us some good work.

By the way, politics are getting a little warmer up here. Looking at the democratic candidates that have announced themselves, some of them in office now by populist votes. These backsliders do not dismay us. We will press forward with renewed vigor in the coming campaign, for we have men left who will not go back on us after getting into office and getting a taste of the good things which office brings—men that are true, men that will not turn their backs to the enemy, or desert to his ranks; men who don't talk populist principles for the sake of office; men who, seeing and knowing the right, will do battle for it; men who have stood by our principles and are not afraid or ashamed to advocate them in the face of democratic fraud and misrule; men who have not forgot the past action of the democracy, and who know that it is the aim of that democracy to break down every movement the common people start to get control of their own affairs in this county and state. For these reasons, friends of our common interest, we must stand shoulder to shoulder in this campaign, and by our united front show our enemies that we are neither dead nor asleep. By the grace of the living God when the trumpet sounds both populists and republicans and democrats that believe in good honest government will rally together and vote for men who have not yet declared themselves as candidates for office. Men who will guard the interests of our county with FIRM HANDS and HONEST HEARTS, and will not be led astray by our common enemy. Wishing success to the UNION and its many readers, I am yours for united action,

"UNCLE SI."

The petrified man that was dug up in the neighborhood of Asheville, N. C., and sold to a company for $3500, now turns out to be a neat bit of modeling in Portland cement; but still it is not thought that this unfortunate affair will seriously depress the gold brick market.

Examination of the French archives shows that Great Britain could have had Louisiana territory from Louis XV. if she had wanted it, but it will probably never be known whether it was shrewd foresight or mere good luck that saved her the additional trouble and expense of letting go of it when we should conclude it was necessary to us in our governmental business.

COLLEGE BITS.

The third annual Bowdoin-Amherst debate will take place at Bowdoin March 18.

Andrew Carnegie has given $15,000 toward a library at Talladega College, in Alabama.

The debate between Bates and Trinity colleges will occur at Hartford, Conn., some time in March.

An urgent call for $1,000,000 for Tufts College is made by President Elmer H. Capen in his annual report.

The announcement has been made that $125,000 has been pledged for an Endowment Fund at the University of Vermont.

Conference representing Presbyterian synods in several Southern States decide to recommend establishment of a university at Atlanta, Ga.

Harvard University's annual financial statement shows that on July 31 the university had invested funds to the amount of $15,863,521.70.

Professor George Lyman Kittridge, of the Department of English at Harvard, has been chosen president of the Modern Language Association.

A hundred boxes of new marine fossils have been received at Yale University recently. They came from Canada, the Northwestern States and Kansas.

The University of Georgia summer school will be run again the coming summer. That was decided at a meeting of the officers and directors of the organization recently.

The cane custom at Williams College, which has been a feature of undergraduate life for many years, will probably be abolished, the faculty having decided to prohibit any opposition to the canes being brought within the town limits.

When you see a young man flaunting his quickly gained wealth in your face, just ask yourself, "How much did he lose in getting it," asks Success. "How much of himself has he parted with in exchange for the money? Does it pay to sell one's manhood and character in order to get rich a little faster? Isn't it safer to take the slower and approved method? Doesn't a youth lose, unless his life is square and clean, no matter what money he gets?"

The apple is the most democratic of all fruits. The pomegranate is priestly: the grape is royal; the orange is luxurious; the peach and pear are plutocratic, but the apple belongs to the populace. It is symbolic of the country store and the corner grocery. It breathes the free spirit of the American township and village, says the Albany Journal. It has a flavor of old New England, and yet a pungency as of the south and middle west. It is mild, palatable, nourishing and promotive of good-fellowship and long life.

REPUBLICANS OF CHILTON COUNTY.

In obedience to a resolution passed by the Republican Executive Committee of Chilton County at its meeting on January 11th 1904. I hereby call a mass convention of the Republican Electors of Chilton County to meet at Clanton, Ala. on Saturday February 13th 1904. for the purpose of electing delegates to the Republican State and District Conventions, and to transact such other business as may be properly brought before it.

PEARLS OF THOUGHT.

Unless above himself he can erect himself, how poor a thing is man.—Daniel.

Love is a beggar, who, still begs when one has given him everything.—Rochepedre.

Judge thyself with the judgment of sincerity, and thou wilt judge others with the judgment of charity.

I have always observed the thread of life to be like other threads or skeins of silk, full of snarls and encumbrances.—George Herbert.

Little do ye know your own blessedness, for to travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive and the true success is to labor.—Stevenson.

To tell a man to study, and yet bid him under heavy penalties to come to the same conclusion with those who have not studied, is to mock him.—Andrew D. White.

We are often poor, mean, low; but there is in the soul an ideal of, something better than we. In the midst of our folly and fault there stands before us the pure image of serene goodness, and we cannot but reverence it. This also is God.

Man is unjust, but God is just, and finally justice triumphs.—Longfellow.

You need God in the very things that seem to separate you from Him. You must seek Him in the very places where the misery of life seems to be that He is not. You must question the stoniest paths for streams of water.—Phillips Brooks.

DEATH IN THE BOAT.

Novel Exposure of Unscrupulous Manufacturers in London.

There is one exhibit at the shoe and leather fair in the Agricultural hall in London, England, from which dishonest boot makers will not derive either instruction or edification. It is intended to show the general public how they are sometimes deceived into buying what in construction are more like cardboard boxes than seemingly smart looking footwear.

Upon a stall in the balcony there has been gathered a collection of boots which on being dissected and robbed of their deceitful veneer were found to consist of anything but leather. They have soles of cardboard, leatherboard, strawboard, shavings mixed with oil, strips of wood, and brown paper. One maker of exceptional economy had used the lids of old boot boxes. Even they were the worse for wear.

"Many children owe their deaths to cardboard boots, which soak up rain like sponges," asserted the official in charge. The trade—or rather the honest section of it—is making an effort to secure a standard hall mark, the wrongful use of which would lead to criminal proceedings.

The fair illustrates a branch of the industry wherein English manufacturers set an example not yet followed by their American brethren. This is the repairing of boots by machinery. One machine in charge of a boy is capable of putting new soles and heels on a pair of boots in five minutes. American boot makers, it was stated, do not encourage their customers to have their old boots renovated; they prefer them to buy new ones.—London Mail.

Chinaman Called Back.

Because his old mother back in Canton, China, wrote that she was growing lonesome because, she said, she wanted surely to see her boy once more before she died, Ah Gun, part owner in a restaurant at Waco, has begun to wade through the formalities required by the United States government of a Chinese laborer who desires to return to his native land and then back to this country. Ah Gun is now in El Paso on probation.

Ah Gun first came to Dallas to get an expert notary in the business to make out a number of papers for his case, bringing with him affidavits that he was unmarried, aged 36, and that he owned property in the sum of more than $1000. He has had his picture taken, and small unmounted photos of him will go along with the several sets of papers. Having got his load of certificates and affidavits all ready, Ah Gun set out for El Paso. His credentials were examined by the Chinese agent there. If they are all correct, the homeward bound Chinaman will be passed on to San Francisco, there to undergo more examination, after which he will be allowed to ship for "dear old Canton, one biggest plovinces in whole world," he said.—Dallas (Tex.) News.

Bird Tries to Feed Its Shadow.

A gentleman whose home is in a grove on the North Side relates a remarkable incident which has come under his observation within the last few weeks. A Kentucky cardinal is interfering with his comfort to such an extent that he threatened to shoot it. Every morning shortly after daylight, for a period of a month, the gentleman has been awakened by a tapping and fluttering at his window, which continues for half an hour or longer. After several repetitions of the disturbance he cautiously opened the shutters and investigated. He found the redbird waging a fight with his reflection in the window pane. He frightened it away, and hoped that this would break up the practice. However, the next morning the visit was repeated, and despite his efforts to discourage the visitor, every morning since it has broken his rest about 5.30 o'clock. Yesterday morning he was roused by the usual fluttering and securing a window stick, he started to enter the fight between Mr. Redbird and his reflection. Peeping out, his heart was softened. The bird had a piece of bread in his mouth, and was trying to feed its shadow.—Lexington (Ky.) Herald.

A DOG FIGHT.

In Justice E. B. Deason's court on Saturday there occurred quite a legal battle over a pointer dog. Dr. V. O. Campbell, represented by Lawyer Curry, on one side, and J. M. Robinson, of beat 1, with Lawyers Smith and Middleton, on the other. About forty witnesses were summoned in the case, of which some thirty were examined. The dog was awarded to Dr. Campbell, but it is said the case will be appealed.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The regular February session of the board of county commissioners was held on Monday and Tuesday. Commissioners Conway, Glasscock, Riggins and Green were present with Judge Adams in the chair. The ordinary business was passed upon, a few cases of outside support were allowed, but the majority of the persons who claim county support are on the poor farm, which is now conducted by R. A. Miller. A claim for some $400 for supplies for the register in chancery, claimed to have been put in by order of Circuit Judge Winter, was postponed to the next term of the board, so the circumstances could be more fully investigated. The chancery attachment to Chilton county seems to be an expensive luxury, and the commissioners appear to be powerless to prevent it. The whole matter of supplies for the different officers in our court house is in need of a thorough overhauling and ought to get it.

BOOZE EDWARDS BACK.

Booze Edwards, who forfeited his bond for trial some months ago, was brought back from Aberdeen, Miss., by Sheriff Morgan, and is out on bond again, $200 each in two cases, making $400 in all. There was a third charge against him in the county court, to which he pleaded guilty, which cost him about $18.

FOR SALE.

760 acres of land, partly improved; also two sets mill rocks and fixtures. Alfred Popwell, Clanton, Alabama.

JEMISON.

Editor Union:

Jemison still ahead. Some few fellows look a little sad on account of being disfranchised by failure to pay their poll tax. Well, it ought to make a white man feel bad to be disfranchised. I heard a prominent democrat say a few years ago that "no white man would ever be disfranchised; there would be some way provided for him to escape." I would like for some one to tell me how this poor fellow that hunted up the tax collector after February 1st is going to vote this fall. I understand that about 400 white men in Chilton failed to pay poll tax, and if the world was to get afire, and a vote would put it out, they could not cast it, but just stand aside like a negro.

Affairs still wag on. Some little talk of politics up this way. A prominent democrat from Clanton said the other day that they had the wrong candidates out; that they could not win with either Deason or Smith. I fully agreed with him and I don't think they can elect any other that they can get out. But there will be a hot time in Chilton this year. I heard one of the best politicians in the state say that the democrats would run their candidates down before election, and you know I believe it would kill any candidate to run from now till November, so when we "pops" and republicans put our shoulders to the wheel and nominate a good ticket, the demmies will simply "not be in it," so boys, stay out of the democratic primary and let's have a PEOPLE'S primary about laying-by time, and then strike the democrats square between the eyes with a whop and sweep them off the face of the earth. I know we can do it. You see, we have now over 2,000 qualified voters in this county, and the demmies have never been able to get but about 700 votes, so all we have to do is to get our voters out. I saw a democratic candidate the other day and it made me feel sorter of sorry to see the poor fellow working so hard for an empty honor, for let me say to all demoerats, we people's party men are going to elect our county ticket, so you can take due notice and govern yourselves accordingly.

Say, Mr. Editor, how about leap year down at Clanton? I tell you a good looking young man can't walk on Jemison's streets without running a risk of being proposed to by some pretty young girl; even old bachelors are not safe. By the way, Uncle Dick Gaines and the Widow Hughes were married about 4 o'clock Monday evening. The whole town wishes them success. When an old widower gets taken into the matrimonial toils, who is safe? We have some of the prettiest girls here you ever saw, so let them have their chance. It will be a long while to next leap year. God bless their sweet souls, I love them all.

Hurrah for the UNION!

LIBERTY HILL NEWS.

Measles are plentiful in our community at present.

The farmers are getting ready for another crop of cotton, hoping to get 20 cents for it.

Mr. Fate Foshee has got a pair of mules. He calls one Sweet, so the other one ought to be Sour.

Messrs. L. T. Vickers and Frank Littlejohn were visitors at Pleasant Grove Sunday.

Mrs. Durbin visited the family of Rev. B. H. Vickers Saturday.

Mr. H. R. Hayes was a visitor to the same family Sunday.

Rev. B. H. Vickers and little daughter went to Energy for Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. H. K. Hayes was a visitor at Rev. B. H. Vickers' Monday.

"AN OLD MAID."

MAPLE SPRINGS.

Rev. M. J. Parrish preached here last Sunday. The congregation was small on account of the bad weather.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely.

Mr. Shirley Davis and wife, of Bozeman, visited Mr. T. W. Wilson Saturday.

Mr. Huey Hayes paid a visit to Rev. B. H. Vickers, near Liberty Hill, Saturday.

Goodby. If this escapes the waste basket I will write again.

BIG, LONG, ROUND FELLOW.

JUMBO.

Editor Union:

Allow me a small space in your valuable paper to tell the other boys how we are getting along. We are mostly farmers. I think farming is the happiest, purest and most free life that a man can live.

Jumbo is coming up some. We have a new railroad coming in near us.

The Jumbo gold miner is on a boom.

Measles are very stylish now. Which is the worst, measles or the Texas boll weevil? But I believe that stock law is worse than either. We don't want a stock law here, but we would like better roads.

Mr. J. H. House, of Ensley, Ala., who has been visiting his parents here for some time, has returned home. We were sorry to part with him.

Now, boys, you all take the UNION and you will find out if your best girl gets married.

Fearing the waste basket, I will ring off.

AGRICULTURAL.

Comfort For the Farm Dog.

The need of comfortable and protected quarters for the farm dog during the cold winter months is called to remembrance by an American Agriculturist reader. As some farmers like to have their dogs about the stable, he suggests that if a hole is cut through the lower part of the door and an old fertilizer bag tacked over it, the dog can go in and out at pleasure. If he is kept near the house and nothing else is available for protection an old barrel laid on its side, half filled with straw, with a piece of sack tucked over the front, will serve the purpose.

Freak Eggs.

When hens lay freak eggs it is a pretty sure sign that they are not being properly cared for, the trouble in most cases being too much food. Hens that are too fat often lay eggs with double yolks, or an egg within an egg, or one with irregular shape.

Lack of shell material will cause the hens to lay soft shell eggs, so that in every case where freak eggs are laid, we can trace its cause to some fault in feeding. When we observe the trouble we should at once change the food and our methods. Give less food and more grit and oyster shells, likewise a tonic of some kind in the drinking water. See to it that the hens have some place to scratch, and keep them at it. The hen that works will lay and keep in good health, while the lazy hen is dumpish and usually worthless.

Teaching a Colt to Back.

After the colt fully understands the legitimate use of the halter in leading is a good time to teach it to back, says Horse Sense—an important and necessary duty in its after life of usefulness—which is easily accomplished by complying with the natural law. Again, by pressing the extended fingers of one hand between the point of the shoulder and the breastbone and using the other hand at the halter strap to simply keep the colt straight in line, to back in any desired direction. Don't try to force the colt backward by "yanking" at the halter or bit, but simply press on this sensitive chest cavity with the fingers, and the colt will naturally go backward, providing there is nothing of an obstruction behind it. When this pressure has been made at the front and the colt has moved backward (if it is only one step) it should be rewarded for this action; then try again. About the third time this pressure has been made it is a good time to associate the word "back" with the pressure, and the reader will be surprised to see how soon the colt will comprehend what is wanted, and how willingly the young thing complies with our every wish as soon as it understands what is wanted.

Making a Handy Gate.

The average farm gate is hard to manage and is usually breaking down. The illustration shows a way of fastening such a gate in a simple manner. Take a horseshoe and fasten it to the gate post, so that about one-third of it will project, as shown in the detail at lower left of the cut. This provides the latch, and when the gate is to be closed simply raise it so that the top bar will come over the horseshoe, as indicated in the upper portion of the cut. On the lower right of the cut is shown a way of fastening the boards by bending and nailing a long strip of strap iron over the ends of the boards, instead of using the upright boards, as usual. The advantage is that the gate is not so heavy as when the upright board is used, which is a consideration with the average farm gate.—Indianapolis News.

Barn Conveniences.

On the majority of farms considerable time is spent in the barns during the winter, and yet there is scarcely one barn in ten that contains any of the little conveniences which will enable one to work to advantage. Two days' labor and a bundle of old newspapers and a few tacks are all that is necessary to fill in or cover the cracks so that the wind would not blow in and chill the animals. Then a few boards laid over the cracks in the hayloft would prevent the dust from coming down on the horses and cows and save so much cleaning.

A few days' of labor and a few planks will put a gutter in operation by which the liquid manure from the stables can be conducted to vats and saved. Twenty-five to fifty cents invested in hooks of good size will provide places for hanging harness, blankets, ropes and other things that are frequently used and not always to be found under the present plan of keeping them. Then there should be proper hooks provided in different parts of the barn where a lighted lantern may be hung without any danger of its being knocked down. There are a dozen other conveniences which all farmers think of having some time, and most of them may be had at the expense of a little time and less money. Why not have them this winter when there is time to get them together?

A Practical Silo.

The picture shows a silo that anybody can build who has the lumber. It is economical, strong and tight. I have three of this kind and speak whereof I know, says Edward Van Alstyne in American Agriculturist. One has been filled, this is the thirteenth winter, and another has been filled for nine winters. Any one can build one of this sort who can handle a level and saw, or use a hammer and nails, and a good thing about them is that they can be set anywhere and made to conform to the size of the barn if you want to put them inside. The picture shows clearly how the silo is built. The foundation is below frost, made of stones laid in cement mortar. On this are placed sills of two by six or two by eight. Matched pine siding is stood up and braced with two by eight or two by ten inch scantlings placed as shown. The corners are put in on a bevel to avoid the square corners and also to allow of braces to strengthen the silo.

CONSTRUCTION OF A SQUARE SILO.

A second thickness of siding should be put in to break joints. Do not use paper between the boards, as it will rot out. I have a silo built of single boards of six inch matched pine. The lumber was as dry as I could get it and put together as tight as possible, but I found after the first year that those boards would shrink apart a little and that many places would never get tight again. That is the danger of the single board silo and also the danger of the poorly constructed round silo.—Connecticut Farmer.

Pruning Peach Trees.

In an article on pruning peach trees, Roland Morrill says: "If there be no climatic reason why a tree should have a long body, I would give it a short one, because by and by the young tree must be pruned, and every foot a tree is raised in the air is just so much more energy expended to the end of its existence in going up and down ladders. Every foot means increased percentage of extra labor for every man that goes up and down the ladder hundreds of times during the life of the tree. This means a difference of ten per cent. on expense, and it may take twenty per cent. These are little things, but they count much. So I would say, unless there is some excellent reason otherwise, I would advocate short bodies. Another reason is there is not the same leverage from the wind on the short body that there is on the long stem."

Capable Poultrymen.

It is very difficult to secure a capable man to assist in the management of poultry when it is made a business, and especially in raising broilers. The eye of the employer must be everywhere, and regularity is essential. The cause of this lack of help is due to the fact that it is seldom that the hired man is required to give his attention to poultry, such matters being left to the women of the family. Now that poultry is receiving great attention and incubators are coming into use extensively, there is a new field opening up for the hired man, and if he will make himself familiar with the details of management of poultry he will find that his services will be in greater demand and higher wages awaiting him.

Grain Morning and Evening.

The suggestion that the poultry be fed grain rations morning and evening, giving the warm mash at noon, strikes the Gleaner most favorably, both as to its convenience and the probability of better results. The notion of warming the birds with a hot mash in the morning has seemed all right, but the warmth will be more tasting if it is attained while hunting half the forenoon for their breakfast, and the time usually spent in coddling together in some sunny corner will be used in a more health-giving manner. If the ration has been prepared the night before, it may be placed on the stove or in the oven (if that is not in use) and it will be piping hot by the time the hens are astir.

Crowded Trees.

When trees become thickly branched and crowded as to space they are not improved by cutting the ends of the shoots, which merely aggravates the evil. They should be judiciously thinned by the complete removal of the branches. A skillful operator will not perceive that any pruning has been done, the tree looking as natural in its ramifications as if it had not been disturbed, and this should be the aim in all pruning operations as applied to street trees. — Farmers' Bulletin No. 181, United States Department of Agriculture.

THE CRAZY QUILT.

One time I met a crazy quilt,
But I was not aware
That it was crazy, until it
Gave me a dreadful scare.

Its great delusion was that I
Was it, and it was I—
It tucked me in the mattress, and Said, "Sing a lullaby!"

This worried me extremely, so
I thought I would retreat,
When suddenly the quilt essayed
To kick me off its feet.

It then arose and said some things
In accents full of gloom
And then it called a bellboy and
Said: "I don't like this room."

With gentle hand the bellboy took
The quilt, and softly said:
"The poor old quilt is crazy, sir;
And it must go to bed."

And as he went away I asked
What caused its lunacy.
"Alas," he answered; "sir, it was Stung by a quilting bee.

"Since then its pattern is so loud
It cannot go to sleep,
And so it always seeks excuse
To scold or swear or weep."

Now, when I see a crazy quilt,
It much appeals to me—
I always try to comfort it
With friendly sympathy.

—W. D. N., in Chicago Tribune.

HUMOROUS.

"But you must have noticed that he likes you." "Well, yes; I suspected something when all the girls began to tell me how disagreeable he was."—Brooklyn Life.

Mrs. Suburba—There goes Mrs. Toughman. Is she in mourning for her late husband? Mrs. Knowit—No; only wearing black for him.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Mr. Wabash—Which do you think was the greater, Lowell or Emerson? Mr. Beacon Streete—What difference dots it make? They are both Bostonians.—Somerville Journal.

"If our combination is illegal," said the capitalist, "I suppose we will have to change it." "Wouldn't it be easier to change the law?" asked his associate.—Chicago Evening Post.

Wife—Now, don't you think my new hat is a perfect dream? Husband—Well, no. To be a perfect dream the bill attached to it should also be merely a dream.—Philadelphia Press.

"What do you mean by the word 'civilized?'" asked the simple barbarian. "To be 'civilized,'" answered the chief, 'is to own up once for all that you're whipped."—Washington Star.

Flint—"It is possible for me to believe that an intelligent woman can have the temerity to ask her husband for a $1000 Christmas present?" Mrs. Flint—That kind don't have husbands.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Husband—You are not economical. Wife—Well, if you don't call a woman economical who saves her wedding dress for a possible second marriage, I'd like to know what you think economy is like!—Glasgow Evening Times.

Aunt Jane—Helen, I saw that young man kiss you last evening! Helen—I don't think you need to complain, Auntie; I don't think he would have given the kiss to you if you had been there instead of me.—Boston Transcript.

Mr. Ireland—This book on swimming is very useful in sudden emergencies. Mrs. Ireland—Is it? Mr. Ireland—I should say so. If you are drowning, turn to page 103, and there you'll see how to save yourself.—Glasgow Evening Times.

Housekeeper—You said that at Mrs. Workhard's you always get up in the morning without calling. New Girl—Yes'm. "You have not done that here." "No'm. You see, at Mrs. Workhard's the smell of the cookin' always waked me."—New York Weekly.

Too Considerate—Mistress (returning from holiday)—Why Bridget, whatever has become of the parrot? Bridget—Well, you see, mum, after you left it looked a bit pining like, and didn't talk much, so cook and I put it out of its misery, poor thing, and I had it stuffed for my new 'at.—Judy.

"Gracious! such language!" exclaimed the man who had just heard Col. Bulley for the first time; "no wonder he is called a 'fire eater.' I never heard such fiery words." "Yes," replied the man who knew him better, 'ne is called a fire eater because he has to eat them so frequently."—Philadelphia Press.

Unhealthful Palaces.

The illness of the czarina has been attributed to the insanitary condition of many royal palaces in Russia. It may be so, but there are cases where inflammation of the ear arises from quite other causes. There is, of course, considerable difficulty in renovating the private apartments of a monarch whose life is in constant and imminent danger from obstinate anarchist intrigues.

Unless rumor gravely lies, the czar himself does not know where he will sleep before night comes, and to throw open the geography of the palace to workmen would increase its terrors tenfold. The best plan would be to employ foreigners, and, preferably, Englishmen, who are least of all touched by hatred of monarchy. A court is always conservative, like a university, and it is not uninteresting to compare the statements about the damp and unhealthy palaces of Russia with the famous American mother's characteristic condemnation of the colleges at Oxford.—London Daily News.

Not Guilty.

Rimer—She rejected me, so I've written a scathing poem to her. I want to read it to you.

Crittick—Hold on! Why read it to me? I haven't done you any harm.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Household Matters

Wonderful Kitchenware.

A visit to the kitchenware department of a large city store is enough to make the veriest spinster long for a home to furnish if she has a spark of femininity in her make-up.

There are enameled sauce and stew pans of milky whiteness finished with edges of gilt. There are all sorts of cooking utensils, tea pots, coffee pots, preserving kettles, milk boilers, cereal cookers and dishpans which are dainty enough to use on the dining room table. As these will never rust they are greatly to be desired by the housewife, and although they are rather expensive they are doubtless cheaper in the end than those which cost less but wear out sooner.—New York Press.

Camphor Vs. Good Cleaning.

Many housewives place undue confidence in the cleansing powers of camphor.

The rely upon it to do the work which should be accomplished by a thorough cleaning.

Camphor will not stop the ravages of moths in carpets after the insects have commenced eating.

Nor will they then pay any regard to the presence of cedar or tobacco.

A good way in which to kill them is to take a coarse crash towel and wring it out of clean water, spread it smoothly on the carpet, and then iron it dry with a good hot iron, repeating the operation on all suspected places, and those least used.

The process does not injure the pile or color of the carpet in the least; and it is not necessary to press hard, heat and steam being the agents, and they do the work effectually on worms and eggs.

Cold Weather Helps.

For the woman whose work compels her to sit much, and whose feet are prone to become cold in consequence, an easily managed foot warmer may be procured at little expense. Let her purchase a good sized agate ware or enamel lined pot, the kind for cooking vegetables, and filling it with water, bring it to a boil. This answers admirably for a foot stool, and will keep her comfortable many hours without reheating. Many persons never feel sufficiently warm after retiring for the night unless their heads are muffled in the bed coverings. Now a much better plan is to procure a square of soft flannel or any preferred material whose sides shall measure a yard or more. Spread this at the head of the bed so that part of it shall be underneath the pillow, while the remainder can be drawn down over the pillow and sleeper's head. Arranged properly this will exclude every prying current of air from sensitive head, neck and shoulders.—S. Virginia Levis, in The Epitomist.

Hammocks For Small Rooms.

There are many rooms too small to hold conveniently a comfortable sofa. For these I consider a hammock little short of a necessity, while in large rooms the hammock would merely be an added beauty, a perfect lounge for reading, and an ideal resting place. It must be netted with strong silk. It must be very wide and long enough to lie at ease and rest and sleep in, and the color must be in perfect harmony with the room, says London Queen.

An Oriental drapery is needed to throw over one end, and at least four large soft cushions for the inside of the hammock. The carpenter must be called in to plug the wall and screw in hooks, which must not be done too high; one sits as well as lies in a hammock. If the carpenter has any fear of the strain on the walls, pieces of wood can be fastened to the floor and to the required height on the walls, and can be carved or painted at will.

There now remains simply the hanging of the hammock and the tying on of two large silk bows at the extreme ends to cover the hooks. In a small room, when not needed, the hammock can be unslung and dropped to the ground. I am sure that the first siesta in the gentle swaying hammock will repay all trouble and expense.—Mirror and Farmer.

. . RECIPES . . .

Shortcake—Rub half a cupful of butter into one pint of flour, add two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; mix well and add half a cupful of milk, knead lightly; roll out, cut in large biscuits, bake slowly on the griddle or in a quick oven.

Vanity Puffs—Boil one cup of milk and thicken with flour to a stiff dough; set away to cool; then add three eggs, one by one, unbeaten, and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Drop by the spoonful into hot fat and when brown remove and drain on paper. Roll in sugar and cinnamon mixed.

Tomato Preserve—Scald and peel carefully small potatoes; weigh them and add an equal amount of sugar and let stand over night; pour off all the juice and boil until it is a thick syrup; add tomatoes and cook until clear and transparent; one piece of ginger root or one lemon to each pound of fruit gives a pleasant flavor.

Cheese Straws—Two ounces of flour, two ounces of grated American cheese, one ounce of pamesan, a dash of cayenne, a pinch of salt, one egg; mix flour, cayenne, salt and cheese together, then add the eggs and work all to a smooth paste. Roll out on a floured board until very thin; cut in strips one-eighth of an inch wide and six inches long, place on a greased pan and bake in a very moderate oven. When a delicate brown, remove.

LITTLE GEMS OF THINGS Worth Knowing

A woman who lives in Macon Co., Mo., is 100 years old and says she never angry in her life.

But two nations, the Japanese and the South Sea Islanders, do not know kiss as a form of expression.

Goose quill pens and drying powder are still used in English law courts, the House of Lords and in the Chamber of Deputies.

A New York lady has just received from the United States Government sum of money that was claimed by her ancestors 105 years ago.

Swiss watches, according to a report just published, are becoming popular in China. Those with fantastic designs on the faces find the most ready sale.

The Bon Marche in Paris claims to have the largest kitchen in the world. There are 160 cooks and assistants and the number of employes altogether exceed 4000.

An illuminated cross for church use is suggested by a Kentucky inventor. It has glass sides and contains electric lamps, which are lit after dark. The cross is thus rendered visible in the dark.

A wedding engagement in Turkey begins with the payment of a substantial consideration to the girl's parents. If the girl jilts her lover, the engagement gift has to be returned, but if the parents have another daughter to give as a substitute.

At Cherson, Russia, lovers have been forbidden to kiss in public. A fine is given in the street incurs a fine. A lover who takes his sweetheart around the waist is fined, while the mere exhibition of a cross to signify a kiss on a postal card is also against the law. Any one caught in a kiss in public is punished by a fine.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

No pessimist ever discovered the secrets of the stars, or sailed to an uncharted land, or opened a new door to the human spirit.

Who shall dare let his incapable hope or goodness cast a shadow over the courage of those who bear their burdens as if they were privileges?

Philosophy is the history of the blind person writ large. It records efforts of human intelligence to escape of the clogging material world and forth into a universe of pure idea.

If you are born blind seek the treasures of darkness. They are more precious than the gold of Ophir. They are love and goodness and truth and hope, and their price is above rubies and sapphires.

Out of the fierce struggle and conflict of contending systems I see a new spiritual era slowly emerge—an era in which there shall be no England, no France, no Germany, no America, but this people or that, but one people, the human race.

America is transmuting her material wealth into the education of her children, so that unskilled people shall have no place in American life—so that women shall bring mind and soul under control of matter. Her children shall not drudges and slaves.

The student's supreme lesson is to grapple with great public questions, to keep his mind hospitable to new ideas and new views of truth, to reject the finer ideals that are lost sight of in the struggle for wealth, and to love justice between man and man.

In India it is a sin to teach the blind and the deaf because their affliction is regarded as a punishment for sins committed in a previous state of existence. If I had been born in the midst of these fatalistic doctrines I should have sat in darkness—my life a desert, a place where no caravan of thought could ever pass between my spirit and the world beyond.—From "Optimism," by Helen Keller.

Rare Occasion For Such an Expression.

As new words are coined for new uses, so language must contain expressions where words have never been needed. Commander Peary, the Arctic explorer, was one day talking to a group of friends who were greatly interested about life in the extreme latitudes.

"Do you speak the Esquimau language?" asked one.

"Yes."

"What is it like? For instance, how would an Esquimau say 'good morning?'"

"He wouldn't say it," returned the Commander, with a smile.

"Not say it? Are social customs entirely lacking there?"

"No, but you see," said the explorer, "it is a country where they wear mittens on occasion to use those words only once a year. So, you see, they don't need them."—Youth's Companion.

To Help Poor Children.

The Earl of Meath, a somewhat enthusiastic British humanitarian, has suggested to the London school authorities that children of the elementary grades be taken from the slums and brought up in model cottage villages, the parents to pay only the cost of food, the County Council paying other expenses. He urges in support that way children of the very poor would have an otherwise unobtainable chance to grow up strong, healthy and good citizens. In addition, many of them would probably stay in the country, thereby helping to repopulate the rural districts.

Men, women, children, whole towns and cities are caught in the baneful grip of a terrible monster.

The following letters speak for themselves as to the efficacy of Peruna in cases of la grippe or its after effects.

After Effects of La Grippe Eradicated by Pe-ru-na.

Mrs. Fred Weinberger, Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., writes:

"Several years ago I had an attack of la grippe which left my nerves in a prostrated condition. Then I had another attack of la grippe which left me worse. I had tried three good physicians, but all in vain. I gave Peruna a trial. In a short time I was feeling better, and now I am as well as any one."—Mrs. Fred Weinberger.

Hon. James R. Guill, of Omaha.

Hon. James R. Guill is one of the oldest and most esteemed men of Omaha, Neb. He has done much to make it what it is, serving on public boards a number of times. He endorses Peruna in the following words:

"I am 66 years old, am hale and hearty, and Peruna has helped me attain it. Two years ago I had la grippe—my life was despaired of. Peruna saved me."—J. R. Guill.

A Relative of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Silas S. Lincoln, who resides at 913 I Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., has the honor of being third cousin to Abraham Lincoln. He writes:

"I had la grippe five times before using your medicine. Four years ago I began the use of Peruna, since which time I have not been troubled with that disease. I can now do as much work at my desk as I ever could in my life. I have gained more than ten pounds in weight."—S. S. Lincoln.

Pe-ru-na Not Only Cured La Grippe But Benefited the Whole System.

Miss Alice M. Dressler, 1313 N. Bryant Ave., Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

"Last spring I suffered from la grippe and was partially cured, but the bad after effects remained through the summer, and somehow I did not get strong as I was before. One of my college friends who was visiting me asked me to try Peruna and I did so, and found it all and more than I had expected. It not only cured me of the catarrh, but restored me to perfect health, built up the entire system and brought a happy feeling of buoyancy which I had not known for years."—Alice M. Dressler.

An Actress' Testimonial.

Miss Jean Cowgill, Griswold Opera House, Troy, N. Y., is the leading lady with the Aubrey Stock Co. She writes the following:

"During the past winter of 1901 I suffered for several weeks from a severe attack of grippe, which left a serious catarrhal condition of the throat and head.

"Some one suggested Peruna. As a last resort, after wasting much time and money on physicians, I tried the remedy faithfully, and in a few weeks was as well as ever."—Jean Cowgill.

A Southern Judge Cured.

Judge Horatio J. Goss, Hartwell, Ga., writes:

"Some five or six years ago I had a very severe spell of grippe, which left me with systemic catarrh. A friend advised me to try your Peruna, which I did, and was immediately benefited and cured. The third bottle completed the cure."—H. J. Goss.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

PASSING OF THE HEARTH.

Where the Family Gathered for Festival and Prayer.

An elderly woman in Wisconsin, who was a young wife in the young west, is telling in a local newspaper a few of the things that the young wife of the older west does not have to do. And in telling of this she recalls vividly her home as it was sixty years ago. There were no wood, coal or gas ranges in those days, but there was a fireplace, with a wide, deep hearth—and a chimney that would draw, built large enough for the sweep to pass through it.

The fireplace would take a log four or five feet long and a foot and a half through. This was piled on andirons, and as there were no matches in those days one of the greatest anxieties of the careful housewife was to prevent the fire from going out. If it did go out she had to go to one of the neighbors; perhaps a quarter of a mile away, for a shoveful of live coals.

One of the signs of neatness in a housekeeper in those old days was the way she kept the hearth cleaned, using the broom and wing, and a few of her many duties were to dip candles, put down pork and beef by the barrel, make sausage for the year put down lard by the jar, preserved fruit by the gallon, apple sauce by the quantity, boiled cider by the keg; to provide dried beef and smoked ham, to spin all the yarn for the men's clothes, to weave it into cloth, and to send it to the dyer's to be dyed, fulled and pressed.

The coming of the cooking stove marked the beginning of a new epoch in the lives of our grandmothers. "Oh!" exclaims the survivor, "the good cheer the fireplace brought to the children! No corn was quite so good as the ears roasted before the fire. No potatoes so good as those roasted in the ashes in the winter. No apple equal to frozen apples boiled; then we would melt maple sugar and sugar off again on the snow." And she says, in conclusion:

"With the passing of the fireplace has passed the word 'fireside' and the word 'hearth.' It was around the fireside we gathered for family prayer, around the fireside we gathered to read, to chat, to visit. Gone with the fireside and the hearth are most of my dear ones with whom I knelt every day."

Ruskin as a Gardener.

Fond as Ruskin was of flowers, especially wild ones, he had his own ideas as to what a garden ought to be, and in his practical gardening was quite a landscapist. He liked making paths and contriving pretty nooks. When he first came to Brantwood he would have his coppice cut no more. It spindled up to great tall steps, slender and sinuous, promising no timber, and past the age for all commercial use or time honored wont. Neighbors shook their heads, but they did not know the pictures of Botticelli, and Ruskin had made his coppice into an early Italian altar piece. Then he had the espalier of apples and a little goosberry patch and a few standard fruit trees and some strawberries mixed with flowers. In one corner there were beehives in the old-fashioned pent house trailed over with creepers. Here and there were little hummocks, each with its special interest of fern or flowers.

Better Salaries for Teachers.

Perhaps no more satisfactory Christmas present could have been devised than that which was enjoyed by the 3,800 school teachers of Philadelphia, who have just reached the successful climax of their brief and spirited campaign for higher salaries. A substantial increase will shortly be made all along the line from high school to kindergarten, not omitting the janitors of school buildings, who, it appears, get an additional ten per cent. While the new schedule just passed by the Philadelphia Councils places the nomination of Philadelphia teachers on a considerably higher plane than before, it is to be noted that it is still behind the standard of wages awarded in Boston and other cities. But the prompt and cordial response of the Councils, impelled by public sentiment, may be looked on as an indication that better things are in store for the teachers in Philadelphia public schools whenever they shall arise in their might and demand adequate pecuniary recognition for good work done.

Mrs. Hughson, of Chicago, whose letter follows, is another woman in high position who owes her health to the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I suffered for several years with general weakness and bearing-down pains, caused by womb trouble. My appetite was fitful, and I would lie awake for hours, and could not sleep, until I seemed more weary in the morning than when I retired. After reading one of your advertisements I decided to try the merits of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so glad I did. No one can describe the good it did me. I took three bottles faithfully, and besides building up my general health, it drove all disease and poison out of my body, and made me feel as spry and active as a young girl. Mrs. Pinkham's medicines are certainly all they are claimed to be."—MRS. M. E. HUGHSON, 347 East Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Pinkham Tells How Ordinary Tasks Produce Displacements.

Apparently trifling incidents in woman's daily life frequently produce displacements of the womb. A slip on the stairs, lifting during menstruation, standing at a counter, running a sewing machine, or attending to the most ordinary tasks may result in displacement, and a train of serious evils is started.

The first indication of such trouble should be the signal for quick action. Don't let the condition become chronic through neglect or a mistaken idea that you can overcome it by exercise or leaving it alone.

More than a million women have regained health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for her advice, and a few timely words from her will show you the right thing to do. This advice costs you nothing, but it may mean life or happiness or both.

Mrs. Lelah Stowell, 177 Wellington St., Kingston, Ont., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—You are indeed a godsend to women, and if they all knew what you could do for them, there would be no need of their dragging out miserable lives in agony.

"I suffered for years with bearing-down pains, womb trouble, nervousness, and excruciating headache, but a few bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made life look new and promising to me. I am light and happy, and I do not know what sickness is, and I now enjoy the best of health."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound can always be relied upon to restore health to women who thus suffer. It is a sovereign cure for the worst forms of female complaints,—that bearing-down feeling, weak back, falling and displacement of the womb, inflammation of the ovaries, and all troubles of the uterus or womb. It dissolves and expels tumors from the uterus in the early stage of development, and checks any tendency to cancerous humors. It subdues excitability, nervous prostration, and tones up the entire female system. Its record of cures is the greatest in the world, and should be relied upon with confidence.

Wireless Trolley a Success.

The "wireless" trolley system invented by Leon W. Pullen, of Philadelphia, was successfully tested over a mile of steam railroad tracks. The invention does away with the third rail through the use of a magnet. The equipment, which is easily adjusted, consists mainly of a highly magnetized bar running the entire length of the car. The feed wire is buried in the ground. At intervals of eighteen feet a metal cap four inches in diameter comes to the surface. This cap is harmless and has no connection with the feed wire. It only becomes charged when touched by the metal bar under the car.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Mrs. John LaRue, of 115 Paterson Avenue, Paterson, N. J., says: "I was troubled for about nine years, and what I suffered no one will ever know. I used about every known remedy that is said to be good for kidney complaint, but without deriving permanent relief. Often when alone in the house the back ache has been so bad that it brought tears to my eyes. The pain at times was so intense that I was compelled to give up my household duties and lie down. There were headaches, dizziness and blood rushing to my head to cause bleeding at the nose. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me so much that I continued the treatment. The stinging pain in the small of my back, the rushes of blood to the head and other symptoms disappeared."

MORE THAN A THIRD

Of the World's Coal Produced by the United States.

The total production of coal in the world, exclusive of lignite, is 700,000,000 tons, according to the latest official estimates.

The five great producing countries are the United States, Great Britain, Germany, France and Belgium, in the order in which they are mentioned. In the year 1902 the output of coal in the United States was 269,195,000 tons of 2,240 pounds each. The United Kingdom produced 227,095,000 tons, of the like number of pounds.

Statistics show that the United States and Great Britain produce between two-thirds and three-fourths of the world's coal. The United States produces over one-third and the United Kingdom produces a little under one-third of the total.

Since the year 1899 the United States has continuously led in production, but the value of Great Britain's output is greater.

There are more miners in the United States than in any other of the coal producing countries. In this country there are 518,307 miners with an average production per man of 520 tons.

All five of the coal countries, with the exception of France, export more coal than they import.

PHOENIX LIKE,

Baltimore Will Rise from the Ruins More Beautiful than Ever.

From ruins still smoking Baltimore has begun her resurrection. Tuesday was a day of conferences. The governor, the mayor and municipal officials met and threshed out the problems. From this conference came a decision that Baltimore, for the present, needs no outside help, but will endeavor with her own resources and those of the state, to meet the emergency. At this conference also was developed the machinery for an advisory legislative committee to act in conjunction with the legislature.

Old buildings, long unused, private residences near the business section, in fact every available structure bears crudely lettered signs on board or cloth announcing that within is the temporary office of a firm. The names on some of these signs are those that rank high in the financial and commercial circles.

Labor is in demand and the newspapers already contain display advertisements for men to begin the work of clearing the ruins.

From one trust company's safes alone papers to the amount of more than $200,000,000 were recovered. The news cheered the whole city and encouraged immediate and thorough investigation.

A surprise was the discovery that two financial concerns, whose homes were directly in the fiercest sweep of the flames, were practically unharmed. These were the Brown Bros.' bank and the Mercantile Trust company. The escape of the structures was due to their lack of height, being but four stories high, and surrounded by taller buildings, the flames rushing over them.

There are between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000 now in the vaults of the sub-treasury, of which over $7,000,000 is in gold.

Gin Report.

The census bureau has issued a report showing the amount of cotton ginned from the crop grown in 1903 up to and including January 16, 1904. There were 30,171 active ginneries in operation. Square bales amounted to 9,038,890; round bales 747,480 and Sea Island crop 72,907. Total commercial bales 9,859,277.

Insanity the Claim.

The attorneys for F. W. Peterson, a young white man, charged with embezzling $5,000 from the Merchants and Planters-Farley National bank, Montgomery, Ala., where he was formerly employed as collection clerk, filed a writ of lunacy in the United States court. Hearing will be on the 11th inst. The United States grand jury found nineteen true bills against him.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA CLASH.

And Three Russian Ships are Disabled.

An official dispatch says that Japanese torpedo boats have attacked the Russian squadron in the outer roads at Port Arthur, and that three Russian ships were damaged.

The Russian admiral says: About midnight of February 8 Japanese torpedo boats made a sudden attack by means of mines upon the Russian squadron in the outer roads of the fortress of Port Arthur, in which the battleships Retvizan and Czarevitch and the cruiser Pallada were damaged.

The attacking Japs escaped unhurt.

Naval men in London regard the result of Japan's first attack with torpedo boats on the Russian fleet off Port Arthur as staggering. They point out that Viceroy Alexieff's reference to "mines" obviously meant "torpedoes," and said that if the Russian vessels had been struck by "whitehead" torpedoes they would probably have been sunk or are resting in the mud in Port Arthur; in any case hopelessly out of action for a considerable time.

The Russian battleship Retvizan was built by the Cramps at Philadelphia. She is of 12,000 tons displacement, has 16,000 horse-power and had a speed of eighteen knots. Her armor is of Krupp steel and her armament consists of four twelve-inch guns, twelve six-inch guns, twenty three-inch guns and twenty-six smaller rapid fire guns. The Czarevitch is a battleship of about the same description.

IN CONGRESS.

FEBRUARY 8TH.

After listening to speeches by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Clay in support of the Panama canal treaty, the senate passed the bill granting assistance to the proposed Lewis and Clark exposition at Portland, Oregon. The bill was amended so as to close the exposition on Sundays, and the provision for a permanent memorial to Lewis and Clark was eliminated.

The senate passed the following bills:

Amending the revised statutes so as to permit vessels of less than thirty tons to bring merchandise into the United States from Mexico and Canada.

Authorizing the appointment of Ricardo Iglesias, a Costa Rican, as a midshipman in the United States navy.

The house debated at length the proposed loan of $4,600,000 to the Louisiana Purchase exposition at St. Louis, as provided for in the senate amendment to the urgent deficiency bill, and it was still pending when the house adjourned.

The house non-concurred in all other amendments except that providing for coal tests at the St. Louis fair.

Resolutions were adopted calling on the attorney general for information in addition to that furnished the recent request for information as to the anti-trust suits instituted, also for a report made by an examiner sent by the department of justice to instigate charges made by S. M. Brosius, of the Indian Rights association.

FEBRUARY 9TH.

The senate passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill without debate and then renewed consideration of the isthmian question. Mr. Fulton spoke in support of the course of the administration in connection with the Panama revolt, and Mr. Carmack and Mr. Overman in opposition thereto. Mr. Overman had not hitherto made known his position on the treaty, and his speech revealed the attitude of perhaps the last doubtful member of the senate. The speech was Mr. Overman's maiden effort in the senate.

The house devoted the entire session to consideration of the resolution, reported from elections committee No. 3, unseating Mr. Howell, democrat, and declaring Mr. Connell, republican, who contested the election, to have been elected from the tenth Pennsylvania district. By agreement a vote will be taken at 3 p. m. tomorrow.

United States Consul Miller, of Niuchwang, China, calls attention in a recent communication to the government to the fact that Russia is becoming a formidable competitor of this country in the Orient. Butter, milk, sugar, lumber, kerosene, cotton goods, cheese, candies, jams, flour and all groceries are being sold in large quantities by Russian merchants and the prices are moderate when it is considered that the goods are transported over such a wide expanse of territory. Butter is brought from Siberia in special cars and delivered at Dalny and Port Arthur for 20 cents per pound.

Three thousand eight hundred and seventy-three ginneries in Alabama last year ginned 1,020,592 bales.

East Lake, Ala., is to have a fire department.

The senate has passed the bill authorizing R. A. Chapman and others to use the waters of the Coosa river for purposes of generating electricity. The bill, it is said, will not pass the house at this session, as the interstate commerce committee will not favorably report such measures until a general law has been framed on the subject.

Isadore Rayner, the chief counsel for Admiral Schley, has been elected senator from Maryland to succeed Louis E. McComas.

Montgomery Wins.

Montgomery county won its case in full against the Fidelity and Deposit company of Maryland in the United States court. Judge Jones' decision gives the county judgment for $101,017.90, which amount, less the interest, was lost by the county in the failure of the Josiah Morris bank on January 8, 1901. The attorneys for the fidelity company give notice of appeal to the court of appeals.

The case is one of the most interesting that has been in the local courts for years. It has been twice before the court of appeals at New Orleans and in both instances the decisions have been favorable to the county.

Railroad Man Hurt.

The second section of a freight train on the Southern railroad ran into the rear of the first section at Brookside, Ala. The engine, three cars and caboose were damaged and two white men injured, one of them seriously. The injured men are S. D. Day, flagman, and G. J. White, brakeman.

The investigation into the accident has not been completed, but it is stated that the switch was open and the rear section dashed into the other while it was standing at the station. There is a curve just before reaching the station and the engineer was unable to see the conditions as he approached.

40,000 TONS PER DAY.

What Is Doing Among Northern Iron Furnaces.

J. G. Butler, chairman of the Bessemer Pig Iron association, states that on February 1, 1904, there were 99 furnaces running with a daily capacity of 40,500 tons, and 67 furnaces out of blast. These furnaces are tributary to the Lake Superior ore region, and include Johnstown, Pittsburg and vicinity, the Mahoning and Shenango valleys, southern Ohio and the Columbus and Cleveland districts.

The idle capacity is 38 per cent. The idle capacity on January 1st was 69 per cent.

BURNED AT THE STAKE.

Negro and His Wife Meet Terrible Fate in Mississippi.

A special from Doddville, Miss., says:

Luther Holbert and his wife, negroes, were burned at the stake Sunday by a mob of over 1,000 persons for the killing of James Eastland, a prominent white planter, and John Carr, a negro, on Wednesday morning at the Eastland plantation.

The burning of Holbert and his wife closes a tragedy which has cost eight lives, has engaged two hundred men and two packs of bloodhounds in a four days' chase across four counties.

The dead are:

Luther Holbert and wife, negroes, burned at the stake by mob; James Eastland, white planter, killed by Holbert; John Carr, negro, killed by Holbert; John Winters, negro, killed by Eastland; three unknown negroes killed by posses.

The killing of Eastland, Carr and Winters occurred Wednesday morning at Eastland's plantation. Holbert and Winters were in Carr's cabin when Eastland entered and ordered Holbert to leave the plantation. A difficulty ensued, in which it is alleged that Holbert opened fire on Eastland, fatally wounding him and killing Carr. Eastland returned the fire and killed Winters.

When news of the tragedy reached Doddsville, a posse was formed and left immediately for Eastland's plantation. Arriving there, further shooting occurred, and an unknown negro was killed. Holbert and his wife, who had donned men's clothing, both heavily armed, had fled.

The 16-year-old son of Holbert, who was held on suspicion of complicity in the killing of Eastland, was given his freedom, his innocence being established.

It is reported that the sight of the pope is failing.

Sunday will be St. Valentine's day.

GROUND BROKEN

For New Street Car Manufacturing Plant at Ensley.

Near Ensley, Ala., ground was broken Saturday for the plant of the Southern Street Car Manufacturing Company's plant. The site of the proposed industry is between Ensley and Pratt City. The main structure of the plant will be two stories, 300 by 300 feet, and will be used as the shops proper. The management of the company has decided not to erect a commissary building. The cost of the original plant is estimated at $100,000.

The company was organized with a capital of $50,000, but it is soon to be increased to $500,000. The product will be street cars. The plant will give employment to 300 skilled workmen to begin with. Later on the number will be increased to 1,000, and after everything gets in full running order it is the intention of the management to employ 2,000 men.

Automobiles and Exercise

ON the whole the automobile is the most amusing toy now in market. Affluent persons who have got tired of navigating Island Sound and sailing up and down the Atlantic Coast in y find novelty and pleasure in yachting on shore. Most of them to go through the same experience. Beginning with a modest motor-wagon, run by electricity, perhaps, they duly aspire a quire, advancing from car to car, each time a bigger one with horse-power and greater speed capacity, until they have to send hor pasture and carriages to be stored to make room in their stables fo collection of devil wagons.

There is no doubt that the machines are interesting, and that the test their capacities to cover distance has great fascination. But with many o they are still a fad, and in so far as they are a fad they will in time los of their attractiveness. And as a fad automobiling has some drawback is told, with diagrams and pictures to help, that a good many automo are getting uncomfortably fat, and it is a matter of observation that the of others are not working as smoothly as their owners and their owner sociates could wish. Can it be that automobiling is defective as a sport i it fails to give its votaries due physical exercise? It looks that way. though it may come to be tiresome, is an exceedingly salubrious ex Horseback riding and polo playing jolt the liver in a fashion that is advantageous to that organ. Walking and tennis keep down fat, and are wholesome for persons whom they suit. But automobiling, though it is recreation in that it engages and entertains the mind, seems to be a bit to on the body. That is a serious defect in a sport, for our older men esp cultivate sports, not so much as a kill-time, as to keep the body in su dition as will best sustain the urgent activities of the mind. If the auto can't keep its owner "in condition," it won't have all the stable to itse leave the golf-course bare of players. It will not perish, of course, but who just now find it their sole recreation will have to supplement it with cises that exercise.

Man is intended to work both with his mind and his body. When ingenuity succeeds in making any difficult thing—like transportation or tenance—so easy that it is no trouble, that particular difficulty ceases in measure to perform its office in keeping people healthy, and some other culty has to be substituted for it. If we could live without trouble we have to invent suitable forms of trouble to keep us from degenerating, and is precisely what folks do whose lives have been made too easy, and wh wise enough to realize it.—Harper's Weekly.

A Tip For Daily Living

By L. M. Hodges

IT is one of the noblest sentiments of human nature t constantly on the lookout for what is good and beau and kind and true, even though we live and move have our being in a world where much that is opposite ists. Indeed this very fact makes the desire to see better things of far greater merit. It would be nothing all to look out for the good things in a world where t was nothing bad, largely because, as you see, it would an impossibility to find anything but good, and there a waste of time to look for aught else. But to insist upon seeing the be side of men and of things in just such a world as this is, is not only an mable and divinely related characteristic, but a decided help to every of us. Long researches into the subtler sciences which surround our b have brought us proofs undeniable that our lives and our thoughts, our positions and our characters, are largely molded by the nature of th with which we come in contact. If these things be beautiful the answer makes to its various calls of duty and responsibility is apt to be beau also. If they be distorted, untrue, ugly, evil, the answer is apt to be them. Then, you say, since there is so much of evil the answer w seem of necessity to partake of that nature. But clouds are gray only one side, and it takes a light to cast a shadow, and tears are someti brought about by laughter as well as through weeping, and, to make a story short, the great law of compensation has provided in some divine that for everything which lacks beauty is some other thing which has greater measure. Therefore it remains only for us to seek the good and beautiful in order that we may have it.

JAPAN'S CRUSHING BLOW TO RUSSIA

Wins First Great Fight on Sea, Crippling the Czar's Navy in the Far East.

JAPS LAND IN KOREA

Three Battleships and Four Cruisers Disabled at Port Arthur.

...Japan at the very outset of ...e war has struck her enemy a blow, ...e importance of which possibly can...ot be overrated, apparently deciding ... the former's interest the balance of ...val power in the Far East.

The battleships Tsarevitch and Retzan and the cruiser Pallada now lie ...pelessly crippled on the mud flats at ...rt Arthur as the result of a night at...ck by the Japanese.

In a second engagement the next ...orning two more Russian ships were ...abled.

But over and above this decisive ...oke at Port Arthur, it is stated from ...o or three sources that the Japanese ...ve also captured the first-class cruis... Variag and a smaller vessel at Che...ulpho, Korea.

These reports, although, unlike the ...rt Arthur disaster, they lack Ad...ral Alexieff's confirmation, are cir...mstantial. They state that a strong ...panese torpedo division, escorted by ...isers convoying transports, sudden... arrived off Chemulpho on Sunday. ...number of foreign vesels lay at an...or, including the Variag and the tor...do gunboat Korietz.

Apparently they did not expect an at...k any more than did the somnolent ...et at Port Arthur, for when the Jap...se commander summoned them to ...ul down their flags they were com...tely surprised, and in view of the ...rwhelming strength of the Japanese ... had no alternative but to comply. ...ch they did, say the reports, with... firing a shot.

...is battle, outside Port Arthur fol...d the destruction in part the night ...re of the Russian fleet, which was ...edoed by the advance boats of the ...nese navy. In the night action ... gun was fired by the Japanese, ... the first warning that the Russians ... was when their first-class battle... Retvizan was torpedoed. An ...n instantly followed. Search...ts were thrown from the sixteen ...ian warships and from the batter...n land, but nothing could be seen ...e Japanese fleet. The first-class ...eship Tsarevitch and the first-... cruiser Pallada also were hit ... torpedoes and practically de...ed. This much is admitted in an ...al dispatch from the naval author... in Port Arthur, but in addition, there is a well authenticated rumor that there was great loss of life on the Pallada, and that she is sunk in the channel entrance to Port Arthur.

But the Russian position on sea has been made still worse by the practical capture in the harbor of Chemulpo of the two cruisers Variag and Korietz. It seems that on Sunday Japanese transports landed 6000 soldiers in Chemulpo, right under the guns of the Variag and Korietz. The Russians knew nothing of any declaration of war and the Japanese did not attempt to destroy them owing to the presence of the soldiers on the transport. After the army had landed the warships of Japan sailed across the Bay of Korea toward Port Arthur, but after the battle seven of them returned toward Chemulpo and seven others put in within seven miles of here at night, making signals which were answered from the hills.

The German, French and English officers on the ground here say that these triumphs for the Japanese navy practically decide the war. Japan will not now have to keep any of her army reserves at home, as there will be no possible danger of invasion. As a result she can at once dispatch her entire active army of 197,000 men with officers, and if necessary can call on the reserve, consisting of 135,000 men and 116 guns, leaving uncalled on what is known as the territorial army of 300,000 men. Even should the reserves not be sent from Japan, the permanent army of 200,000, with its base absolutely protected, can be thrown into Manchuria now without delay, part of it to seize the China and Eastern Railway, cutting off Port Arthur from Mukden, and the remainder to proceed up the north bank of the Yalu River, forcing the Russians to give battle at some point in the triangle of which Mukden, Harbin and Vladivostok are the points. That the operations on land will be as rapid as those on sea was made certain in the news brought by a dispatch boat from Chenampho, Korea, announcing that the Japanese had landed altogether 55,000 men, with six battalions of heavy artillery and four battalions of mountain artillery at several points on the Korean coast.

Chefoo, China.—The steamer Columbia, which has arrived here, was in the roads outside Port Arthur harbor, when the Japanese made their attack on the Russian warships.

The first torpedo explosion occurred about 11 p. m. The shock was so great that it was felt by the Columbia.

The attack continued all night, and at daybreak two of the Russian battleships and a cruiser were seen disabled and beached near the entrance to the harbor. The cruiser had a bad list. The Russian forts later fired at the Japanese fleet at a range of about three miles. The Japanese replied, hitting several of the Russian ships, but little damage was done.

At 10 o'clock in the morning three Japanese cruisers passed Port Arthur within sight of the Russians. The whole Russian fleet weighed anchor and started in pursuit of them, but returned in half an hour, leaving a cruiser outside to watch the Japanese squadron. The latter fired on the cruiser, whereupon another Russian warship weighed anchor and cruised around.

The Japanese fleet came within three miles of the Russians and a battle began. The Japanese fired at the ships and forts which replied. Some of the Japanese shells struck the Russian ships, but only damaged them slightly. The Russian fire fell short.

The Columbia left while the battle was proceeding, but later she saw the Japanese ships leave.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—The Official Messenger publishes a telegram from Admiral Alexieff, Russian Viceroy of the Far East, to the Czar.

He reports that Japanese torpedo boats made a sudden attack on the Russian squadron at Port Arthur.

The battleships Retvizan and Tsarevitch and the cruiser Pallada were damaged. An inspection is being made to ascertain the amount and character of the damage.

The attack was made in the outer roads of Port Arthur, where the Russian fleet has been lying.

The Japanese made the attack at 1.45 in the morning. The boats discharged three torpedoes, damaging the three ships above mentioned, and escaped unharmed.

The Viceroy's report follows:

"I most respectfully inform your Majesty that about midnight on February 8, nine Japanese torpedo boats made a sudden attack by means of mines upon the Russian squadron in the outer roads of the fortress of Port Arthur, in which the Retvizan, Tsarevitch and Pallada were damaged.

"An inspection is being made to ascertain the character of the damage. Details are following for your Majesty."

The second engagement between the fleets was described in a telegram from Admiral Alexieff's chief of staff:

"By order of the Viceroy I beg to report that this day, about 11 o'clock in the morning, a Japanese squadron, consisting of about fifteen battleships and cruisers, approached Port Arthur and opened fire.

"The enemy was received with a cannonade from the shore batteries and the guns of our squadron, which also participated in the engagement.

"At about midday the Japanese squadron ceased its fire and left, proceeding south.

"Our losses in the fleet were two officers wounded, nine men killed and forty-one men wounded. On the shore batteries one man was killed and three were wounded. The battleship Poltava and the cruiser Novik each had a hole knocked in her side below the water line. The forts were slightly damaged."

For the first time popular interest in the crisis was displayed after the publication of Admiral Alexieff's dispatch, which was copied from the Official Gazette and issued on special fly-sheets by the newspapers. The news was read silently, with full recognition of its purport, but there was no noisy demonstration. Indeed, the attitude of the public in its self-restraint recalled that displayed in London during the dark days of the Boer War.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary Hay has addressed a note to the Powers that participated in the suppression of the Chinese rebellion suggesting that they unite in insisting that the integrity of the Chinese Empire shall be maintained and that the field of hostilities shall be localized.

Mr. Hay proposes military operations shall be confined to the territory north of Shan-Hai-Kuan, which is on the west shore of the Gulf of Pe-Chi-Li and at the point where the great wall begins, and at all that portion of the peninsula of which Port Arthur is the southern point and of the Gulf of Pe-Chi-Li north of Ta-Lien-Wan, which is some miles north of Port Arthur.

The purpose of this limitation is said to be to guarantee the territory south of Manchuria against occupation by the belligerents and to remove all apprehension as to the safety of Pekin.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—The latest returns of warships in the Far East total ninety-four, including eight battleships, sixteen cruisers, seven gunboats and fifty-six torpedo-boat destroyers and torpedo boats. Three more battleships and nine torpedo boats are to go to the Far East in the spring.

LAND THIEVES CAUGHT

Defrauded the Government Out of $1,000,000 at Least.

Interior Department Clerks Used as Accomplices Have Confessed to Bribery and Forgery.

Washington, D. C.—Astonishing details of the methods followed by the San Francisco ring which acquired $1,000,000 worth of public lands through bribery, forgery and other fraudulent devices have been laid before the Federal Grand Jury of the District of Columbia. The evidence is the result of eighteen months' investigation by Arthur B. Pugh, Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department, and William J. Burns, Secret Service agent, detailed to assist Mr. Pugh. They carried on this investigation under the personal direction of Secretary Hitchcock.

Three Government employes who accepted bribes from John A. Benson and F. A. Hyde, of San Francisco, and two persons formerly employed by Hyde and having intimate knowledge of his methods, furnished the most valuable evidence to the Grand Jury. The Government employes are Benjamin F. Allen, Forest Superintendent at Los Angeles; William E. Valk, formerly in the Division of Forestry, and now in the Division of Contests, Interior Department, and Woodford D. Harlan, formerly chief of a division in the Interior Department, and now a clerk there. The former employes of F. A. Hyde are J. H. Schneider and Miss Bryan, a stenographer.

John A. Benson is an engineer and real estate speculator. F. A. Hyde is an attorney at law. Both have offices on Montgomery street, San Francisco, within a block of each other. Hyde was the prime mover in the conspiracy, but so skillful was he in his operations that he remained a mere shadow until the confessions of the bribed Government employes and the testimony of his former employes proved his connection with the frauds. Hyde was, in fact, the inspiration and reputed author of the Forest Reserve Lien Land act, passed by Congress in 1897, which furnished a basis for the operations of the ring. The witnesses before the Grand Jury told in substance the following story:

By means of corrupted notaries, two of them in San Francisco and one in Portland, Ore.; by the bribing of Forest Superintendent Allen and others in the West, including Registers and Receivers of Land Offices and State officials, and the bribing in addition of employes of the General Land Office in Washington, the plans of the land grabbers were accomplished and kept running smoothly for several years. If the operators had not over-reached themselves in their greed they might have been working still. Their method was as follows:

Through their spies in the General Land Office the ring obtained information regarding large tracts of land suitable for forest reservation purposes. This land was then ostensibly entered upon by dummies whose names were obtained by the ring from a division superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company and from land officers and others. The affidavits of entry, proof of occupation of the land and other requirements establishing apparent claim to the lands were perfected by the notaries bribed by the operators.

Forest Superintendent Allen signed these letters, and they were forwarded to Commissioner Hermann of the General Land Office. Hermann approved them and they then went to the Secretary of the Interior, who accepted Hermann's recommendation without question and sent the executive order to the President for his signature.

By means of information furnished by crooked land officers the ring had its pick of the best lands, and thus acquired forest lands worth $50 per acre in exchange for forest reserve lands that had cost them $2.50 per acre.

Valk, Harlan and the third employe bribed by Benson and Hyde, are still at work in the Interior Department. Valk, however, was transferred from the Division of Forestry by Secretary Hitchcock in 1902, at the suggestion of Assistant Commissioner Richards of the General Land Office. Commissioner Hermann was absent at the time.

Forest Superintendent Allen has been before the Grand Jury and made a clean breast of his part in the conspiracy. He admitted that he was entirely in the power of Hyde and Benson. Allen told the jury that he had received less than $1000 from the conspirators for his share. It is understood that immunity from prosecution has been promised to him for his confession.

PUTS ALL BLAME ON JAPAN.

Russia Makes a Statement Regarding the Negotiations.

London, England.—The Russian version of the negotiations with Japan before the rupture is published. It says that in 1903 Japan proposed to Russia a revision of existing treaties with regard to Korea. Russia consented and asked Admiral Alexieff to draw up a new scheme. The statement recites the negotiations with regard to this, wherein Japan made demands not only as to Korea, but as to Manchuria, to which demands Russia was unable to assent. Nevertheless, Russia did not refuse to recognize, while the occupation of Manchuria lasted, the sovereignty of China or the privileges the Powers had acquired there by treaties with China. This statement proceeds:

"In view of this, Russia was justified, while charging Baron Rosen to present its reply and last proposals to Japan, in expecting that the Japanese Government would take into account the above facts and appreciate Russia's desire to come to a peaceful understanding. Instead of this, Japan did not even await the receipt of the reply, but decided to break off the negotiations and suspend diplomatic relations with Russia. The Imperial Government, while laying on Japan the full responsibility for the consequences of such action, will await the development of events and at the necessary moment will take decisive measures for the protection of her rights and interests in the Far East."

TO END ANARCHY.

United States Navy to Use Force to Protect American Interests.

Washington, D. C. — Drastic measures will be taken by this Government to end the anarchy in San Domingo. Continued violation of international law, destruction of American property and disregard of foreign interests have convinced officials that affairs there can be best improved by force.

Its handling has been turned over to the navy, and Secretary Moody is sending supplementary instructions to Rear-Admiral Wise, commanding the training squadron, now in Dominican waters, giving him wide latitude in the course he is to follow.

Statistics just given out by the Department of Commerce and Labor show that while our total trade with the world outside has increased about 50 percent in the last ten years, our commerce with Neighbor Canada alone has doubled itself. Our 1903 trade with the Dominion is $185,000,000.

Cable advices have been received by the California Fruit Growers' association that their shipment of canned goods, shipped on the steamer Coptic a month ago and consigned to Port Arthur, had been seized by the Japaneze government at Nagasaki.

The Korean government has granted Japan the right to traverse the country. It is said that Japanese war ships have trapped three Russian ships off Yongampho. No details regarding the result of this naval exploit have been received.

The Russian second-class cruiser Boyarin was blown up by a mine February 13th in the same maner as was the Russian torpedo boat Yenisei. She had on board 197 officers and men, of which it is understood all were lost.

The cruisers Nisshin and Kasuga have arrived safely at Yokosaga. These two vessels were recently purchased from the Argentine republic.

The Russian consulate at Shanghai, China, was destroyed by fire Sunday night.

Upon the heels of the announcement from St. Petersburg that Russia will abandon her proposed exhibit at the Louisiana Purchase exposition it is announced that every foot of exhibit space that is given up by Russia will be applied for by Japan.

It is said that 400 torpedoes or two-thirds of Russia's supply, were blown up on the ill-fated Variag.

Japan has landed 120,000 men in Korea.

Economical Feed For Hogs.

Prof. Kennedy says about economical hog feeding: Where the hogs have a liberal ration of clover pasture and blue grass, with a ration of corn, wheat and oats mixed, of about two parts corn, two parts wheat and two parts oats with eight per cent. oil meal, fed in the form of a thick slop, it will give most excellent results. This will give extra heavy gains, but will not be as economical as a ration which will make heavy gains and is at the same time economical, of four parts cornmeal and one part tankage, fed in the form of a thick slop. This is considered one of the best by him.—Tribune Farmer.

Draining.

The work of draining and ditching land needing this should now receive attention. In putting in drains see that they are put in deep enough. No drain should be less than three feet deep, and three feet six inches or four feet is often better. It is not the water that falls on the surface that needs to be gotten away, but that which is stagnant below the surface. Make provisions for this and that which falls on the surface will do no harm. See that drains have sufficient fall to clear themselves quickly, and that a good open outfall is secured. In draining a hillside do not run the drains around the hill. Put in this way they will draw the water from both sides of the drain, whilst a drain run around a hill will only take water from one side.

Rations For Poultry.

Even the novice in poultry raising who has tried feeding considerable variety during the winter admits that the egg production is thereby materially increased. The one danger in feeding a variety of grains is having too many of them of a fattening nature. In this grade come corn, oats and buckwheat, hence when corn must compose the main portion of the ration it is best that oats or buckwheat be fed only once or twice a week, using wheat and millet to extend the ration. This, of course, refers to laying hens. Taking the grains named as a basis of feeding, a good course would be something like this: Monday, mash in the morning, millet in the litter at noon, crushed oats at night; Wednesday, mash in the morning, buckwheat in the litter at noon, corn at night; Thursday, mash in the morning, millet at noon, wheat at night; Friday, morning mash, noon wheat, night corn; Saturday, morning mash, corn at noon, wheat at night; Sunday, morning mash, wheat at noon, corn at night. If one is in the habit of feeding the warm mash at night, then the morning and night foods are simply reversed. It will be noticed that corn is fed at night four times during the week, and this is done because corn will keep the fowls warmer on a cold night than any other grain. It will pay to experiment somewhat in feeding a variety of grains and see what combinations give the best results.—Indianapolis News.

Paints For Farm Buildings.

Few things are more pleasing to see in any section of country than well painted farm buildings. They are indicative of content and thrift and, even though not always up to date, testify that the owners are in love with their surroundings. But not every farmer can afford to buy patent paints, much less oil and lead, for their barns and outbuildings. This, of course, is lamentable, for any structure should be painted before showing that it needs it badly, one coat of paint then doing better and being far more economical than two coats later, when the surface has become very dry and porous. It is claimed, in fact, that a single coat of boiled linseed oil applied to the paint when it first begins to fade will suffice at that period, and this, restoring both color and texture, make the surface as good as ever. According, under such a system of treatment, it is advisable to put on, in the first place, three coats of the best paint obtainable. It should be done, moreover, in cold weather, under which conditions it will wear a third longer than when put on in warm or hot weather. It is generally a waste of money to purchase cheap patent paints for any purpose whatever. If first-class ones are not to be had therefore, simply don't buy any but try the following mixture: Fill a tub two-thirds full of skim sweet milk and stir in water lime until it is partly thickened. Color it with Venetian red, chrome yellow or the like, as desired, and put it on with a wide brush, rubbing it in some. Keeping it well stirred both in the pail and tub to prevent the lime from settling and leaving the milk too thin; the object is to have it of such consistency that the grain of the wood will show through when putting it on. It should be more of a stain than a thick paint, in which case one can go over a large building with it in a day, hence the cost of it is so small that if a new coat were required every year it would still be less expensive than the application of oil and lead. Happily, however, it will last several years, and has been known, on a rough surface, to endure the wear and tear of the elements to some extent for almost half a century.—Fred O. Sibley, in The Epitomist.

Making a Dry Bordeaux Powder.

The use of a dust spray, which has been adopted quite largely in orchard sections in Missouri and other portions of the Central West, has been referred to frequently in these columns. Considerable difficulty has been experienced in obtaining a dry bordeaux mixture which will have the same chemical proportions as the liquid bordeaux. Professor R. M. Bird, acting chemist of the Missouri experiment station, has succeeded in making a dry bordeaux powder which contains the copper in the same chemical state as in liquid bordeaux. In a recent bulletin he explains how it is made.

The materials necessary to make seventy pounds of the stock powder are four pounds copper sulphate, four pounds good quicklime, two and a half gallons water in which to dissolve the copper sulphate, two and a half gallons water, which is to be applied to the quicklime, and sixty pounds air-slaked lime, which has been sifted fine.

Break up into small lumps seventy or eighty pounds of quicklime and spread it out so that it will become air-slaked. When slaked and perfectly dry sift it through a fine sieve of 100 meshes to the inch. Put the copper sulphate in a coarse bag and hang it in the two and a half gallons water until dissolved. Pour gradually two and a half gallons water over four pounds good quicklime in such a manner as to slake it to the finest powder, and give a good milk of lime solution.

BOX FOR SIFTING LIME.

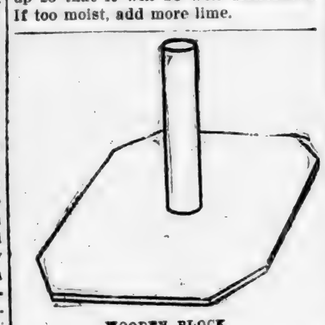
Put sixty pounds air-slaked lime in a shallow box where it can be worked over with a hoe. Pour the milk of lime and copper sulphate into a third vessel, and stir until thoroughly mixed, when it will have a deep blue color and be thick. Put this immediately into a double flour bag filter, squeeze out most of the water, and empty the wet blue material at once into the sixty pounds of air-slaked lime, and work it up so that it will be well distributed. If too moist, add more lime.



WOODEN BLOCK.

While still somewhat damp rub through a coarse sieve, Fig. 1, made of stout wire gauze, having twenty-five to thirty meshes to the inch, using the wooden block, Fig. 3, to rub it through if necessary; the sifter fits over a box, Fig. 2, which is about 3x3x3 feet. Then spread the material out to dry, and when perfectly dry sift through a fine mesh sieve, crushing all lumps. All except the sand, which is in the four pounds quicklime, should go through the fine sieve.

This mixture will keep indefinitely, and contains about three and a third times as much copper per gallon as is contained in liquid bordeaux. It may be diluted with powdered lime or flour, or may be used in this way. If 130 pounds of air-slaked lime or an equal volume of flour is added to seventy pounds of the stock powder, it will have practically the same copper strength as the 4-4-50 bordeaux mixture.

Insecticides such as paris green may be added in the form of powder in the proper proportions. The usual method of preparing a dust spray by slaking the lime with a strong solution of copper sulphate changes the chemical form of the copper to an oxide so that it does not stick as well to the leaves, nor prove as effective as a fungicide.

Dairy Notes.

As a rule large, fat globules make the best butter.

Cream rises best when the temperature is falling.

A good cow does not, as a rule, eat but little more than a poor one.

The dairy cow should not have to travel a long distance for water.

Have you arranged to keep your cows comfortable in winter? Feed is costly fuel, but it should be burned to keep the cows warm if they are kept in a cold stable.

A cow is different from a child in that she can never be spoiled by too much petting. Speak softly, milk gently and she becomes at once your profitable friend.

One advantage with the separator is that all animal matter, dirt and impurities are removed from the milk, and will be found sticking to the outer wall of the bowl.

A good way to increase the value of your dairy is to persuade your careless neighbor to do better. In order to accomplish this induce him to subscribe for a good dairy paper.

Trouble is the price of success in making good butter, and without it the dairyman will make neither good butter nor a good reputation as a butter maker. Have the utensils sweet and absolutely clean.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

A BEAUTIFUL DISCOURSE BY THE REV. C. D. CASE, PH. D.

Subject: "The Limit of Endeavor"—How Much Dare You Attempt For God?—He Gives Grace Both For Living and Dying—Activities For True Christians.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The Rev. C. D. Case, Ph. D., formerly of the First Baptist Church, Montclair, N. J., preached on Sunday his first sermon as pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist Church. His subject was "The Limit of Endeavor." Dr. Case said:

In the fourth century of the Christian era the Goths, numbering nearly one million people, men, women and children, came down to the Danube, at that time swollen by many rains, to escape to the other side. A large fleet of boats and canoes had been provided, and for several days and nights work went on incessantly. Yet notwithstanding the most earnest care scores were swept away in the flood.

Centuries before this remarkable occurrence another vast horde of men, women and children came down to another swollen stream. By count there were over 600,000 warriors over twenty years of age, and the entire host numbered about 2,000,000. The valley into which they descended was of peculiar formation. The outer valley was six miles and over in width, but there was an inner valley or ravine a half mile and over in width, and still within this was the river itself varying from twenty to sixty yards in width. But this river, too, had been swollen by many rains and the melting snows farther up its course, and now had overrun its usual banks and was rushing along with rapidity.

Strangely enough no boats had been prepared for the crossing of this host, and yet, as events proved, not one of the host was lost in the crossing. Evidently there was some vast distinction to be made between these two great hosts of antiquity. What was that distinction? May it not be this, the words that Isaiah uses in the forty-third chapter and second verse, which may be considered the text of this sermon:

"When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee."

On the part of the Israelites in their crossing of the Jordan some special preparation was needed, but not in the procuring of boats. The commander of the army had sent messengers throughout the host, and commanded all to sanctify themselves, which meant the washing of garments and the abstaining from all that might distract the mind. Similarly Moses had once commanded the people to sanctify themselves to-day and to-morrow, and to wash their garments and be ready against the third day; for the third day Jehovah Himself would come down in the sight of all the people on Mount Sinai.

It was a critical moment for the hosts of Israel. To fail now meant to fail forever. To succeed now meant a promise for the future. "Hereby ye shall know," said Joshua, "that the living God is among you and that He will without fail drive out from before you" the inhabitants of the land. What a nation or a man achieves through God-given strength to-day is an assurance for victory for to-morrow. Success is a handmaid of assurance. "Ye have not passed this way before," said Joshua; a new leaf in national history had been turned; a new territory invaded.

A new endeavor with the Israelitish army as with us to-day needed special guidance. The sacred ark was to precede the people, but far enough in advance to be seen by all that "ye may know," said the leader, "the way by which ye must go." Reverence is needed for divine things, but divine guidance more. The pillar of fire and the cloud is now superseded by the ark, and it in turn superseded by the Christ, who said to all disciples, "Follow Me." In each case the command is not to make the Guide follow you, but you the Guide.

Five miles over the river is a walled city. Thousands are watching from the walls the foolhardy attempt of the disordered hosts. One person, however, alone upon the wall, unnoticed by the many, is looking down with expectancy. That one is Rahab. She watches eagerly as the priests bearing the ark by the poles step with measured tread down to the river, wonders as nothing happens, starts as the priests seen actually at the very edge, but at last her hopes are realized, as the rushing current is stayed by some unseen force and rolls up in a mighty wall, while below the waters hurry away until the last streamlets trickle down over the stones and leave land for the passage of the army.

What, after all, is the limit of endeavor? Evidently not reason alone if at all. That Israelite who stays behind and watches the foolish performance from the hill side paces back and forth in his disgust. Such a foolish waste of life! Such a spectacular display. Will Joshua never be done with such undertakings? Any one might know that that motley herd could not be gotten safely across that boiling stream. No boats, no possibility of wading, or even swimming—it simply can't be done. But watch. It is done. I heard a teacher in a certain normal school read in class for the correction of professor and student what she would say to a class of boys and girls about the crossing of the Red Sea by the Israelites. A strong east wind, she said, blew the water down the sea until the Israelites could wade across, and then when the Egyptians came up the wind had changed and drowned all of the Egyptians in the passage. "And what do you suppose," said the would-be teacher, "the people thought that God made the waters to go back." That's science for you. But, by the way, such science is a little out of date. Even Huxley declared that Hume's argument against miracles was unscientific since he maintained as a premise that nothing miraculous or supernatural could occur. As far as science is concerned it is not necessary for us to determine whether a thing is miraculous or not, the question is, did the event occur, and if so, can we find a cause?

Nor is the extent of one's own power an adequate limit to one's endeavor. "Give ye them to eat," said Christ. Impossible. There are 5000 men beside women and children. It would take an average man's life's savings to feed them. We have, in fact, enough to give a few men a little to sustain them, a paltry five loaves and two fishes, but what are they among so many. Ability says, We cannot feed them. Christ says, Arrange them in groups; make ready.

What, then, are the limits of endeavor? One limit is certainly God's command. The Lord commands and the host proceeds and the deed is done. The Bible teems with commands. Are they becoming useless? Has the Bible yet become an obsolete text book? Does it need revision? Some commands appear out-dated; some foolish; some difficult to obey. Yet what He commands He will give strength to perform, and the word of Cana is the word to-day. Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.

But there is another limit, which is still farther to the horizon of life, the limit of God's promises. God's promises are in Him yea and amen. Some one has said that God's promises are the Lord's branches hanging over the water, that our Lord's silly, half-drowned children may take a grip of them. Rather are they glimpses of the mountain top, inspiring the traveler to mount the heights that he may see the heavenly realms beyond. Yet all of God's promises have expressed or implied conditions. Something must be done by us in regard to His commands. Does He say, "I will give thee a crown of life?" He also says, "If thou art faithful unto death." Does He say, "Thou shalt be saved?" He also says, "If you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Does He say that He will come in unto us and make His abode with us? He makes us the condition, that we open the door. Does He declare that we shall bear much fruit? He also makes us the condition that we shall abide in Him.

What, then, shall we do in the face of God's commands and promises which thus set the limit to our endeavor? Certainly accept the limit, and be satisfied with no less. A command means a duty, and a promise a privilege. The Christian life is easy not by trying nothing but what seems easy, not by failing gracefully with the hope that God's favor will pardon our neglect, not by thinking that His commands and promises are not really for us, but by agreeing with General Armstrong: "What are the Christians in the world for but to do the impossible?" But in accepting the high ideal the soul must as certainly accept the complementary conclusion that all strength is of God. Power belongeth unto God. Our sufficiency is of God. Some people act as if God had been deposed. John's three words are light, life and love; Paul's are grace, faith and power. It is by the grace of God. His unmerited favor, reached by faith, a complete trust in Him, that we obtain the power of God. And what power! When Paul had reached the lowest depths of Romans, the seventh chapter, and sees that he must sin, and exclaims pathetically, Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? he can only answer himself with humility and rejoicing, I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Watch the repetition. "Power," "in the power of the Holy Spirit," "in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power," "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us;" "that ye may know what is the exceeding greatness of His power to upward who believe according to that working of His might which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and made Him to sit at His right hand in heavenly places."

But power comes through faith. Watch the priests as they put their feet in the brink of that swollen stream. What confidence. How did you know what was going to happen? Some say that as we grow older we gain more wisdom and therefore need not accept less and less the revelation by faith. Great theologians according to this might live with very little faith. In much the same spirit it is supposed by many that as we obtain more and more strength we need less and less of divine interposition and have less and less need of faith. But "let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." As long as we live on this earth there will be new territory of wisdom and power to reach, and new Jordans to cross. We cannot, Paul declares, in Galatians, begin by faith and then be perfected in the flesh. Faith as the stretching out of the hand toward Christ must always be a Christian's privilege.

Take your own condition, if you are not a Christian. If you join a lodge you make up your mind after examination that you can keep all of the requirements of the constitution and pledges. You know your own ability and strength. But when you come to Christ, you do not begin by saying, Can I or can I not hold out to the end, taking into consideration the powers that I now possess. Rather you say, He has promised to keep that which I commit unto Him, and therefore I shall hold out. You will make the conclusion of Charles G. Finney as he went out into the woods engaged in a life and death struggle with the Holy Spirit. The voice was saying, "Will you accept now—to-day?" He went out determined to give his heart to Christ before he came out, and he did. But it was a promise which he laid hold of. That promise was: "Ye shall seek Me and find Me when ye shall search for Me with all your heart." His answering faith said: "Lord, Thou canst not lie; I take Thee at Thy word; I do search with all my heart and I know therefore that I have found Thee." And as he continued in prayer the peace of God came into his heart.

Then there are commands and promises connected with your burdens. Christ said, "Do not worry over the morrow." Can we keep from worry? You have read again and again the words, "Cast thy burden on the Lord and He will sustain thee," but note that the margin of the revised version says as the other reading for "thy burden" "that which He hath given thee," and also notice that God sustains not the burden but "thee." Cast upon God what He has given you to bear and He will bear—thee, and in bearing thee the burden will be a blessing, not a curse.

Is prayer a farce? Or can the limit of endeavor in prayer be also God's promises? "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, it shall be done unto you." Christ declared to the disciples as they had stood helpless before the demoniac boy, "This kind cometh not forth save by prayer." Beyond the reaches of human strength and wisdom is the domain of prayer-achievement. Dr. David Gregg when he was pastor in Boston presided at the fiftieth anniversary of Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, long of Constantinople. In the year 1851 Mahmoud had issued an edict ordering the expulsion of all missionaries from the empire. The British and American ambassadors told them that they must go. William Godell replied to Hamlin's statement, "Hamlin, the Sultan of Heaven can change this; let us appeal to Him in prayer." Together, like Hezekiah of old, they spread the edict before the Lord and prayed all night. The next day Mahmoud died and the edict was never mentioned. Robert College is the monument of the work of Dr. Hamlin.

You, to-day, are thinking especially of the work before you. How much dare you attempt for God? We must often begin our duty before we feel conscious of the strength. But God gives grace for living and dying both and always when we need it. Thank God, we are co-workers with Him, which means vastly more than that we are engaged in the same work or the same kind of work. Christ said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," showing that He was simply carrying out the work which His Father was doing. But He also said, "My Father, which worketh in Me, He doeth the work." So we mean when we say that we are co-workers with God, more than that we are doing God's work, but that He Himself is in us "working in us both to will and do of His good pleasure." Professor Peabody, of Harvard, declares that there are three classes that make problems for us in society, the "can't-works," the aged, sick and defective, who must receive gentle and continuous consideration; the "out-of-works," able to work, but temporarily unemployed; the "won't works," the professionally idle, vagrant, mendicant poor.

In the church there are but two classes to make problems; for there are no "can't works," as every one who cannot take a Sunday-school class or do some other church service, does work by Christian testimony and Christian living; first, the "out-of-works," who are willing to work but cannot find employment, and for this neglect the church is responsible; and second, the "won't works," and God pity the church that has many of them. Let us rather be the "can works," the "in works," the "will works."

And does some one ask what are the prospects of success? Let them listen to Adoniram Judson, as he says, "Tell them as much as there is an Almighty and a faithful God, who will perform His promises, and no more." Let us believe that we have but two limits to all of our endeavors, God's commands and God's promises.

A Holy Ministry.

It is life itself, sanctified life, that is God's holiest and most effective ministry in this world—pure, sweet, patient, earnest, unselfish, loving life. It is not so much what we do in this world as what we are, that tells in spiritual results and impressions. A good life is like a flower which, though it neither toil nor spin, yet ever pours out a rich perfume and thus performs a holy ministry.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

FRAUDS IN A BALE OF HAY.

Frauds in Watch Cases.

According to an article in the Cincinnati Commercial, a fifty-one pound stone was recently found in that city secreted in a bale of hay of eighty pounds.

This is not as bad as finding a lump of lead of nearly one-half the weight of the solid gold watch case secreted in the centre of the case.

Gold watch cases are sold by weight, and no one can see where this lead is secreted until the springs of the case are taken out and the lead will be found secreted behind them.

These cases are made by companies who profess to be honest, but furnish the means to the dishonest to rob the public. It is not pleasant for anyone to find that he has lugged a lump of lead in his watch case.

Another trick of the makers of spurious solid gold watch cases is to stamp the case "U. S. Assay." The United States does not stamp any article made out of gold and silver except coin, and the fakir, by using this stamp, wants to make the public believe that the Government had something to do with the stamping or guaranteeing the fineness of watch cases.

Another trick of the watch fakir is to advertise a watch described as a solid gold filled watch with a twenty or twenty-five-year guarantee. These watches are generally sent C. O. D., and if the purchaser has paid for the watch he finds that the company which guaranteed the watch to wear is not in existence.

The Dueber-Hampden Watch Company, of Canton, Ohio, who are constantly exposing these frauds, will furnish the names of the manufacturers who are in this questionable business.

NOVELS TO ORDER.

How the Five and Ten Cent Thrillers Are Made.

The task of putting into readable shape stirring tales about Jesse James, Alkali Pete, Gentleman Jim, Wild Bill, the Gold King, the Boy Detective and other heroes whose exploits thrill small boys, is not done by writers of the same heroic and fire-eating type as the characters portrayed. Men who write such stories need principally a fertile imagination, a capacity for hard work and the ability to turn out thousands of words of readable stuff a day to make them successful.

They have never rescued imperiled maidens, tracked Indians and murderers over deserts and mountain trails, or recovered lost fortunes. Many of them have never seen a live Indian or cowboy, have a bare speaking acquaintance with the detectives at headquarters, and carry no six-shooters in their back pockets.

More than one dime novel publishing firm has made a fortune at the business of providing literature for Young America, and that in the days when they paid a writer from $75 to $250 for a story. Things are done differently now.

Each dime-novel publishing house employs a staff of writers, who receive a regular salary. Besides the staff of regular contributors, persons who can be depended upon to turn in a fixed amount of copy every week, each publishing house has a list of workers who can write a story to order and at short notice.

When a regular writer falls ill or takes a vacation, or when some special event happens which makes a foundation for a plot for a popular novel, one of these special writers is communicated with and is ordered to dash off a story on three or four days' notice. Inspiration forms a small part of the dime-novel writer's stock in trade, for nearly all his stories are written to order. In these cases the writer follows a plot suggested by the publisher, and does not even select the title.

It is said that regular writers of dime novels, men who do no other kind of work, are able to produce a story of from 40,000 to 50,000 words a week, and to keep it up for six months in the year. The writer cannot attempt to think out his plot and arrange the events in the hero's life before sitting down to write, as that would take too long.—Buffalo News.

Why should not justice be just as swift and sure in the United States as in Great Britain? inquires the Chicago Tribune. Why should there be more homicides in this country in a month than there are in England in a year? Is it not because justice is so slow here that criminals have a reasonable hope it will not overtake them at all, or, if it does, that it may not harm them when caught.

Washing

Freedom's Greatest Chieftain

Career of Washington as a Young Man, an Indian Fighter, a Lover, a General and a Statesman. -:- -:- -:-

It has been said of George Washington, as of Lamartine, that he had no youth; he was born a man.

His active career began at the age of sixteen, and for three years he served the Fairfax family, of Belvoir, as surveyor of their vast estates on the far side of the Blue Ridge. In this work he had the first taste of the forest wilds. He swam rivers, climbed mountains, waded morasses and blazed pathways; he lived on rude and scanty fare, with the screech of the wildcat in his ears. In the heart of the savage Indians' country he slept on a bed of branches or pillowed upon his faithful horse. Every day he faced death.

At the age of nineteen Washington was already a marked man. Signs appeared of a French and Indian war. The stripling was chosen major of the Virginia troops. Within two years he became commander of the northern military district of Virginia.

AS A SURVEYOR

When the Virginians determined to drive the French from the Ohio Valley they placed a regiment in command of Washington. Thus began the military career of Washington. Although but a youth, inexperienced in warfare, he had displayed the qualities of a true commander.

THE GALLANT LEADING THE MINUET

AS AN INDIAN FIGHTER

With all the daring and hardihood of Washington he had the modesty of a girl. When the Virginia Legislature offered a vote of thanks to him for his gallant services, Washington stood before them speechless with embarrassment. But his nature had a soft side. He loved companionship, gaiety and mirth, he reveled in the dance and fell a willing prey to the charms of lovely women. At length he met his fate in the young and pretty widow of Daniel Parke Custis.

As a boy Washington learned the

AGRICULTURAL.

Economical Feed For Hogs.

Prof. Kennedy says about economical hog feeding: Where the hogs have a liberal ration of clover pasture and blue grass, with a ration of corn, wheat and oats mixed, of about two parts corn, two parts wheat and two parts oats with eight per cent. oil meal, fed in the form of a thick slop, it will give most excellent results. This will give extra heavy gains, but will not be as economical as a ration which will make heavy gains and is at the same time economical, of four parts cornmeal and one part tankage, fed in the form of a thick slop. This is considered one of the best by him.—Tribune Farmer.

Draining.

The work of draining and ditching land needing this should now receive attention. In putting in drains see that they are put in deep enough. No drain should be less than three feet deep, and three feet six inches or four feet is often better. It is not the water that falls on the surface that needs to be gotten away, but that which is stagnant below the surface. Make provisions for this and that which falls on the surface will do no harm. See that drains have sufficient fall to clear themselves quickly, and that a good open outfall is secured. In draining a hillside do not run the drains around the hill. Put in this way they will draw the water from both sides of the drain, whilst a drain run around a hill will only take water from one side.

Rations For Poultry.

Even the novice in poultry raising who has tried feeding considerable variety during the winter admits that the egg production is thereby materially increased. The one danger in feeding a variety of grains is having too many of them of a fattening nature. In this grade come corn, oats and buckwheat, hence when corn must compose the main portion of the ration it is best that oats or buckwheat be fed only once or twice a week, using wheat and millet to extend the ration. This, of course, refers to laying hens. Taking the grains named as a basis of feeding, a good course would be something like this: Monday, mash in the morning, millet in the litter at noon, crushed oats at night; Wednesday, mash in the morning, buckwheat in the litter at noon, corn at night; Thursday, mash in the morning, millet at noon, wheat at night; Friday, morning mash, noon wheat, night corn; Saturday, morning mash, corn at noon, wheat at night; Sunday, morning mash, wheat at noon, corn at night. If one is in the habit of feeding the warm mash at night, then the morning and night foods are simply reversed. It will be noticed that corn is fed at night four times during the week, and this is done because corn will keep the fowls warmer on a cold night than any other grain. It will pay to experiment somewhat in feeding a variety of grains and see what combinations give the best results.—Indianapolis News.

Paints For Farm Buildings.

Few things are more pleasing to see in any section of country than well painted farm buildings. They are indicative of content and thrift and, even though not always up to date, testify that the owners are in love with their surroundings. But not every farmer can afford to buy patent paints, much less oil and lead, for their barns and outbuildings. This, of course, is lamentable, for any structure should be painted before showing that it needs it badly, one coat of paint then doing better and being far more economical than two coats later, when the surface has become very dry and porous. It is claimed, in fact, that a single coat of boiled linseed oil applied to the paint when it first begins to fade will suffice at that period, and this, restoring both color and texture, make the surface as good as ever. According, under such a system of treatment, it is advisable to put on, in the first place, three coats of the best paint obtainable. It should be done, moreover, in cold weather, under which conditions it will wear a third longer than when put on in warm or hot weather. It is generally a waste of money to purchase cheap patent paints for any purpose whatever. If first-class ones are not to be had therefore, simply don't buy any but try the following mixture: Fill a tub two-thirds full of skim sweet milk and stir in water lime until it is partly thickened. Color it with Venetian red, chrome yellow or the like, as desired, and put it on with a wide brush, rubbing it in some. Keeping it well stirred both in the pail and tub to prevent the lime from settling and leaving the milk too thin; the object is to have it of such consistency that the grain of the wood will show through when putting it on. It should be more of a stain than a thick paint, in which case one can go over a large building with it in a day, hence the cost of it is so small that if a new coat were required every year it would still be less expensive than the application of oil and lead. Happily, however, it will last several years, and has been known, on a rough surface, to endure the wear and tear of the elements to some extent for almost half a century.—Fred O. Sibley, in The Epitomist.

Making a Dry Bordeaux Powder.

The use of a dust spray, which has been adopted quite largely in orchard sections in Missouri and other portions of the Central West, has been referred to frequently in these columns. Considerable difficulty has been experienced in obtaining a dry bordeaux mixture which will have the same chemical proportions as the liquid bordeaux. Professor R. M. Bird, acting chemist of the Missouri experiment station, has succeeded in making a dry bordeaux powder which contains the copper in the same chemical state as in liquid bordeaux. In a recent bulletin he explains how it is made.

The materials necessary to make seventy pounds of the stock powder are four pounds copper sulphate, four pounds good quicklime, two and a half gallons water in which to dissolve the copper sulphate, two and a half gallons water, which is to be applied to the quicklime, and sixty pounds air-slaked lime, which has been sifted fine.

Break up into small lumps seventy or eighty pounds of quicklime and spread it out so that it will become air-slaked. When slaked and perfectly dry sift it through a fine sieve of 100 meshes to the inch. Put the copper sulphate in a coarse bag and hang it in the two and a half gallons water until dissolved. Pour gradually two and a half gallons water over four pounds good quicklime in such a manner as to slake it to the finest powder, and give a good milk of lime solution.

BOX FOR SIFTING LIME.

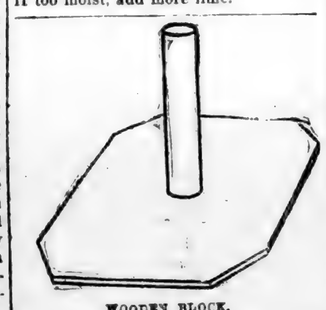
Put sixty pounds air-slaked lime in a shallow box where it can be worked over with a hoe. Pour the milk of lime and copper sulphate into a third vessel, and stir until thoroughly mixed, when it will have a deep blue color and be thick. Put this immediately into a double flour bag filter, squeeze out most of the water, and empty the wet blue material at once into the sixty pounds of air-slaked lime, and work it up so that it will be well distributed. If too moist, add more lime.



WOODEN BLOCK.

While still somewhat damp rub through a coarse sieve, Fig. 1, made of stout wire gauze, having twenty-five to thirty meshes to the inch, using the wooden block, Fig. 3, to rub it through if necessary; the sifter fits over a box, Fig. 2, which is about 3x3x3 feet. Then spread the material out to dry, and when perfectly dry sift through a fine mesh sieve, crushing all lumps. All except the sand, which is in the four pounds quicklime, should go through the fine sieve.

This mixture will keep indefinitely, and contains about three and a third times as much copper per gallon as is contained in liquid bordeaux. It may be diluted with powdered lime or flour, or may be used in this way. If 130 pounds of air-slaked lime or an equal volume of flour is added to seventy pounds of the stock powder, it will have practically the same copper strength as the 4-4-50 bordeaux mixture.

Insecticides such as paris green may be added in the form of powder in the proper proportions. The usual method of preparing a dust spray by slaking the lime with a strong solution of copper sulphate changes the chemical form of the copper to an oxide so that it does not stick as well to the leaves, nor prove as effective as a fungicide.

Dairy Notes.

As a rule large, fat globules make the best butter.

Cream rises best when the temperature is falling.

A good cow does not, as a rule, eat but little more than a poor one.

The dairy cow should not have to travel a long distance for water.

Have you arranged to keep your cows comfortable in winter? Feed is costly fuel, but it should be burned to keep the cows warm if they are kept in a cold stable.

A cow is different from a child in that she can never be spoiled by too much petting. Speak softly, milk gently and she becomes at once your profitable friend.

One advantage with the separator is that all animal matter, dirt and impurities are removed from the milk, and will be found sticking to the outer wall of the bowl.

A good way to increase the value of your dairy is to persuade your careless neighbor to do better. In order to accomplish this induce him to subscribe for a good dairy paper.

Trouble is the price of success in making good butter, and without it the dairyman will make neither good butter nor a good reputation as a butter maker. Have the utensils sweet and absolutely clean.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

A BEAUTIFUL DISCOURSE BY THE REV. C. D. CASE, PH. D.

Subject: "The Limit of Endeavor"—How Much Dare You Attempt For God?—He Gives Grace Both For Living and Dying—Activities For True Christians.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The Rev. C. D. Case, Ph. D., formerly of the First Baptist Church, Montclair, N. J., preached on Sunday his first sermon as pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist Church. His subject was "The Limit of Endeavor." Dr. Case said:

In the fourth century of the Christian era the Goths, numbering nearly one million people, men, women and children, came down to the Danube, at that time swollen by many rains, to escape to the other side. A large fleet of boats and canoes had been provided, and for several days and nights work went on incessantly. Yet notwithstanding the most earnest care scores were swept away in the flood.

Centuries before this remarkable occurrence another vast horde of men, women and children came down to another swollen stream. By count there were over 600,000 warriors over twenty years of age, and the entire host numbered about 2,000,000. The valley into which they descended was of peculiar formation. The outer valley was six miles and over in width, but there was an inner valley or ravine a half mile and over in width, and still within this was the river itself varying from twenty to sixty yards in width. But this river, too, had been swollen by many rains and the melting snows farther up its course, and now had overrun its usual banks and was rushing along with rapidity.

Strangely enough no boats had been prepared for the crossing of this host, and yet, as events proved, not one of the host was lost in the crossing. Evidently there was some vast distinction to be made between these two great hosts of antiquity. What was that distinction? May it not be this, the words that Isaiah uses in the forty-third chapter and second verse, which may be considered the text of this sermon:

"When thou passeth through the waters I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee."

On the part of the Israelites in their crossing of the Jordan some special preparation was needed, but not in the procuring of boats. The commander of the army had sent messengers throughout the host, and commanded all to sanctify themselves, which meant the washing of garments and the abstaining from all that might distract the mind. Similarly Moses had once commanded the people to sanctify themselves to-day and to-morrow, and to wash their garments and be ready against the third day; for the third day Jehovah Himself would come down in the sight of all the people on Mount Sinai.

It was a critical moment for the hosts of Israel. To fail now meant to fail forever. To succeed now meant a promise for the future. "Hereby ye shall know," said Joshua, "that the living God is among you and that He will without fail drive out from before you" the inhabitants of the land. What a nation or a man achieves through God-given strength to-day is an assurrance for victory for to-morrow. Success is a handmaid of assurance. "Ye have not passed this way before," said Joshua; a new leaf in national history had been turned; a new territory invaded.

A new endeavor with the Israelitish army as with us to-day needed special guidance. The sacred ark was to precede the people, but far enough in advance to be seen by all that "ye may know," said the leader, "the way by which ye must go." Reverence is needed for divine things, but divine guidance more. The pillar of fire and the cloud is now superseded by the ark, and it in turn superseded by the Christ, who said to all disciples, "Follow Me." In each case the command is not to make the Guide follow you, but you the Guide.

Five miles over the river is a walled city. Thousands are watching from the walls the foolhardy attempt of the disordered hosts. One person, however, alone upon the wall, unnoticed by the many, is looking down with expectancy. That one is Rahab. She watches eagerly as the priests bearing the ark by the poles step with measured tread down to the river, wonders as nothing happens, starts as the priests seen actually at the very edge, but at last her hopes are realized, as the rushing current is stayed by some unseen force and rolls up in a mighty wall, while below the waters hurry away until the last streamlets trickle down over the stones and leave land for the passage of the army.

What, after all, is the limit of endeavor? Evidently not reason alone if at all. That Israelite who stays behind and watches the foolish performance from the hill side paces back and forth in his disgust. Such a foolish waste of life! Such a spectacular display. Will Joshua never be done with such undertakings? Any one might know that that motley herd could not be gotten safely across that boiling stream. No boats, no possibility of wading, or even swimming—it simply can't be done. But watch. It is done. I heard a teacher in a certain normal school read in class for the correction of professor and student what she would say to a class of boys and girls about the crossing of the Red Sea by the Israelites. A strong east wind, she said, blew the water down the sea until the Israelites could wade across, and then when the Egyptians came up the wind had changed and drowned all of the Egyptians in the passage. "And what do you suppose," said the would-be teacher, "the people thought that God made the waters to go back." That's science for you. But, by the way, such science is a little out of date. Even Huxley declared that Hume's argument against miracles was unscientific since he maintained as a premise that nothing miraculous or supernatural could occur. As far as science is concerned it is not necessary for us to determine whether a thing is miraculous or not, the question is, did the event occur, and if so, can we find a cause?

Nor is the extent of one's own power an adequate limit to one's endeavor. "Give ye them to eat," said Christ. Impossible. There are 5000 men beside women and children. It would take an average man's life's savings to feed them. We have, in fact, enough to give a few men a little to sustain them, a paltry five loaves and two fishes, but what are they among so many. Ability says, We cannot feed them. Christ says, Arrange them in groups; make ready.

What, then, are the limits of endeavor? One limit is certainly God's command. The Lord commands and the host proceeds and the deed is done. The Bible teems with commands. Are they becoming useless? Has the Bible yet become an obsolete text book? Does it need revision? Some commands appear out-dated; some foolish; some difficult to obey. Yet what He commands He will give strength to perform, and the word of Cana is the word to-day. Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it.

But there is another limit, which is still farther to the horizon of life, the limit of God's promises. God's promises are in Him yea and amen. Some one has said that God's promises are the Lord's branches hanging over the water, that our Lord's silly, half-drowned children may take a grip of them. Rather are they glimpses of the mountain top, inspiring the traveler to mount the heights that he may see the heavenly realms beyond. Yet all of God's promises have expressed or implied conditions. Something must be done by us in regard to His commands. Does He say, "I will give thee a crown of life?" He also says, "If thou art faithful unto death." Does He say, "Thou shalt be saved?" He also says, "If you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Does He say that He will come in unto us and make His abode with us? He makes us the condition, that we open the door. Does He declare that we shall bear much fruit? He also makes us the condition that we shall abide in Him.

What, then, shall we do in the face of God's commands and promises which thus set the limit to our endeavor? Certainly accept the limit, and be satisfied with no less. A command means a duty, and a promise a privilege. The Christian life is easy not by trying nothing but what seems easy, not by failing gracefully with the hope that God's favor will pardon our neglect, not by thinking that His commands and promises are not really for us, but by agreeing with General Armstrong: "What are the Christians in the world for but to do the impossible?" But in accepting the high ideal the soul must as certainly accept the complementary conclusion that all strength is of God. Power belongeth unto God. Our sufficiency is of God. Some people act as if God had been deposed. John's three words are light, life and love; Paul's are grace, faith and power. It is by the grace of God. His unmerited favor, reached by faith, a complete trust in Him, that we obtain the power of God. And what power! When Paul had reached the lowest depths of Romans, the seventh chapter, and sees that he must sin, and exclaims pathetically, Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? he can only answer himself with humility and rejoicing, I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Watch the repetition. "Power," "in the power of the Holy Spirit," "in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power," "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think according to the power that worketh in us;" "that ye may know what is the exceeding greatness of His power to upward who believe according to that working of His might which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead, and made Him to sit at His right hand in heavenly places."

But power comes through faith. Watch the priests as they put their feet in the brink of that swollen stream. What confidence. How did you know what was going to happen? Some say that as we grow older we gain more wisdom and therefore need not accept less and less the revelation by faith. Great theologians according to this might live with very little faith. In much the same spirit it is supposed by many that as we obtain more and more strength we need less and less of divine interposition and have less and less need of faith. But "let him that standeth take heed lest he fall." As long as we live on this earth there will be new territory of wisdom and power to reach, and new Jordans to cross. We cannot, Paul declares, in Galatians, begin by faith and then be perfected in the flesh. Faith as the stretching out of the hand toward Christ must always be a Christian's privilege.

Take your own condition, if you are not a Christian. If you join a lodge you make up your mind after examination that you can keep all of the requirements of the constitution and pledges. You know your own ability and strength. But when you come to Christ, you do not begin by saying, Can I or can I not hold out to the end, taking into consideration the powers that I now possess. Rather you say, He has promised to keep that which I commit unto Him, and therefore I shall hold out. You will make the conclusion of Charles G. Finney as he went out into the woods engaged in a life and death struggle with the Holy Spirit. The voice was saying, "Will you accept now—to-day?" He went out determined to give his heart to Christ before he came out, and he did. But it was a promise which he laid hold of. That promise was: "Ye shall seek Me and find Me when ye shall search for Me with all your heart." His answering faith said: "Lord, Thou canst not lie; I take Thee at Thy word; I do search with all my heart and I know therefore that I have found Thee." And as he continued in prayer the peace of God came into his heart.

Then there are commands and promises connected with your burdens. Christ said, "Do not worry over the morrow." Can we keep from worry? You have read again and again the words, "Cast thy burden on the Lord and He will sustain thee," but note that the margin of the revised version says as the other reading for "thy burden" "that which He hath given thee," and also notice that God sustains not the burden but "thee." Cast upon God what He has given you to bear and He will bear—thee, and in bearing thee the burden will be a blessing, not a curse.

Is prayer a farce? Or can the limit of endeavor in prayer be also God's promises? "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, it shall be done unto you." Christ declared to the disciples as they had stood helpless before the demoniac boy, "This kind cometh not forth save by prayer." Beyond the reaches of human strength and wisdom is the domain of prayer-achievement. Dr. David Gregg when he was pastor in Boston presided at the fiftieth anniversary of Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, long of Constantinople. In the year 1851 Mahmoud had issued an edict ordering the expulsion of all missionaries from the empire. The British and American ambassadors told them that they must go. William Godell replied to Hamlin's statement, "Hamlin, the Sultan of Heaven can change this; let us appeal to Him in prayer." Together, like Hezekiah of old, they spread the edict before the Lord and prayed all night. The next day Mahmoud died and the edict was never mentioned. Robert College is the monument of the work of Dr. Hamlin.

You, to-day, are thinking especially of the work before you. How much dare you attempt for God? We must often begin our duty before we feel conscious of the strength. But God gives grace for living and dying both and always when we need it. Thank God, we are co-workers with Him, which means vastly more than that we are engaged in the same work or the same kind of work. Christ said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," showing that He was simply carrying out the work which His Father was doing. But He also said, "My Father, which worketh in Me, He doeth the work." So we mean when we say that we are co-workers with God, more than that we are doing God's work, but that He Himself is in us "working in us both to will and do of His good pleasure." Professor Peabody, of Harvard, declares that there are three classes that make problems for us in society, the "can't-works," the aged, sick and defective, who must receive gentle and continuous consideration; the "out-of-works," able to work, but temporarily unemployed; the "won't works," the professionally idle, vagrant, mendicant poor.

In the church there are but two classes to make problems; for there are no "can't works," as every one who cannot take a Sunday-school class or do some other church service, does work by Christian testimony and Christian living; first, the "out-of-works," who are willing to work but cannot find employment, and for this neglect the church is responsible; and second, the "won't works," and God pity the church that has many of them. Let us rather be the "can works," the "in works," the "will works."

And does some one ask what are the prospects of success? Let them listen to Adoniram Judson, as he says, "Tell them as much as there is an Almighty and a faithful God, who will perform His promises, and no more." Let us believe that we have but two limits to all of our endeavors, God's commands and God's promises.

A Holy Ministry.

It is life itself, sanctified life, that is God's holiest and most effective ministry in this world—pure, sweet, patient, earnest, unselfish, loving life. It is not so much what we do in this world as what we are, that tells in spiritual results and impressions. A good life is like a flower which, though it neither toil nor spin, yet ever pours out a rich perfume and thus performs a holy ministry.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

FRAUDS IN A BALE OF HAY.

Frauds in Watch Cases.

According to an article in the Cincinnati Commercial, a fifty-one pound stone was recently found in that city secreted in a bale of hay of eighty pounds.

This is not as bad as finding a lump of lead of nearly one-half the weight of the solid gold watch case secreted in the centre of the case.

Gold watch cases are sold by weight, and no one can see where this lead is secreted until the springs of the case are taken out and the lead will be found secreted behind them.

These cases are made by companies who profess to be honest, but furnish the means to the dishonest to rob the public. It is not pleasant for anyone to find that he has lugged a lump of lead in his watch case.

Another trick of the makers of spurious solid gold watch cases is to stamp the case "U. S. Assay." The United States does not stamp any article made out of gold and silver except coin, and the fakir, by using this stamp, wants to make the public believe that the Government had something to do with the stamping or guaranteeing the fineness of watch cases.

Another trick of the watch fakir is to advertise a watch described as a solid gold filled watch with a twenty or twenty-five-year guarantee. These watches are generally sent C. O. D., and if the purchaser has paid for the watch he finds that the company which guaranteed the watch to wear is not in existence.

The Dueber-Hampden Watch Company, of Canton, Ohio, who are constantly exposing these frauds, will furnish the names of the manufacturers who are in this questionable business.

NOVELS TO ORDER.

How the Five and Ten Cent Thrillers Are Made.

The task of putting into readable shape stirring tales about Jesse James, Alkali Pete, Gentleman Jim, Wild Bill, the Gold King, the Boy Detective and other heroes whose exploits thrill small boys, is not done by writers of the same heroic and fire-eating type as the characters portrayed. Men who write such stories need principally a fertile imagination, a capacity for hard work and the ability to turn out thousands of words of readable stuff a day to make them successful.

They have never rescued imperiled maidens, tracked Indians and murderers over deserts and mountain trails, or recovered lost fortunes. Many of them have never seen a live Indian or cowboy, have a bare speaking acquaintance with the detectives at headquarters, and carry no six-shooters in their back pockets.

More than one dime novel publishing firm has made a fortune at the business of providing literature for Young America, and that in the days when they paid a writer from $75 to $250 for a story. Things are done differently now.

Each dime-novel publishing house employs a staff of writers, who receive a regular salary. Besides the staff of regular contributors, persons who can be depended upon to turn in a fixed amount of copy every week, each publishing house has a list of workers who can write a story to order and at short notice.

When a regular writer falls ill or takes a vacation, or when some special event happens which makes a foundation for a plot for a popular novel, one of these special writers is communicated with and is ordered to dash off a story on three or four days' notice. Inspiration forms a small part of the dime-novel writer's stock in trade, for nearly all his stories are written to order. In these cases the writer follows a plot suggested by the publisher, and does not even select the title.

It is said that regular writers of dime novels, men who do no other kind of work, are able to produce a story of from 40,000 to 50,000 words a week, and to keep it up for six months in the year. The writer cannot attempt to think out his plot and arrange the events in the hero's life before sitting down to write, as that would take too long.—Buffalo News.

Washington Crossing the Delaware.

Freedom's Greatest Chieftain

Career of Washington as a Young Man, an Indian Fighter, a Lover, a General and a Statesman. -:- -:- -:-

IT has been said of George Washington, as of Lamartine, that he had no youth; he was born a man.

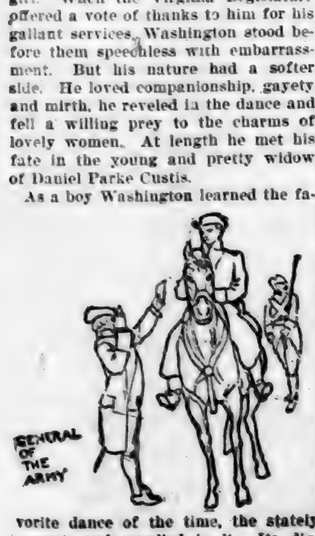
His active career began at the age of sixteen, and for three years he served the Fairfax family, of Belvoir, as surveyor of their vast estates on the far side of the Blue Ridge. In this work he had the first taste of the forest wilds. He swam rivers, climbed mountains, waded morasses and blazed pathways; he lived on rude and scanty fare, with the screech of the wildcat in his ears. In the heart of the savage Indians' country he slept on a bed of branches or pillowed upon his faithful horse. Every day he faced death.

At the age of nineteen Washington was already a marked man. Signs appeared of a French and Indian war. The stripling was chosen major of the Virginia troops. Within two years he became commander of the northern military district of Virginia.

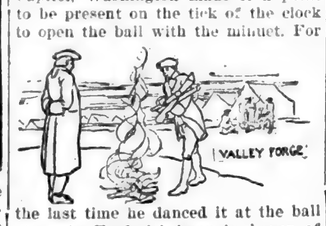
When the Virginians determined to drive the French from the Ohio Valley they placed a regiment in command of Washington. Thus began the military career of Washington. Although but a youth, inexperienced in warfare, he had displayed the qualities of a tried commander.

With all the daring and hardihood of Washington he had the modesty of a girl. When the Virginia Legislature offered a vote of thanks to him for his gallant services Washington stood before them speechless with embarrassment. But his nature had a softer side. He loved companionship, gayety and mirth, he reveled in the dance and fell a willing prey to the charms of lovely women. At length he met his fate in the young and pretty widow of Daniel Parke Custis.

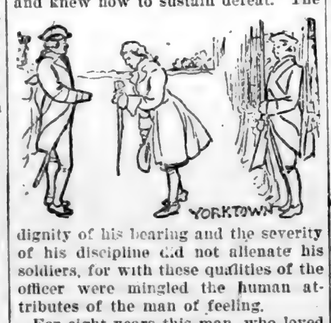
As a boy Washington learned the favorite dance of the time, the stately minuet, and excelled in it. Its dignified and formal movements were in harmony with his temperament, and showed off his fine person to the best advantage.



In his house at Mount Vernon he loved to entertain merry parties with music and the dance, and he would always join in the minuet. After the Revolutionary War, when a yearly birth ball was held in his honor at the Capitol, Washington made it a point to be present on the tick of the clock to open the ball with the minuet. For the last time he danced it at the ball given in Fredericksburg in honor of the French and American officers returned from the Yorktown victories.



As general of the army Washington took command of forces undrilled, unorganized, untaught of war. He welded them into an army of ironsides, who won victories, endured terrific trials and knew how to sustain defeat. The dignity of his bearing and the severity of his discipline did not alienate his soldiers, for with these qualities of the officer were mingled the human attributes of the man of feeling.



For eight years this man, who loved nothing better than the quiet of domestic life, hardly slept a single night when he did not hear the roll of drums.

Frederick the Great said nothing in history could compare with the brilliancy of Washington's Jersey campaign. He classed him as the greatest soldier of all time, and Frederick's fame as a soldier is among the highest.

In all his campaigns the winter spent at Valley Forge was the darkest period for the commander. At the siege of Yorktown the personal courage of the General was amazing. He stood on the parapet, reconnoitring, shot and shell flying thick around him. His officers remonstrated in vain. For two days the earth trembled with the cannonade. Then came the surrender. Mounted on his favorite charger, Washington saw the captive garrison, 8000 strong, file out; but at their head was not Cornwallis. The British Lord sent his sword by a subordinate officer. To offset the affront Washington named a subordinate officer to receive it.

Washington's farewell to the generals has been pictured in song and story. Tears blinded his eyes. The hand that never wavered in battle trembled as he bade them farewell. Then in silence they followed the chief to his barge at the water's edge. Standing erect in it, he raised his hat in mute salute.

Washington became President with reluctance. It was his desire to lead a quiet country life. But again came the people's call. Had he chosen it, this high-born aristocrat might have had a crown; he chose rather to be a farmer than an emperor.

Released from the office of President, he joyfully returned, like Cincinnatus, to his farm. There he found plenty to occupy him in upbuilding a neglected estate. The old round of pleasures and duties was resumed. The history of a day was that of a year. Riding about his lands, entertaining his visitors, writing letters and keeping accounts of every penny, the President, now growing old and somewhat worn, lived from day to day the sort of life he loved.

But once again came the call to arms. When the nation was threatened with war from the old friend and ally, France, it summoned Washington to reconstruct an army. Nor did he refuse. At this time, when weighted with cares and years, in the full enjoyment of his country's gratitude, and when ready to spend happy years in the repose of the country, he died. To him by universal accord has been given the highest title that any man can win, "George Washington, the Father of His Country."

A Mother's Godspeed.

Washington came, unheralded and unannounced, to his mother and informed her that he had been chosen the first President of the United States. He said he had come to bid her farewell and to ask her maternal blessing. His mother replied with deep feeling: "Go, George, and fulfill the destiny which heaven appears to have intended for you. Go, my son, and may God's and a mother's blessing be with you until the end." Washington then knelt by her side, with his head upon her shoulder, deeply affected, and, when he rose, she wiped the tears from his cheeks.

WHERE WASHINGTON PRAYED

AN OLD QUAKER MEETING HOUSE.

It Is at Coatesville, Pa., and the Father of His Country Is Reported to Have Attended Worship There One Sunday in the Year 1777.

The Old West Cain Friends meeting house at Coatesville, Pa., was built in the year 1756. The Friends held their regular meeting till 1811, when they had a split in the congregation, which caused them to divide the meeting house, the Orthodox taking the west side and the Hicksites taking the east. It is said by the old people of the neighborhood that General Washington and his staff attended meeting there one Sunday in 1777. The old graveyard back of the meeting house is very ancient, there being tombstones marked from 1760 to the present.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Washington's English Ancestors.

In the chancel floor of Brington Parish Church, five miles northwest of Northampton, carefully preserved, is a stone, with arms, to Laurence Washington (1616) and his wife. Laurence came of a good old stock (says Young England), of which one scion, in 1532, and again in 1545, was elected Mayor of Northampton. This member of the family was named Laurence, and he had two great-grandsons, named John and Laurence, who lived on the family estates of Sulgrave in Northamptonshire. For some considerable time, indeed until quite recent years (1804), it was accepted that it was these two brothers who had emigrated to Virginia, but in that year it was conclusively proved that it was the children of Laurence who were the emigrants. The pious inscription reads thus: "The Lord geveth, the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord. Constructa 1606." In 1610 the Sulgrave estates were sold, and shortly afterward Laurence Washington left Brington for London, and his younger brother Robert became the tenant of the cottage. The two grandsons of Laurence, John and Laurence, emigrated to America in 1657, and the great-grandson of the two former was the first President of the United States, George Washington.—London St. James' Gazette.

PAULINE HENDRICKS

A Tale of the Revolution

ON a warm afternoon in August, in the year 1776, a young girl stood watching a company of raw militia drilling. She was the daughter of Paul Hendricks, one of the most prominent Tories on the Island of Manhattan, but although the girl knew little of the affairs of her country, her sympathies were with the colonial cause.

Quite unmindful of the heat, she stayed on until the sun had sunk and it was fast growing dark. When Pauline reached home she was greeted by the sound of angry voices, and on coming nearer she saw her father shaking his fist in the face of a young colonial officer, and heard him cry:

"No! No! I tell you, no!"

At this the young officer bowed and said: "I thank you, sir, for the courtesy with which you have received me, and will lose no time in conveying your answer to General Washington."

As the officer turned, he caught sight of the girl, and, removing his hat, he bowed slightly.

"All the same, I am going," replied

HALTED BY THE SENTRY.

For the next few weeks Pauline had scarce a moment to herself. One hot afternoon, soon after the defeat of Washington's troops on Long Island, she took her hat and stole out for a walk. She had not walked far when she heard a strange sound, and, pulling aside some bushes, she gave a gasp of surprise, for there, with his head pillowed on a coat, lay the officer she had seen talking with her father some weeks before.

She quickly knelt beside him, and when he spoke, it was to say, "I know that I can trust you." The girl nodded and he went on. "I am Lieutenant John Sperry, of the Fifth New Jersey, and am carrying very important dispatches to his excellency, General Washington, and in climbing yonder fence fell and broke my leg, I fear me, and now what's to be done?" The girl thought a moment and then replied: "To-night I will ride with them to Washington's camp."

"Why, it's eight miles from here, and it will not be safe."

the dauntless girl. And then telling the officer she would be back soon, she ran to the house, and calling her faithful colored servant, Jo, told him the particulars and asked his advice.

"It sartainly is a hard case, missy, but I thinks we can manage it somehow. Your pa out and the servants is all busy, and so if you can keep your ma out of sight of the back way I will carry him up to the garret right now."

This Pauline succeeded in doing without arousing her mother's suspicions, and then after going to the garret to see if the officer was comfortable, she harnessed her favorite horse Tom and started. For the first five miles she held the horse in, but after that they went at high speed. Once she was stopped by three men, but one of these recognizing her as the daughter of Paul Hendricks, allowed her to proceed. After an endless time, as it seemed to her, she came in sight of the camp and was challenged by the sentinel. On telling her errand, she was given in charge of an officer, who took her to Washington's tent. When Washington had finished reading the dispatches, he turned to the girl and said:

"You're a brave girl, and the cause has need of such as thee." Then he went on: "To-morrow I will send some troops to your house to bring Lieutenant Speery away; but they will be disguised as redcoats, for it will not be safe to let them go otherwise. And to make sure that it is the right troop I will give this trinket to the captain, and he will show it to you."

When she arrived home she found the house in great excitement over her disappearance, but refusing to give any explanation of her conduct, she was sent to bed with an added two hours of spinnet practice for the next week. While the family were at dinner next day a troop of redcoats rode up to the door. When Pauline ran out the captain showed her the trinket, and while she was gone to show the soldiers where he was, the captain told her father the whole story. The squire was white with rage and vowed vengeance on them. A few weeks after this Lieutenant Sperry rode up to the Hendricks mansion and asked for Mistress Pauline and presented her with the trinket from Washington in memory of her good service to the country.—Washington Star.

FAILURE.

He brought me to his garden rare,
To give me of his best;
He pulled a lily for my hair,
The jasmine for my breast,
And filled my lap with roses red,
For they were born of love, he said.

All day he taught me garden lore,
The way to sow and prune,
And what to waste and how to store
From fitful March to June;
And then he left me mistress there,
Proud mistress of the garden rare.

I worked with jealous hand and eye
His watchful praise to win
But O, the creepers shot so high,
The weeds did overrun!
And when his coming he delayed
I grew mistrustingly afraid.

The roses, too, began to fade,
His roses born of love!
Perchance it was the willow's shade—
Big boughs I could not move;
I know not, but in wild dismay
I kissed them dead, and fled away.

Italy's Army of Emigrants.

Those who follow Italian affairs are perfectly astonished at the statistics of emigration. In 1869 what was considered the immense number of 119,000 men left their native country, the emigrants oscillating between that and 135,000 up to 1881, until in 1887 those numbers were 215,000, rising to 290,000 the very next year. Arrived at this figure, it seemed as though the maximum must have been reached, and that the numbers would decline, but instead in 1891 there was another rise to 293,000, maintained for three consecutive seasons, the century closing with the enormous number of 352,000 emigrants; but even that was not the consummation, as in 1901 they were 533,000. Thus, in the first two years of this century Italy sent over 1,000,000 souls to other countries to enlarge there the already numerous Italian colonies.—Rome Letter to Pall Mall Gazette.

A Tall Story From London.

A New Yorker who is now in London declares that one of his greatest pleasures here is the number of people who speak English. At home his grocer comes from Holland, his butcher is a native of Brazil, his chemist is an Alsatian, his chef is a German, his valet was born in Tokio, his servants are Irish and Swede, his coachman is a Cuban, his barber comes from Trieste and his fruiterer from Southern Italy. A few months ago when he had to call in a doctor suddenly to attend to one of his servants, a Persian answered the summons. He is clothed by a Cockney, has a Canadian for a business partner, and expects to be buried by a Scotchman.—London Chronicle.

THE UNION.

Published every Thursday at Clanton, Chilton county, Alabama.

Wallace C. Edler, Ed. and Pub

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.

For advertising rates, call at the office, Sixth street, opposite court house.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

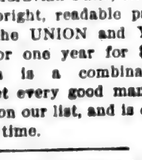
The Yellow Jacket, published biweekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognizing THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



A NATIONAL LOSS.

The death of Senator Marcus Alonzo Hanna at Washington on February 15, 1904, removes our greatest man and foremost citizen from our midst. Millions of American citizens feel as if they had lost a personal friend, and no one man of the present day had so many who relied upon him in his public capacity. While all sections mourn his loss, we of the south will feel his loss sorely. Many hopes based upon the certainty that he would occupy the presidential chair from which William McKinley was removed so suddenly are buried in the grave with our champion. He was a typical American and achieved success in all his undertakings, both in business and politics. A large employer of labor, he was loved and respected by his employes and he had hoped to achieve by means of the civic federation (of which he was the ruling spirit) that harmony between capital and labor which all who love their country desire to see exist. He was a devoted friend, an honorable foe, and though villified and caricatured as may be no other man of our times has been, he rose superior to it all and ultimately forced the confessed admiration of his opponents. "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death?"

It is a surprising fact that more than one-fifth of the entire population of the United States was enrolled in 1902 as pupils in the common schools. The exact number is 15,925,887; nor does this include all who attended school, for when the number of pupils in private schools is added, the grand total reaches 18,080,840. Is it any wonder that the public school system of this country is the admiration of nearly all the rest of the world? inquires a writer in the New York Tribune. The amount of schooling that each individual of the population is receiving on an average is a matter of general interest. In 1850, in the days of Horace Mann and his disciples in New England and elsewhere, each person received a schooling, all told, of 420 days; in 1902 each person's education occupied 1032 days, or 612 more days than the average person received in 1850. This means, of course, that the general average of intelligence is far higher than in former years.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

On Saturday, February 12th, 1904, the republicans of Chilton county assembled in mass convention at the court house in Clanton. County. Chairman J. B. Downs called the assembly to order and read the following call:

Republicans of Chilton County, Ala.—In obedience to a resolution passed by the republican executive committee of Chilton county at its meeting on January 11th, 1904, I hereby call a mass convention of the republican electors of Chilton county to meet at Clanton, Ala., on Saturday, February 13th, 1904, for the purpose of electing delegates to the republican state and district conventions, and to transact such other business as may be properly brought before it.

J. B. DOWNS, Chairman Com.
ALEX G. DAKE, Sec.

On motion J. W. G. Kicker was elected chairman and Alex G. Dake secretary of the convention. A motion was proposed and carried that the chairman appoint a committee of three to retire and select names to present to the convention as delegates and alternates to the state and district conventions. The chair appointed W. C. Edler, Lee Vickers and G. W. Edwards. During the committees' absence from the hall H. A. Wilson made a short talk to the assemblage. The committee on delegates, etc., returned and reported the following names, viz.: As delegates to state convention, Alex G. Dake, J. W. G. Kicker, W. C. Edler, H. A. Wilson and J. B. Downs. Alternates, H. B. Rodgers, Lee Vickers, George W. Edwards, J. S. Dennis and J. A. Green. As delegates to the district convention, Lee Vickers, W. C. Edler, H. B. Rodgers, M. F. Lett, H. A. Wilson, G. W. Edwards, J. N. Dennis and J. Bice. Alternates, J. E. Littlejohn, Lum Smith, J. N. Culpepper, B. H. Wells, R. C. Riggins, W. L. Popwell, R. A. Miller and L. D. Popwell. As members of the county executive committee for ensuing two years, J. W. G. Kicker, J. N. Dennis, J. A. Green, Y. O. Freeman, J. S. Dennis, J. B. Downs, H. A. Wilson, George W. Edwards, D. M. Apperson On motion the report was unanimously adopted. W. C. Edler offered the following resolution, viz.: That the county executive committee shall be and is hereby given full power to complete their committee at the earliest practicable opportunity, so that each beat shall have one representative for every one hundred votes or fractional part thereof cast for the republican state ticket in 1902. Carried unanimously. Nominations for chairman and secretary of the county executive committee were called for, and J. B. Downs was put in nomination for chairman. He declined the nomination and offered the name of Lee Vickers in his stead, who was unanimously elected. Wallace C. Edler was nominated and elected secretary. The convention passed a vote of thanks to the retiring officers, Chairman Downs and Secretary Dake, for the good service they had rendered. J. B. Downs offered the following resolution, which was carried:

Resolved, That this convention express its willingness to confer with the populists of the county in relation to the county officers to be elected in November next, and our county executive committee is hereby authorized to take such action as may become necessary to insure united opposition to organized democracy. H. A. Wilson offered the following resolutions, which, after discussion, were unanimously carried:

Whereas, an effort is being made to disrupt and destroy the republican state organization of Alabama and

Whereas, it is necessary for all loyal republicans to so act as to sustain the action of the state convention of September, 1902; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the republicans of Chilton county, Ala., in mass convention assembled, do reaffirm our allegiance to republican principles and the republican party, and hereby pledge our support and the support of every true republican in the county to the election of only such officials as are opposed to the principles of the democratic party, regardless of whatever name by which they may be known.

Resolved, That in consideration of the fact that a large number of federal officials in Alabama have, in their excessive greed to hold office, forsaken republican principles and have become unworthy and unreliable as republicans; therefore this convention will not elect any federal official as a delegate to the state or district convention, nor to a place of trust on the county committee.

Resolved, That the delegates and alternates elected from this convention shall attend the regular district convention which has been called by Chairman J. W. Kitchens to meet in Talladega on February 23d, 1904.

Resolved, That the delegates and alternates elected from this convention shall attend the regular state convention, which has been called by Chairman W. I. Wellman to meet in Birmingham May 10th, 1904.

Resolved, further, That the delegates elected by this convention to the state and district conventions are hereby instructed to cast their votes as a unit on all questions coming before said conventions, and such delegates as are present are instructed to cast the entire vote to which Chilton county is entitled in said conventions.

J. W. G. KICKER, Chairman Convention.
ALEX G. DAKE, Secretary.

OLD MAID.

THORSBY.

Editor Union—Any one on reading C. L. Langston's graphic picture (in week before last's issue of the UNION) of the hideous array of dead populist carcasses strewn along the way, as they traveled in search of the democratic pie counter, while the "fraudocrats" invariably led them into the back lot and left them like the proverbial donkey to browse on thistles and dry sticks. Oh! what fools some mortals be. Just take the case of any one mentioned by Langston, and suppose they had have been firm and true to that which they professed, to battle for the rights of the masses. They would yet be standing as beacon lights, with honor bright; but instead they are politically dead. I notice also that Mr. Langston, by way of apology, refers to E. B. Deason. Well, now that reminds me of the story of the two old women who were talking of small children at birth, when one of them stated that "she was so small when born that she was put into a quart pot;" whereupon the other exclaimed, "Well, I do say! and did you live?" "Yes, they say I did and done well." Well, Lige was quite small, it is true, at his political birth, and might have lived and done well had he not got into the "fraudocrats'" pot; but now, liek the negro's fish, "Golly, how he do swink." And Allie Smith, while he is not so small around the girth, yet he is too clumsy to ride populist mustangs into office. And little Dock (Roscoe) wants something, but don't know how to get it. By the way, have you noticed that in Texas over 200,000 voters have been disfranchised under the infamous poll tax scheme, and there will be perhaps half as many in Alabama, and a "good" democrat said not long ago that it is the best thing on record to eliminate the ignoramuses from politics. So there you have it. Yet they told us it was best to get rid of the negro only. "Yet, Brutus is an honorable man."

X-RAY.

JEMISON.

Editor Union—Well, Valentine's day is over and many a girl's heart has been made to leap with joy on account of some sweet little poetry her young man sent her. The girls in Jemison all seem to be in good cheer, and think there is plenty of time yet. Say, politics seem to be in a muddle; all sorts of speculation as to who will be our next probate judge; but if I knew who the people's party would nominate, I could tell them his name easy enough. I am sorry for some of the democrats who are running for office, for when their bosses get together and pick out their candidate the other fellow will have to come down and out, for the democrats of Chilton have to do what their bosses say. How different from the people's party. The whole party always picks out their candidates and not a few bosses. Bosses always handicap an officer; he has to obey his master, and I would rather vote for a man under obligations to the people rather than one under a few bosses. So let us all stay out of the bosses' primary April 11th and wait for the people's primary and "Let the people rule." I don't believe the little crowd that met at Clanton Tuesday a week ago will be able to dictate to the people of Chilton. They may run the democratic nominations, but that is all. Some of their politicians would like to know where they are at.

"They wire in and wire out,
Leaving the voter still in doubt.
Whether the schemer that made the track,"
Was going away or coming back."

Some candidates are running after every one they see and ask them to come in their primary and vote for them. They are great peacemakers now, but what are the terms! We do the voting and they take the offices. A great victory for the people to give the bosses the offices! Why the democratic leaders are growing desperate and are begging republicans to come in their primary and help them in their county affairs, saying they can still be republicans in state and national elections.

"We are freaks, if still we listen
To this kind of 'catch 'em' talk.
We are fools if prospects glisten.
Let the candidate go walk."

The people of Chilton are hard to fool. They have been tried and never denied and are willing to be tried again. I've the utmost confidence in the people, though I know a few fellows around Clanton think the people have no sense, and that they can just sway them about to suit themselves; but so far the Clanton fellow has been the fool. Let every one of us subscribe for the Union. If we can't take but one paper, let's take the paper that helps us and gives us a chance for fair play. Step up and subscribe and pay for the UNION and push it.

C.

MAPLESVILLE.

Editor Union—For fear that you all might think that we are dead or asleep in beat 7, we will give you a short letter from this section and prove to you that we are very much alive. If the populists of Chilton will do as Brother C. L. Langston advised, you will not get the dead shot some of our poor fellows have got in the past—a wound unto death. When I write of these things it grieves me to my very soul, when I think how some of our best men have been butchered through tampering with the democrats, and to think that among them were two of God's servants, men that we would have shed our blood for. While we mourn the loss of these men it is not for their votes, for we feel sure that we can elect our men this time; but we hate to see good men butchered in such manner. And to see the Master's cause so crippled. We well remember where we had an unshaken confidence in them, but now where is that confidence gone? It is utterly gone except they retire from politics and go back into God's service and be not led away by false delusions again. Now, boys, we have warned you before about tampering with democracy of the present day; let them alone. If they sacrifice a minister of the gospel, what do you suppose they will do to an ordinary man? Stay away from the primary. Now a word to our friends who are just a little tender-footed. Just honestly reach down into your heart and take out that prejudice and you'll see as we populists see, and you will vote their ticket, the ticket that is going to win. Now, boys, put your shoulder to the wheel and we will win the fight without trouble. We are with you through thick and thin.

W. Y. NIX.

PLEASANT GROVE.

Our farmers are on a brisk move preparing for another crop. I know when we populists and republicans get together and elect our new officers for the county and keep the republicans in power at Washington that times will be all right, and we will get good prices for what we raise. We don't want no more "soup house" democratic administrations with "hobos" tramping through our country hunting work and can't find it. Mr. R. E. L. Ward and wife, of Lomax, visited the family of Mr. J. A. Culp last Saturday and Sunday. R. W. Foshee and J. A. Lockhart visited friends near Highlands Sunday. J. J. Foshee was a caller at J. A. Culp's Monday and had a nice time. We are glad to see Mrs. Martha A. Culp up again after several weeks' illness. Success to the Union

CLANTON PUBLIC SCHOOL.

The young men of the school have organized a debating society, which is expected to improve the members both morally and intellectually. They meet every Saturday night, and judging from the attendance, a great deal of interest is manifested. The society elected the following officers last Saturday night: H. T. Wallace, president; Jerome Williams, vice president; Hosea Downs, secretary; S. Matthews, chaplain; J. L. Sims, doorkeeper; Roy Sawyer, critic. The society is ably run on a business principle and before long will rank among the first of Clanton's societies.

ADVANCED ROOM.

This room is still progressing nicely. Two new pupils entered this week, viz., Mr. Ross Mahan and Master Royal Roper. Miss Marian Aldridge has returned to school. She has been out on account of measles. We are glad to have her back. Several from the intermediate room have moved in this room, and we gladly welcome them. The new Latin class is getting along nicely. We have fifty pupils in this room now. We have just received a nice lot of coal and wood, which we were needing very much.

A PUPIL.

A PECULIAR ACCIDENT.

A rather peculiar accident happened here Saturday to Andrew Wilson, a prominent farmer living near Clanton. His team was scared by the train and ran away, and he jumped off the wagon (thinking he could stop them better on the ground) and broke his ankle in two places. He was taken into Dr. Campbell's office and the limb was set, and at present reports he is doing quite well. They team was stopped before they had run far.

DEATH OF MRS. ATCHLEY.

Mrs. Alvernia Atchley, wife of T. W. Atchley and daughter of James Maddox, died at her home near Liberty Hill on February 12, 1904. The cause of death was measles. She was laid to rest in Cedar Grove cemetery on Sunday, the 14th instant, Rev. A. L. Fooshee and Rev. Lynch officiated at the grave. The funeral was attended by a large number of relatives and friends. The deceased leaves a husband only, her child having gone before. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord."

DEATH OF W. A. HILL.

Will A. Hill, son of our neighbor, George Hill, of Lomax, was killed by a switch engine at Bessemer at 5 o'clock Wednesday morning. He was on the night shift at the switch yard there. Full particulars are not obtainable at the time of our going to press. The deceased leaves a young widow at Lomax. She was a daughter of William Lodge. Mr. George Hill was telegraphed for Wednesday morning and left on the morning train for Birmingham to bring the body of his son home for interment.

AN OLD-TIMER GONE.

John Wesley Dubose, formerly of beat 1, who was well known by old residents of the county for his numerous escapes from the officers of the law, died in the state of Utah a couple of weeks since. He was killed by a rock falling on him while mining.

JEMISON.

Editor Union—I made a trip into the rurals of Chilton and Bibb counties a week or two ago and I've never seen so much hustling among the farmers. They were plowing, fixing fences, ditching or clearing more ground, while the good women were doing the washing and cutting the firewood. I asked myself, what is the cause of this hustle and bustle among the farmers? Was it free trade, free silver or anything else free that the democratic party had ever given us? And the answer came: No, it is 15-cent cotton, and the good republican rule that always gives us plenty to do at good wages and prices for everything that we have to sell. I hope that no man that gets his living by the sweat of his brow will ever forget the hard times from 1893 to 1897, but I am afraid some republicans are trying to put us in the same boat we were in then by not being conservative and trying to harmonize the party; to have two delegations in the county will be equal to voting the democratic ticket. We have got to unite and stay that way. Good republicans should not say too much about President Roosevelt, for I believe he will be the nominee, and the more they say the more they will have to take back or join the democrats, and that would be bad, for we have none to spare. Now let us lay prejudice aside and take a sensible, conservative view of what is ahead of us, and we will win in November.

W. R. JACKSON.

LOMAX.

Farming is progressing nicely in this section and measles are plentiful. We are glad to see Mr. Harrison Bussey out again after his attack of measles. We are sorry to state that Mr. J. W. Collins has several sick at his home with measles. Parson Dock Wells filled his regular appointment at Lomax last Sunday. The Sunday school at Bethany is doing well. Attendance was small Sunday on account of so much sickness. Mr. A. A. Jackson has several sick children at his home (not measles). We hope they will soon recover. Jackson and Robinson have a thriving business here. You all should call and see our big merchants. Well, spring is about here, and we hope everybody will make all they can honestly and then use it to the glory of God. Ask God to help you in all your ways.

THE OLD-FASHIONED GARDEN.

A lovely place in the evening light
Wherein to rest and be idle,
Its borders so shadowy yet so bright,
Where old-fashioned roses dwell by right,
And queenly lilies are clad in white
Like flowers adorned for a bridal.

Dear haunted garden, at dusk we stand
And your dim memories ponder;
Of children who played there—a household band
Of lovers that haply a lifetime planned,
Of aged ones resting here hand in hand,
Now at rest on the hillside yonder.

They have passed away, but their work survives,
Its fragrance to strangers granted;
And as their garden still blooms and thrives,
Even so the grace of their homely lives
Beyond the winter of death revives—
They are not dead, but transplanted.

Ah! sweet the flowers that our love await,
Where the springtime is fresh and vernal,
Where never the summertide comes too late,
And never a blossom out of date;
Thank God in the peace of that heavenly state
The old-fashioned joys are eternal.

The Turn of the Tide

By CECIL J. DENTON.

Copyrighted, 1903, by The Authors Publishing Company

"Oh, Nellie! Oh, Nellie! where are you?" called Charles Macdonald, artist, just home from his studio.

"I will be there in a minute, Charlie." Hardly had the words been uttered when the portiere was drawn aside and a girlish figure appeared. Her eyes were illumined with love, and a smile of sweet content played around the corners of her rosy lips. If any cares disturbed the quietude of her existence, her husband never discerned them.

"Why, little woman, how bright you look!"

"Don't I always look radiant when my lord and master deigns to bestow the light of his countenance on his handmaid?"

"Hello! what have you been reading? Some oriental fantasy? But, seriously, methinks I see a brighter sparkle in thine eyes. By jove! you have started me spouting in rhythm. Come and sit on this sofa and make a clean confession."

"Well, Charlie, dear, I am afraid my misdeeds are so small that I shall require but little absolution. For some time I have seen the clouds gathering on your brow—"

"But, sweetheart, how could you see them? Am I not always cheerful? I flattered myself that I bore a strong resemblance to the merry grig."

"How can you be so foolish, sir? Must I again impress upon your mind that love has piercing eyes? Foolish boy! Intuition told me that our present path was not as smooth as it might be; they say only two things trouble a man, love and the want of money. I was vain enough to think the former was not the cause, therefore, I came to the conclusion it must be the latter, but I had an abiding faith that all such troubles would square themselves in the end."

"About as easy as squaring a circle!" answered Charlie.

"Thought I would not bother you, but do the best I could. You may laugh, sir, but I had a small mountain on my mind, lying awake at night devising means to make a joint last as long as possible—puzzling my brain to turn it into all sorts of strange dishes to cover its identity. You may have a light heart, dear, I have not run into debt over housekeeping expenses. The butcher, the baker, and all the tribe that supply our wants, have been paid.

"But I had come to the end of my resources until—well, never mind! I will tell you that in its right place. You were always generous with my pocket money, slyly replenishing my pocketbook; that made a nest egg to work on. Then, to use an expression of yours, I resorted to my 'avuncular relative.' I wrote to one of those concerns that advertise to wait on you at your residence. They did not give me anything like I expected, for some really handsome jewelry that belonged to my mother."

The portiere was drawn aside and a girlish figure appeared.

"That is how pawnbrokers get so enormously rich; they give a third, or less, of the value, hoping that the article will never be redeemed."

"A happy inspiration seized me," she continued, "when I was at school a lot of us girls went in for writing stories. I, at least, had no thought of having my effusions published though some of the girls are making a name for themselves, and, I suppose, are coining money. We were stern and exacting critics, never failing to tear one another's choicest productions to shreds. I believe we took a fiendish delight in unmercifully knocking those characters of straw to pieces. I had quite a nice little pile of stories snugly stored in one of my trunks. I sent four or five of them to publishers. Two or three times they came back. I redirected them to other magazines. Now, Charlie, don't call me a fraud and look incredulous."

He was looking for pictures.

"You are, without an exception, the sweetest and dearest little fraud I know of."

"This very day I received such a polite note from an editor, accepting one of my stories, and asking me to submit more. He also gave me the name of another magazine that he thought my work suitable for. Isn't that nice? Behold, unbeliever! there is the check," giving it a dramatic kiss as she showed it to her husband. "So while you are producing the beauteous scenes of nature, I can scribble. But, darling, I will not neglect your well being, nor take less pride in our home. In proof thereof I have prepared the daintiest of luncheons, a savory meal to delight the soul of my lord. How will that do, Charlie, mine?"

"Well, for once you are a fraud. I had visions, coming home, of taking you to Delmonico's; but I would rather have a dish prepared by those neat, little hands, than the grandest banquet served by the finest chef. I also have news. I am delighted with your good luck, and I don't know how I can thank you sufficiently for the gentle spirit in which you have come to the rescue of a common fiend. At last, I think I may say, the tide has turned. Harry Devine, an old chum of mine, at Yale, came into the studio this morning with a friend of his. He was looking for pictures to adorn the walls of his newly furnished house. My dear, he is wise in his generation, as he said he would rather pay a fair price for American works of art, which he knew at least were genuine, than to invest a fabulous sum in works of old masters which were, perhaps, spurious. He purchased two landscapes, giving me a generous check for them."

"Oh, Charlie! I am so glad. I knew your work deserved a good price. I only wish I had had the naming of the figure; it would show how much I admire your painting. I am infinitely more pleased than if I were hailed as the rising star in the literary firmament. You are the sun, and I feel glorified in reflecting some of the beams by being your loving wife."

"But, Nellie, we have been living on the ragged edge of a volcano for some months. I have suffered the torments of the inferno for that space of time—not very flattering to your pretty face and engaging ways, but we will let it pass. You were aware of the fact that I hadn't much money when we burnt incense together at the shrine of Hymen. Like all lovers of art, by my pictures not being unmercifully skied in the salon, I imagined the stream of Pactolus would flow our way, with naught but gentle ripples. In my arrogance, or let me modify the expression, by saying, for the love of mine art, I would not condescend to paint pot-boilers for grasping dealers; therefore I found myself in a state of collapse; inspiration seemed to leave me; even my historical painting, which I still hope may hang in the academy, was at a standstill. I was too extravagant in furnishing our bridal nest and my atelier. I do like to have around me pretty things. It is conducive to higher work. But, thank the powers, I paid ready cash for everything; it was a good thing for us, as I was enabled to raise the 'needful, though at a ruinous rate of interest, I must confess. What seemed such hard luck was to have a lot of good material on hand, and vanity apart, I felt it to be above the mediocre, which represented solid cash, but could find no market for my wares. Duns, debts and difficulties, the three demons dreaded by impecunious mortals, stared me in the face. Only yesterday I received a note informing me that the interest on the loan on our goods and chattels would fall due next week. If the amount was not forthcoming they would be under the painful necessity of levying on the furniture, etc.

"Thank goodness, darling, that the dark clouds are rolling away, and that the flood tide is making. It will not be my fault if I do not take advantage of it. I have satisfied my creditor, much to his astonishment and disgust. Now he is quite willing to wait for an indefinite period for his money. I suppose, with the hope that he will get me in his claws again. Now for the rest of my news. That same friend of Devine's has commissioned me to paint some scenes in the Thousand Islands and the Adirondacks. Pack your trunks and be ready for a start as soon as possible."

"Well, Charlie, we have each tried to hide our troubles from the other. I am so glad I can aid with my mite. I never intended to be a drone in the matrimonial hive. May we go hand in hand down the stream of life. Don't laugh at me."

"Laugh! I am as grave as a judge, but I must let the exuberance of my spirits escape, by giving three times three for my queen bee."

WAS A FAMOUS BIRD.

But Eight-Year-Old Prize Winner Was No Table Delicacy.

The earl of Denbigh, who commanded the Honorable Artillery Company of London during its recent visit to America, told at a dinner party in New York one night a story which, he said, Andrew Lang had related to him.

There was, according to the story, an aged Scot who had a reputation far and near for his fine fowls, which took prizes at all the fairs and shows of the countryside.

A gentleman, stopping in the neighborhood, heard so much of the Scot and his birds that he decided to give the old man's stock a trial. Accordingly he sent an order for the finest turkey that could be procured, and in due season was delighted to receive an exceedingly large and plump fowl.

The fowl was roasted and served, but so tough and dry did it prove that the gentleman could not eat a mouthful of it. Very much chagrined, he set forth to find the old Scot.

The latter, after listening to his patron's outburst of disappointment, said with a sneer: "Hoot, man, why ye kenna tell a guid bird when ye see it. That turkey I sent ye has ta'en the first prize at all the shows for the last eight years."

Holding Hands.

The way was steep and tiresome,
And hot the afternoon,
Alone I walked, reluctant
To reach my home too soon.
Before me in the pathway,
Near where the statue stands,
There walked a son and father,
And they were holding hands.

But, as I watched them sadly,
The man in anger flung
Aside the little fingers
That to his own had clung.
I heard him say, ignoring
The weary boy's demands,
"It's hot enough, I reckon, Without our holding hands."

Yes, little hands are clinging,
And little feet will fall,
But little hearts are tender
And little lives are frail.
If one I knew could only
Come back to give commands,
I'd gladly walk forever,
Forever holding hands.

The Living Present.

F. Marion Crawford, the prolific novelist, has little sympathy with the "art for art's sake" cult. He has a swift, fluent pen, and does not believe in that indefatigable polishing which Walter Pater advocated. Otherwise Mr. Crawford could not possibly turn out the number of volumes annually that he does.

A young woman was introduced to Mr. Crawford recently. Hearing that he was a novelist, she said:

"And have you written anything that will live after you are gone?"

"I don't know," he replied. "You see, what I am after is something that will enable me to live while I am here."

A Circulating Medium.

"Yes, sir," said the village grocer, "I take the big weeklies to keep track of the world's affairs and the big city dailies to keep posted on what is going on in this country."

"But don't you take your home paper?" asked the drummer.

"Nope."

"But you certainly ought to be interested in local affairs."

"Oh, I know everything that goes on. My wife belongs to the woman's club and three church societies, one of my daughters works in the millinery shop, and the other is in the delivery window at the postoffice."—Exchange.

The second floor room of the little cottage was decorated with a shriveled last year's Christmas wreath, depending from the creased and torn shade. On either side of the wreath were pinned little American and Irish flags. It gave the cottage a particularly festive appearance. One of the neighbor women, a broad and buxom person of middle age, stopped in passing and looked at the window curiously and as she did so a little old woman, as withered and shriveled as the Christmas wreath, came and bade her good morning.

"Good mornin' to you, Mrs. Conley," said the neighbor, cordially. "It's celebratin' ye are I see b' th' dicorations, an' mighty foine they look. Ye must b'lave in Thanksgivin'."

The little old woman smiled. "Yis," she answered, "I'm celebratin'. 'Tis for Terence, th' b'y. He's comin' home this day."

"Is that so!" exclaimed the neighbor. "Terry comin' home! Ye don't tell me! I t'ought he was sent up f'r five years."

"So he was," said Terence's mother, beaming. "Yis, he was sent up f'r five years, but he got two years off f'r good behavior."

"T'ink of that!" said the neighbor in tones of sympathetic delight. "F'r good behavior! Now isn't it a comfort to have a son like that!"

Parrot Was a Talker

Someone up in Buffalo sent Raymond a parrot. "Just a little present," said the letter tied to the cage. "You'll find him a splendid talker. His name is 'Ruffles.'"

Raymond's first tendency was to send Ruffles up to his house. He forgot it the first day, but told this wife when he got home about the new animal and promised to have the parrot sent up the next day.

When he reached his office next morning he began to pay some attention to the bird.

"Wonder why he doesn't talk?" thought Raymond. "He must have lost the power of speech or else my Buffalo friend was 'joshing' me."

Ruffles merely looked on sleepily and said nothing.

About 2 o'clock Raymond called for a messenger boy. The buzz of the messenger call seemed to act magically on the green and yellow occupant of the cage. He opened his eyes, shook his feathers, stepped from one foot to the other, lifted his beak, and —began to talk.

Oh, yes, he talked! Ruffles talked considerable! In fact, he talked till one of the young lady stenographers out in the next office came running in with her hat on and tendered her resignation. She simply couldn't listen to such language!

People in the offices came in, wondering what was the matter with Raymond. Always such a mild-mannered man, they could not understand what had happened to make him use such profanity.

At the moment when Raymond was wondering how he could choke the bird the messenger arrived. He heard the language and thought it was directed at him.

"I hurried just as fast as I could, boss!" he said.

"Take this parrot," said Raymond; "take him down to the Society for the Prevention of Crime and tell 'em he's a good subject for them to work on."

When Raymond got home that night he had to explain to his family that the parrot had gone away. They were wise enough to ask no further.—New York World.

Live in Ideal State

Denmark claims that there is not a single person in her domain who cannot read and write, says Golden Penny. On the northeast coast of New Guinea, the island of Kutaba, surrounded by a wall of coral 300 feet high on one side and from 50 to 100 feet on the other, maintains thirteen villages of natives, to whom war, crime and poverty have been unknown since the beginning of their traditions. The most peaceful and comfortable community in Europe is the commune of the Canton Vaud, in Switzerland. Nearly every one is well off, and there are no paupers. Finland is a realm whose inhabitants are remarkable for their inviolate integrity. There are no banks and no safe deposits, for no such security is essential. You may leave your luggage anywhere, for any length of time, and be quite sure of finding it untouched on your return, and your purse full of money would be just as secure under similar circumstances. The Finns place their money and valuables in holes in the ground, and cover them with a big leaf. Such treasure is sacredly respected by all who pass it; but, in the rare event of any man wishing to borrow of his neighbor during his absence, he will take only the smallest sum he requires, and place a message in the hole, telling of his urgent need, and promising to repay the amount on a specified date. And he will inviolably keep his word, for the Finn is invincible in his independence.

Agneta Park, near Delft, in Holland, is another Utopian example. A tract of ten acres has upon it 150 houses, each with its little garden and with certain common buildings and common grounds. The houses are occupied by the employes of a great distilling company, who form a corporation which owns the park. Each member owns shares in the corporation, and pays rent for his house. The surplus, after all expenses have been paid, comes back to him as dividend. If he wishes to go away, or if he dies, his shares are bought up by the corporation and sold to the man who takes his place.

Longest Mail Route

Uncle Sam pays $2,329 to carry each batch of letters from New York to a certain station within his territory, and the cost is the same if there is but one letter.

The postage on the letter would, of course, be but two cents, the regular rate, for this is just a regular mail route.

The distance covered in the return journey to and from New York is 6,904 miles, for the outer end is Port Barrow, Alaska.

The journey one way takes almost five months, and five different methods of transportation are used. The distances and modes of transportation are:

By reindeer, 650 miles; by dogs, 1,630 miles; by horses, 412 miles; by steamer, 1,000 miles, and by rail, 3,812 miles.

From Point Barrow to Kotzebue is 650 miles, and this part of the journey is covered by means of reindeer. From Kotzebue to Nome is 400 miles, a stretch on which both reindeer and dogs are utilized. From Nome to Unalakik is 230 miles, where dogs furnish the motive power. From Unalakik to Tanana is 363 miles and Tanana to Eagle is 567 miles, both of these stretches being covered by means of dogs. This makes a total of 2,210 miles traveled in Alaska alone. The next stage is 594 miles from Eagle to Skagway, via Dawson, a total of 594 miles, of which 572 is in Canada and 22 in Alaska, 460 miles of the distance being by horses and dogs and 112 by railroad.

The round-trip rate for carrying the mail from Point Barrow to Kotzebue, according to the contract, is $750, making the single trip $375, one-half the round trip rate, and the other stages of the trip are similarly computed. Thus the cost, whether there is one letter or a big bulk of mail, from Kotzebue to Nome is $250; Nome to Unalakik, $263; Unalakik to Tanana, $402, and Tanana to Eagle, $529.

To Each His Cup

Each one has his Gethsemane; for each there is a day
When he shall halt, fear-stricken by the darkness in the way;
When he, faint-hearted, weary of the griefs he yet must bear, Shall turn aside into the shade and soothing calmness there—Shall turn aside and bow his head, and on his bended knees
Pray that he may not take the cup and drain it to the lees.

The garden we call Gethsemane—we enter it alone,
With sorrows that we only know, and griefs that are our own.
We hide among the shadows where no eye may see us shrink,
And murmur at the hyssop in the cup that we must drink—
The cup wherein all sadness and all bitterness swim,
And ask why fate has poured the draught that fills it to the brim.

A resting place—Gethsemane, a place for wearied souls
And aching hearts to heal the smarts that tell of unwon goals;
A place serene and comforting; a spot of gentle calm,
Where breezes whisper through the leaves a murmur sweet with balm.
Where, all unseen, the naked soul may come to understand
The reason for the heavy cup that waits
the tardy hand.

Each one has his Gethsemane, where,
stumbling, tired and worn,
And bent with all the heavy load of sorrow he has borne,
He may find rest; and know that now his night is almost gone,
And see ahead the golden glint that marks a happy dawn.
And then, content and fortified in heart,
he takes his cup
That brims with pungent bitterness, and bravely drinks it up.

SALZER'S FARM SEED NOVELTIES

Salzer's National Oats.

Most prolific Oats on earth. The U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, says: "Salzer's Oats are the best out of over four hundred sorts tested by us." This grand Oat yielded in Wisconsin 156 bu., Ohio 187 bu., Michigan 231 bu., Missouri 255 bu., and North Dakota 310 bu. per acre, and will positively do as well by you. Try it, sir, and be convinced.

A Few Sworn to Yields.

Salzer's Beardless Barley, 121 bu. per A.
Salzer's Bonebuilder Corn, 104 bu. per A.
Salzer's Big Four Oats, 250 bu. per A.
Salzer's New National Oats, 310 bu. per A.
Salzer's Potatoes, 764 bu. per A.
Salzer's Onions, 1,000 bu. per A.

All of our Farm and Vegetable Seeds are pedigree stock, bred right up to big yields.

Salzer's Speltz (Emmer).

Greatest cereal wonder of the age. It is not corn nor wheat, nor rye, nor barley, nor oats, but a golden combination of them all, yielding 80 bu. of grain and 4 tons of rich straw or hay per acre. Greatest stock food on earth. Does well everywhere.

Salzer's Million Dollar Grass.

Most talked of grass on earth. Farmers and College Professors and Agricultural Lecturers praise it without stint; yields 14 tons of rich hay and lots of pasture besides, per acre.

Salzer's Teosinte.

Salzer's Teosinte produces 113 rich, juicy, sweet, leafy stocks from one kernel of seed, 14 feet high in 90 days; yielding fully 80 tons of green fodder per acre, doing well everywhere, East, West, South or North.

Grasses and Clovers.

Only large growers of grasses and clovers for seed in America. Operate over 5,000 acres (our seeds are warranted). We make a great specialty of Grasses and Clovers, Fodder Plants, Corn, Potatoes, Onions, Cabbage, and all parts of Vegetable Seeds.

As if some hideous giant with awful Grip had clutched us in its fatal clasp. Men, women, children, whole towns and cities are caught in the baneful grip of a terrible monster.

The following letters speak for themselves as to the efficacy of Peruna in cases of la grippe or its after effects.

After Effects of La Grippe Eradicated by Pe-ru-na.

Mrs. Fred Weinberger, Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., writes:

"Several years ago I had an attack of la grippe which left my nerves in a prostrated condition. Then I had another attack of la grippe which left me worse. I had tried three good physicians, but all in vain. I gave Peruna a trial. In a short time I was feeling better, and now I am as well as any one."—Mrs. Fred Weinberger.

Hon. James R. Guill, of Omaha.

Hon. James R. Guill is one of the oldest and most esteemed men of Omaha, Neb. He has done much to make it what it is, serving on public boards a number of times. He endorses Peruna in the following words:

"I am 68 years old, am hale and hearty, and Peruna has helped me attain it. Two years ago I had la grippe—my life was despaired of. Peruna saved me."—J. R. Guill.

A Relative of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Silas S. Lincoln, who resides at 913 I Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., has the honor of being third cousin to Abraham Lincoln. He writes:

"I had la grippe five times before using your medicine. Four years ago I began the use of Peruna, since which time I have not been troubled with that disease. I can now do as much work at my desk as I ever could in my life. I have gained more than ten pounds in weight."—S. S. Lincoln.

Pe-ru-na Not Only Cured La Grippe But Benefited the Whole System.

Miss Alice M. Dressler, 1313 N. Bryant Ave., Minneapolis, Minn., writes:

"Last spring I suffered from la grippe and was partially cured, but the bad after effects remained through the summer, and somehow I did not get strong as I was before. One of my college friends who was visiting me asked me to try Peruna and I did so, and found it all and more than I had expected. It not only cured me of the catarrh, but restored me to perfect health, built up the entire system and brought a happy feeling of buoyancy which I had not known for years."—Alice M. Dressler.

An Actress' Testimonial.

Miss Jean Cowgill, Griswold Opera House, Troy, N. Y., is the leading lady with the Aubrey Stock Co. She writes the following:

"During the past winter of 1901 I suffered for several weeks from a severe attack of grippe, which left a serious catarrhal condition of the throat and head.

"Some one suggested Peruna. As a last resort, after wasting much time and money on physicians, I tried the remedy faithfully, and in a few weeks was as well as ever."—Jean Cowgill.

A Southern Judge Cured.

Judge Horatio J. Goss, Hartwell, Ga., writes:

"Some five or six years ago I had a very severe spell of grippe, which left me with systemic catarrh. A friend advised me to try your Peruna, which I did, and was immediately benefited and cured. The third bottle completed the cure."—H. J. Goss.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

PASSING OF THE HEARTH.

Where the Family Gathered for Festival and Prayer.

An elderly woman in Wisconsin, who was a young wife in the young west, is telling in a local newspaper a few of the things that the young wife of the older west does not have to do. And in telling of this she recalls vividly her home as it was sixty years ago. There were no wood, coal or gas ranges in those days, but there was a fireplace, with a wide, deep hearth—and a chimney that would draw, built large enough for the sweep to pass through it.

The fireplace would take a log four or five feet long and a foot and a half through. This was piled on andirons, and as there were no matches in those days one of the greatest anxieties of the careful housewife was to prevent the fire from going out. If it did go out she had to go to one of the neighbors, perhaps a quarter of a mile away, for a shoveful of live coals.

One of the signs of neatness in a housekeeper in those old days was the way she kept the hearth cleaned, using the broom and wing, and a few of her many duties were to dip candles, put down pork and beef by the barrel, make sausage for the year put down lard by the jar, preserved fruit by the gallon, apple sauce by the quantity, boiled cider by the keg; to provide dried beef and smoked ham, to spin all the yarn for the men's clothes, to weave it into cloth, and to send it to the dyer's to be dyed, fulled and pressed.

The coming of the cooking stove marked the beginning of a new epoch in the lives of our grandmothers. "Oh!" exclaims the survivor, "the good cheer the fireplace brought to the children! No corn was quite so good as the ears roasted before the fire. No potatoes so good as those roasted in the ashes in the winter. No apple equal to frozen apples boiled; then we would melt maple sugar and sugar off again on the snow." And she says, in conclusion: "With the passing of the fireplace has passed the word 'fireside' and the word 'hearth.' It was around the fireside we gathered for family prayer, around the fireside we gathered to read, to chat, to visit. Gone with the fireside and the hearth are most of my dear ones with whom I knelt every day."

Ruskin as a Gardener.

Fond as Ruskin was of flowers, especially wild ones, he had his own ideas as to what a garden ought to be, and in his practical gardening was quite a landscapist. He liked making paths and contriving pretty nooks. When he first came to Brantwood he would have his coppice cut no more. It spindled up to great tall steps, slender and sinuous, promising no timber, and past the age for all commercial use or time honored wont. Neighbors shook their heads, but they did not know the pictures of Botticelli, and Ruskin had made his coppice into an early Italian altar piece. Then he had the espalier of apples and a little goosberry patch and a few standard fruit trees and some strawberries mixed with flowers. In one corner there were beehives in the old-fashioned pent house trailed over with creepers. Here and there were little hummocks, each with its special interest of fern or flowers.

Better Salaries for Teachers.

Perhaps no more satisfactory Christmas present could have been devised than that which was enjoyed by the 3,800 school teachers of Philadelphia, who have just reached the successful climax of their brief and spirited campaign for higher salaries. A substantial increase will shortly be made all along the line from high school to kindergarten, not omitting the janitors of school buildings, who, it appears, get an additional ten per cent. While the new schodule just passed by the Philadelphia Councils places the nomination of Philadelphia teachers on a considerably higher plane than before, it is to be noted that it is still behind the standard of wages awarded in Boston and other cities. But the prompt and cordial response of the Councils, impelled by public sentiment, may be looked on as an indication that better things are in store for the teachers in Philadelphia public schools whenever they shall arise in their might and demand adequate pecuniary recognition for good work done.

Mrs. Hughson, of Chicago, whose letter follows, is another woman in high position who owes her health to the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I suffered for several years with general weakness and bearing-down pains, caused by womb trouble. My appetite was fitful, and I would lie awake for hours, and could not sleep, until I seemed more weary in the morning than when I retired. After reading one of your advertisements I decided to try the merits of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am so glad I did. No one can describe the good it did me. I took three bottles faithfully, and besides building up my general health, it drove all disease and poison out of my body, and made me feel as spry and active as a young girl. Mrs. Pinkham's medicines are certainly all they are claimed to be."—MRS. M. E. HUGHSON, 347 East Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Pinkham Tells How Ordinary Tasks Produce Displacements.

Apparently trifling incidents in woman's daily life frequently produce displacements of the womb. A slip on the stairs, lifting during menstruation, standing at a counter, running a sewing machine, or attending to the most ordinary tasks may result in displacement, and a train of serious evils is started.

The first indication of such trouble should be the signal for quick action. Don't let the condition become chronic through neglect or a mistaken idea that you can overcome it by exercise or leaving it alone.

More than a million women have regained health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If the slightest trouble appears which you do not understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for her advice, and a few timely words from her will show you the right thing to do. This advice costs you nothing, but it may mean life or happiness or both.

Mrs. Lelah Stowell, 177 Wellington St., Kingston, Ont., writes:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—You are indeed a godsend to women, and if they all knew what you could do for them, there would be no need of their dragging out miserable lives in agony.

"I suffered for years with bearing-down pains, womb trouble, nervousness, and excruciating headache, but a few bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made life look new and promising to me. I am light and happy, and I do not know what sickness is, and I now enjoy the best of health."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound can always be relied upon to restore health to women who thus suffer. It is a sovereign cure for the worst forms of female complaints,—that bearing-down feeling, weak back, falling and displacement of the womb, inflammation of the ovaries, and all troubles of the uterus or womb. It dissolves and expels tumors from the uterus in the early stage of development, and checks any tendency to cancerous humors. It subdues excitability, nervous prostration, and tones up the entire female system. Its record of cures is the greatest in the world, and should be relied upon with confidence.

$5000 FORFEIT if we cannot forthwith produce the original letters and signatures of above testimonials, which will prove their absolute genuineness.

Wireless Trolley a Success.

The "wireless" trolley system invented by Leon W. Pullen, of Philadelphia, was successfully tested over a mile of steam railroad tracks. The invention does away with the third rail through the use of a magnet. The equipment, which is easily adjusted, consists mainly of a highly magnetized bar running the entire length of the car. The feed wire is buried in the ground. At intervals of eighteen feet a metal cap four inches in diameter comes to the surface. This cap is harmless and has no connection with the feed wire. It only becomes charged when touched by the metal bar under the car.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A WOMAN'S MISERY.

Mrs. John LaRue, of 115 Paterson Avenue, Paterson, N. J., says: "I was troubled for about nine years, and what I suffered no one will ever know. I used about every known remedy that is said to be good for kidney complaint, but without deriving permanent relief. Often when alone in the house the back ache has been so bad that it brought tears to my eyes. The pain at times was so intense that I was compelled to give up my household duties and lie down. There were headaches, dizziness and blood rushing to my head to cause bleeding at the nose. The first box of Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me so much that I continued the treatment. The stinging pain in the small of my back, the rushes of blood to the head and other symptoms disappeared."

M. A. HANNA DEAD

His Passing Away is Universally Regretted.

Senator Marcus Alonzo Hanna died at 6:40 Monday evening at the family apartment in the Arlington hotel, Washington, after an illness extending over nearly two months, filled with apparent recoveries, followed by relapses and finally drifting into typhoid fever, which he was unable to withstand. When the end came all the members of the senator's family were in the room except Mrs. Hanna, the senator's wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Dan Hanna.

For the last two days Senator Hanna had not been conscious except at intervals, and then only to obey mechanically some instruction given him by the physicians. Fourteen hours before the end was announced life had practically suspended, the flickering spark being kept aglow by the most powerful scientific agencies.

The courage which had been displayed by Mrs. Hanna was the subject of the greatest surprise. She had been in almost constant attendance on her husband, though realizing fully there was no hope for recovery.

His Last Words.

The last intelligible words spoken by the senator were pathetic in his attempt to maintain to the last the humor which was characteristic of his life. The nurse, anticipating a want, asked if he was looking for his handkerchief.

"I think my wife has my handkerchief," the senator whispered.

Members of the family eager for any sign of consciousness or recognition which the senator might display, were told of the remark, and they recognized it as one of his favorite rejoinders in good-natured plaguing in which Mr. and Mrs. Hanna often indulged. It was the senator's custom when he missed any article, especially his handkerchief, to say: "I expect my wife has it."

The Funeral.

There will be an official funeral in the senate chamber at noon Wednesday, the body lying in state in the senate marble room in the morning. After the services special trains over the Pennsylvania railroad will carry the body, the family and friends to Cleveland, where services will be held at either the home of Senator Hanna or his son Dan Hanna, Friday. It is likely Bishop Leonard, of the northern diocese of Ohio, of the Episcopal church, will conduct the services.

Both houses of congress will adjourn immediately upon the announcement of the death of Senator Hanna. No business will be transacted in either house. As soon as the senate meets, Senator Foraker will announce the death of his colleague, Senator Hanna, and will offer resolutions of regret and for a committee to take charge of the funeral arrangements. A committee consisting of twenty senators will be named by President Pro Tem Frye and the sergeant at arms will be directed to make the necessary arrangements for the funeral services, both in Washington and at Cleveland.

President Roosevelt called at the Arlington personally to express his condolence to the members of the late Senator Hanna's family. He saw Mrs. Hanna, H. M. Hanna, the senator's brother, and Dan R. Hanna, his son, and remained with them for some time.

When it was known there was no chance for recovery arrangements were made to have a death mask taken by Sculptor U. S. J. Dunbar. The cast will be perfect and show the face in its usual fullness. The senator's face shows little emaciation, and owing to the constant use of oxygen, had taken on what appeared to be a coat of tan, which gave it almost a lifelike appearance.

Representative Maynard, of Virginia, introduced a bill appropriating $3,000,000 for an exposition to be held near Jamestown, Va., in celebration of the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people made at Jamestown, May 13, 1607.

Senator Hanna's last public appearance was at the annual Gridiron club dinner.

Stepped Down and Out.

Representative Shafroth, democrat, of Colorado, whose seat is being contested by Robert Boyne, of Denver, voluntarily withdrew all claim to the seat and asked the house to unseat him. He alleged that the frauds in voting were not by his connivance, but he was convinced that he would not have been elected without them. He was warmly applauded on both sides of the chamber.

At the first meeting of the new Mississippi state board of health Dr. B. F. Ward, of Winona, was elected president, and Dr. J. Hunter, of Jackson, re-elected secretary.

A new issue of stamps for the Louisiana Purchase exposition will be on sale May 1st.

The senate committee on commerce gave a hearing Wednesday to a delegation appointed by the levee convention held in New Orleans last October to present a series of resolutions looking to the perfection of a Mississippi river levee system from the mouth of that river to the mouth of the Ohio.

THE LATEST NEWS FROM THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR

Japan Landing Soldiers and Russian Officers Telling How It All Happened.

Three Russian cruisers, presumably Vladivostock squadron, were torpedoed in the straits of Tsugarn Friday.

The straits of Tsugaru or Sangar are between the island of Yesso, the northernmost of the four Japanese islands, and Hondo, the main island. The Japanese have a naval base at the northern end of Hondo and on the south side of the straits, and it is thought possible should the Vladivostock squadron attempt to harass the coast that they would be met by the torpedo boats.

It was thought that the large Dreyfus element would antagonize Russia, owing to Russia's attitude toward the Jews, but on the contrary Joseph Reinach, friend and biographer of Dreyfus, has published a letter declaring the honor and interests of France command her to affirm her sympathy for Russia and loyally to hold up the alliance.

RUSSIAN SHIPS AND MEN

Captured by the Japanese—Japs Very Busy.

The Russian cruiser Variag, which was reported to have been sunk at Chemulpo by the Japanese fleet, was captured and has arrived at Sasebo.

In addition to the Russian vessels damaged in the torpedo attack at Port Arthur, seven other vessels were captured.

General Kuropatkin has arrived at Harbin to take command of the Russian land forces.

The Japanese have captured five Russian commercial steamers. They were captured in Korean and adjacent waters at various times since Saturday by small cruisers. Some of the steamers are rich prizes. The small steamer Keok is detained at Yokohama, its status not being clear. The Japs have also captured three Russian transports with 2,000 men.

An important bridge on the Manchurian railroad has been blown up by the Japanese and thirty men have been killed.

Transport Blown Up.

A report has been received from Viceroy Alexieff saying that the Russian torpedo transport Yenisei has been blown up as the result of accidentally striking a mine at Port Arthur. The vessel sank and Captain Stephanoff, three officers and ninety-one men were lost.

The British steamer Fu Ping, when leaving Port Arthur, was fired upon by Russians. Three Chinese members of the crew were wounded. The Russians afterwards apologized for firing on the vessel. The steamer, upon its arrival at Wei-Hai-Wei, filed a protest with the British consul. The American consul has reported to United States Minister Conger that the Russian authorities have refused to allow the American steamer Pleiades to leave Port Arthur. The Pleiades sailed from Seattle February 2d with a cargo of flour.

The injured battle ships Czarovitch and Retvizan have been floated, but the cruiser Pallada is still on the beach.

It is reported that a big brick plant is looking for a location in Pratt City.

What For?

Somewhat extraordinary orders received at the Brooklyn navy yard led to the rumor that the department is preparing to send the battleship Iowa to the far east. The rumors were caused by the receipt of orders to replace the guns on the Iowa that were damaged during recent tests by two guns of a similar size from the battleship Indiana, which is at present out of commission.

The University of Virginia has awarded a scholarship to the Marion Military institute at Marion, Ala.

Burglars have robbed the Athens, Ala., dispensary twice in the last few weeks.

Bessemer and Selma are working to secure the Presbyterian synodical college.

Bun Kishi, of Tokio, Japan, a Japanese student who has been pursuing a course of studies at Emory college in Georgia, has sailed for his native land to serve his people in the war with Russia. Kishi has been in this country seven years and was preparing himself for the career of a preacher and teacher.

Nineteen thousand Japanese troops are reported landed at Chemulpo and 12,000 at Dove Bay.

New Decatur, Ala., has doubled her saloon license.

Application has been made for the appointment of receivers for the Baltimore Fire Insurance company and the home fire insurance company, both of Baltimore.

Judge James C. Browne won the nomination for the probate judgeship of Tuscaloosa county over General W. W. Brandon by 30 votes.

Admiral Cotton has asked to be retired because of his wife's ill health.

Iron Manufacture.

The Republic Iron and Steel Company have completed the repairing of their No. 3 furnace at Thomas, the work of relining and other improving being done in exactly fifty days, a record. The torch will be applied in the next few days. Their No. 1 furnace is also nearing completion, this iron-maker being practically rebuilt. It is intended to start up this furnace about March 1 or a little later. The No. 2 furnace, which has been in blast right along, has been making from 240 to 255 tons of iron daily. The new furnace of the Alabama Steel and Wire Company at Gadsden, which was blown in a few weeks ago, is doing well. The Sloss-Sheeld Steel and Iron Company has six of its seven furnaces in operation. Their make for the month of January footed up 33,550 tons of iron.

All rail freight rates to the east were recently adjudicated and an advance of 25 cents is reported in some circles, though there is no general complaint made.

Thompson Objects.

Representative C. W. Thompson, of Alabama, called at the postoffice department to enter further protest against the establishment of a postoffice at the Tuskegee school of Booker T. Washington. The postoffice at Tuskegee is a few hundred yards from the school, where a sub-station has been established, and it is declared by Representative Thompson that the mail facilities are already sufficient for the needs of the school, and the establishment of a new office is entirely unnecessary. The Tuskegee office is now of the second class and the establishment of a new office cutting into the receipts would reduce the compensation of the postmaster. The postmaster general is inclined to agree with Mr. Thompson, but the pressure is pretty strong for a new office, with a relation of Washington's at its head.

For Relief of the College.

Congressman Richardson has introduced a bill in congress for appropriating $60,000 for the relief of LaGrange college, which was destroyed in 1863 by the federal troops, the building, a fine library and laboratory being burned. Captain P. N. G. Rand, of Leighton, Ala., is the only surviving trustee of the college. Professor A. A. McGregor, of Town creek, Ala., is now writing a series of articles treating of the college prior to its destruction. The college was never rebuilt.

It is announced on what is claimed to be good authority that the Cahaba Valley railroad will be constructed within the next eighteen months and that preparations are now being completed looking to this end. The road will connect all the mines and plants in the mineral district adjacent to Selma, Ala.

New Colony in Alabama.

The land and industrial department of the Southern railway and Mobile and Ohio railroad announce land purchase in Alabama for development and colonization purposes.

A syndicate of Iowa, Illinois and Arkansas capitalists have purchased at Yellow Pine, Ala., mills forty miles of railroad and 60,000 acres of land. The lands are valuable for fruit raising and agriculture and the syndicate has perfected plans to settle them with northwestern farmers as fast as the timber is cut. Several thousand acres are now available and colonization will start at once.

Several parties of American citizens commemorated the sixth anniversary of the destruction of the United States battleship Maine at Havana. The wreck was decorated with red, white and blue and draped with black. There was a brief memorial address. The flag on the American shipping in the harbor was at half-mast.

Superintendent Kline, of the Central of Georgia railroad, left an estate of $17,000.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

FEBRUARY 11TH.

The senate was in executive session more than four hours, and after the agreement to vote on the treaty had been reached, nearly the entire time was devoted to general discussion of the encroachment of the senate and the president on each others' prerogatives under the constitution.

The house, by a vote of 172 to 103, concurred in the senate amendment to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill authorizing a loan of $4,600,000 by the government to the Louisiana Purchase exposition, after amending it with respect to the manner in which the money shall be paid.

When the house convened Mr. Foss, of Illinois, chairman of the naval affairs committee, reported the naval appropriation bill. In part, it reads:

"The committee recommends the construction of more than the usual number of cruisers, in view of the fact that last year we provided for five large battle ships. This will give a better proportion to our navy.

"If we judge public sentiment rightly, it is in favor of the continued policy of building up our navy. If we stopped now, we would be left behind the leading countries of the world.

"To complete all the ships authorized up to the present time, including their constructions and machinery, armor, armament and equipment, will cost $82,718,659."

The following bills were passed:

Relating to applications, declaratory statements, entries and final proofs under the homestead and other land laws, and to confirm the same in certain cases.

FEBRUARY 12TH.

The senate listened to the reading by Mr. Carmack of a speech prepared by Mr. Morgan in opposition to the president's policy with reference to an isthmian canal, and also considered the bill appropriating $200,000 to ex-Queen Liliuokalani of Hawaii. Speeches in support of the bill were made by Mr. Blackburn and Mr. Mitchell, and in opposition by Mr. Spooner and Mr. Platt, of Connecticut.

Mr. Spooner moved to recommit the measure, but the vote on this motion failed to display a quorum, and the senate was forced to adjourn.

Senator Martin presented the credentials of his colleague, Mr. Daniel, as senator from Virginia for the term beginning March 4, 1905.

Adjourned till Monday.

Speaker Cannon broke all previous records in the dispatch of private pension bills. Under his guidance 320 of these measures of relief were passed by the house in 155 minutes. Nearly the whole of this time was consumed in committee of the whole.

The house passed the bills "en bloc" under unanimous consent, which the speaker himself asked for. About half of the bills were disposed of under this request without amendment.

FEBRUARY 15TH.

The suspense concerning the condition of Senator Hanna had appreciable effect on the senate and the proceedings were marked by an unusual listlessness and depression.

There were no speeches on any subject and more attention was given to the frequent bulletins announcing the condition of the senator than to matters of legislation. The entire time of the legislative session was devoted to routine business.

The senate in executive session agreed to vote on the Panama treaty and all its amendments on February 23d.

The bill to pay $150,000 to ex-Queen Lilioukalani failed to pass the senate, the vote being 26 to 26.

The conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was presented and agreed to. The following bills passed:

Providing for the payment of $8000 to Jean Louis Legaire on account of his service in returning Sitting Bull and his followers from Canada to the United States after the Custer battle in Montana.

Providing for the compensation of officers and men of the army who lost effects in a cyclone at Galveston and a hurricane in Porto Rico in 1900.

Amending the laws relating to the sale of detached lots of the public lands.

The Tennessee River Improvement association, through a large delegation from northern Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee was given a hearing Monday morning by the rivers and harbors committee. Among the speakers were Representatives Richardson and Burnett, of Alabama and Judge Thomas R. Roulhac. Governor McMillin, of Tennessee, concluded the hearing with an eloquent plea for the policy of improving the Tennessee river.

Veteran Killed by the Cars.

John Reed, a confederate veteran about 70 years old, was run over and killed at the union station at Anniston, Ala., Monday morning by a train. Mr. Reed was waiting for the train which backs into the station. He was deaf and never heard its approach until too late. He lived an hour and a half after the accident. His death was due to internal injuries.

Feminine Frailties of Tem Attributed to Corsets.

By Arabella Kenealy.

FORMERLY the practice of tight lacing was confined almost to the fashionable and leisured classes. Now it permeates humblest levels of society. You shall not find a housekitchenmaid, a shop girl or a little slave of all work who will not pinch her waist to a morbid and ridiculous extent. The has become, indeed, a national evil, for these wasp waists rotic beings are the mothers of the race.

That the stays are indeed tight is shown by the fact that although physique and internal organs expand in every other direction, the adult woman is actually less than that of the girl between ten and Moreover, it has been found that the waists of young women reten the abnormal bondage of corests, described as "not the least bit tight, in the course of a few months to the extent of some three to seven The female waist is naturally two inches larger than that of a male responding height and weight. Yet the waist of woman unnaturally pressed is a very great many inches smaller, as we know, than that r asculine fellow.

Let man, who rails at the proneness of a gentler sex to be victim and pitiful spites, try for himself what it means to spend a day in corsets, a summer's day preferably, when the blood vessels respond dilating warmth. How much amiability, tolerance or good succeed in manufacturing during such a day?

It would serve him for a liberal education, and temper forever strange masculine and inartistic enthusiasm for wasp waists. For prove to him once and for all time the cost at which the misteen applauds are gained. Also, it would bring home to him forcibly more delectable a place the world would be to women if sordid bickerings, "incompatibilities" and disunion, were woman from this her weariest burden, were she permitted to reach the natural development of her womanhood, instead of remaining the immature, veloped (though possibly muscular) being she is today.

DEATH DEALT BY DYNAMITE

Twenty-Five People are Hurled to Instant Annihilation.

WRECK CAUSED EXPLOSION

Two Freight Trains Crash at Small Station in Utah and Deadly Cargo Scatters Ruin.

Twenty-five persons have been kil ed, fifteen others injured, several f tally believed fatally, and a great amount of railroad property destroyed by an explosion of a car load of dynamite at Jackson, Utah, a telegraph station on the western end of the Great Og den-Lucien cut-off on the Southern Pacific railroad.

The explosion was caused by a collision between two freight trains, due, it is said, to the failure of the air brakes apparatus to operate. Eight of the dead and five of the injured are Americans; the others are Greek laborers.

The dead are T. W. Burke, section foreman, his wife and three children; J. W. Burke, a former general foreman; W. L. Holler, messenger, formerly of Andrew, Ind.; Owen Dermody, conductor, formerly of Beaver Dam, Wis. Seventeen Greek laborers.

The explosion was terrific. Everything within a radius of half a mile was wrecked. The town of Terrace, 15 miles to the north, was shaken as though by an earthquake. Windows in the station at Colon, 15 miles away, were shattered, and the sound of the explosion was heard in Ogden City, 81 miles from the scene of the disaster. The ground upon which the trains were standing was torn up for over a thousand feet, leaving a great excavation 30 feet in depth, fragments of a dozen freight cars and two engines were thrown for incredible distances over the surrounding country, the station building was blown to splinters and the dead and injured were scattered or hundreds of feet in all directions, most of them having their clothing torn off. Telegraph wires and poles were torn down for a thousand feet and the first knowledge of the disaster came from Terrace, 15 miles away, the operator at that place reporting to headquarters that he saw an immense cloud of smoke ascend from Jackson and spread out at a great height.

A relief train with doctors, nurses and stretchers was hurriedly dispatched from Ogden. The train returned with the injured who were placed in the company's general hospital.

The great loss of life among the Greeks is accounted for by the fact that they occupied outfitting cars which were standing near the spot where the explosion occurred.

Of the forty-six persons at Jackson at the time of the explosion, only nine escaped death or injury. The great railroad trestle over the lake was not damaged, the explosion occurring a short distance beyond the western end of that structure.

FOES HAVE MET ON THE LAND

Initial Battle on the Banks of the the Yalu is Reported.

VICTORY WITH THE JAPS

Russians are Said to Have Been Repulsed With Heavy Loss--War News is Unreliable.

An Associated Press dispatch of Sunday from Chee Foo says: It is reported that the Russian advance on the Yalu has been repulsed, with a loss of 2,500 men.

London Daily Mail correspondent at New Chwang cabled Sunday night: "It is reported here that Russia and Japanese outposts on the Yalu have been engaged, the Russians suffering considerable loss. No details."

The cables are still absolutely silent with regard to the progress of the war, but there are vague rumors of land fighting. As an instance, the Paris edition of The New York Herald's correspondent at St. Petersburg talks of a Russian repulse on the Yalu river with a loss of 2,500 lives. These rumors are unconfirmed and from a reliable quarter. The Morning Post's Chee Foo correspondent says he learns that tens of thousands of Japanese are advancing by forced marches from various parts of Korea on the Yalu and that severe fighting is expected shortly. These are the only references to actual operations that have reached London.

Breach of Neutrality Charged.

The London Mail's Shanghai cable dated Sunday, says: The Madjur affair has assumed international importance. The French consul has sided with Russia, and backs up the claim that the Madjur is needed to protect Russian interests at Shanghai.

Japan's consul has telegraphed the Chinese foreign office, explaining the serious consequence possible if such a flagrant breach of neutrality is permitted. The Akitsushima has cleared for action.

The British warships Rinaldo, Phoenix and Butomart have anchored in the harbor.

The correspondent's first cablegram concerning the affair was as follows:

"The Russian gunboat Madjur is remaining in port in defiance of the Chinese order, which expired at 5 o'clock this afternoon. It is believed the Pelyang squadron (Chinese) will be instructed to enforce the order.

"Russian and French authorities claim there has been no infringement of neutrality, but the Japanese assert the presence of the Madjur prevents their merchantment coming to port.

"The Japanese cruiser, Akitsuisima, is still outside the harbor waiting for the Madjur. Captain Cowan, commanding the Madjur, is an Englishman, educated at Eton, Oxford. He is ashore assisting the Russian consul."

The News in St. Petersburg.

A dispatch from Port Arthur received in St. Petersburg stated that the first land encounter occurred Saturday.

A picket of Cossacks attacked a small detachment of Japanese troops on Korean territory.

The Cossacks captured some Japanese prisoners, on whom they found maps and papers.

The collision was presumably between reconnoitering parties. An engagement is not anticipated immediately. A Port Arthur dispatch says the Japanese fleet was observed February 16 cruising off that port.

Jap Major and Guard Captured.

An Associated Press dispatch from St. Petersburg says: Major General Pflug, the chief of staff of Viceroy Alexieff, telegraphed from Port Arthur Saturday as follows:

A body of Cossacks, marching from Wiju, captured a Japanese major, Tatsura, with five soldiers and two civilians.

The reports regarding the enemy are generally contradictory and scarce.

PRESIDENT AMADOR INAUGURATED.

First Chief Executive of Panama Republic Takes the Oath of Office.

At Panama, February 20, Dr. Amador was inaugurated first president of the republic of Panama before the national constitutional convention. The inauguration occurred in the plaza, the same place where the act of Panaman independence was read on November 3, 1903.

Thousands of persons were present and the scene was most interesting. A number of ladies witnessed the ceremony, as did the civil and military officials.

THE CANAL TREATY

Senator Carmack Has a Hot Broadside to Discharge

Tuesday a vote will be had on the Panama canal treaty. With the Panama question disposed of, the senate will take up appropriation bills, giving precedence to the agricultural bill. It is expected that it will be debated at some length. Then the legislative, executive, judicial, naval, pension and army bills will be considered.

Senator Carmack, of Tennessee, if opportunity is afforded him before the vote is taken on the canal treaty, expects to deliver a speech on that subject with special reference to the forty million dollars. In discussing the matter the senator does not mince words. He declares that Vunau-Varilla, the minister from Panama, is the very worst of the knaves whose thieving operations bankrupted the old Panama Canal company, and to prove it the senator has official reports and documents from the French courts. Senator Carmack points out that in the beginning the French peasantry chiefly raised the money, about two hundred and eighty-five million dollars, to start the canal scheme.

Of this amount one hundred and seventy million dollars was corruptly expended in bribery of French newspapers, cabinet ministers and members of the French parliament. About one hundred and fifteen million dollars were nominally expended on the canal work, but about half of this sum went into the pockets of swindling contractors and others, and represented not a single day's work on the canal.

"I have heard on what I consider first-rate authority that Mr. W. N. Cromwell, the attorney of this company, is to receive 5 per cent, or about $2,000,000, of this $40,000,000. I should be glad to know whether this is true, and Mr. Cromwell no doubt, if he thinks it worth his while, can give me and the country the information.

"Then I should be glad to know what legitimate service Mr. Cromwell could have performed in connection with this business that would entitle him to such an enormous fee."

Hanna's Funeral.

The nation, state and home city of Senator Hanna bestowed upon him Friday afternoon their last honors. Funeral services over the remains of the dead statesman were held in St. Paul's Episcopal church.

As a mark of respect for the dead business was abandoned from 12 to 2 o'clock throughout the city. From 1 to 1:05 o'clock, traffic on all the steam and electric roads was suspended. During a portion of that time people stood with bowed heads.

The body, accompanied only by the family, pallbearers and Bishop Leonard, proceeded to Lakeview cemetery, where a final farewell of the dead was taken in Wade Memorial chapel. The services consisted simply of a prayer by the bishop. The body was deposited in crypt in the chapel to await burial at the pleasure of the family.

OBJECTIONABLE MATTER

To be Crusaded Out of Postal Rights. Advertisements Included.

The postoffice department has begun a crusade against the printing of objectional advertisements and stories in newspapers and periodicals throughout the country. The action is based on section 3893 of the revised statutes, which imposed a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not over fifty years, or both for any person depositing in the mails or aiding in circulating through the mails of any obscene print, pamphlet, etc.

It is proposed to amend this law to include vulgar advertisements and other printed matter. Under the new policy a number of papers containing questionable matter have been thrown out of the mails under telegraphic orders to the postmasters, and a campaign will be waged against objectionable medical advertisements which are widely published.

"Russia gladly and willingly favored the suggestion of Secretary Hay that, as far as possible, the belligerents in the far eastern war localize hostilities and respect the neutrality of China in the interest of a continuance of peaceful intercourse of the rest of the world." This statement was made by Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador to the United States, and he added: "My government expressed the conviction that Mr. Hay's suggestion was prompted by motives of the highest humanity and was mutually advantageops to the belligerents."

The report of Charles J. Bonaparte, who was appointed to investigate affairs in Indian Territory, has been received at the interior department.

FURTHER EXPANSION

San Domingo May Become a United States Colony

The turn affairs have taken in San Domingo gives credence to a rumor that has been prevalent around the war department and white house for several days to the effect that San Domingo is to be made part of the United States in a few weeks.

The president has made all arrangements for this, and it is boldly announced in administration circles that the strife ridden country would have been seized two weeks ago had it not been feared that such action would have jeopardized the ratification of the Panama canal treaty.

Francis B. Loomis, assistant secretary of state, has gone to the West Indies. Ostensibly Mr. Loomis is going with Admiral Dewey to witness the maneuvers, but it is understood that he is sent by the president to investigate the situation in San Domingo, where he will be on the spot ready to act when the administration's policy is unfolded.

Mississippi Money.

Mississippi's superintendent of education is figuring out the amount of school fund money that is to go to each of the seventy-five counties of the state, and in a few days the teachers will get their money. The sum to be distributed at this time on account of the January distribution is $833,333.33, and that will make a great hole in the state's strong box. The expenses of the legislature will be nearly another hundred thousand dollars, and when the running expenses for the month of March are paid there will be little or nothing left in the state treasury.

Car Report.

The report of the Alabama Car Service Association, issued last week, shows by detail the number of cars handled from each point last year. It credits Birmingham, 95,442 cars; Bessemer 69,772 cars; Ensley 56,748 cars, Anniston 27,308 cars, Mobile 44,662 cars, Montgomery 28,647 cars, North Birmingham 37,945 cars, Sheffield 38,266 cars.

The total for 1903 is 733,816, an increase over the previous year of 117,879.

Another Iron Maker.

The probabilities are that the work that has been suspended for the past few weeks on the construction of No. 6 furnace of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway company at Ensley, Ala., will be resumed in a few days. It is understood that a large number of workmen will be put at work on the furnace, and it will be pushed rapidly to completion

Not So Much Gold.

The production of gold for the year 1903 fell below that of 1902 to the extent of $5,500,000. The total, with the gold from Alaska included, is a little less than $74,500,000. In 1902 the total was more than $80,000,000. The miners' strike in Colorado is the principal cause of the decrease.

Big Stove Order.

The Sheffield, Ala., stove works has received from a wholesale firm in South Carolina the largest order for stoves ever given to an Alabama factory. The order calls for $25,000 worth of stoves, to be delivered at the earliest possible date.

The verdict of the arbitration court relative to the claims against Venezuela are made known. It recognizes the preference of England, Germany and Italy on 30 per cent of the import duties at La Guyra and Porto Cabello. The United States is charged with the execution of the sentence within three months.

Naval officials are considering earnestly the strengthening of the American Asiatic fleet in view of the vast interests of this country in the Philippines and China and in Korea. At the same time that the fleet is regarded as too small there is a desire to avoid exciting the suspicion of the old world powers, lest this government may be put in a false light.

The Japanese squadron has captured four Russian torpedo boats at Port Arthur by using Russian signals. This dispatch confirms reports from various quarters of a fresh attack on Port Arthur by the Japanese. The report adds that the Russian crews of the four torpedo boats have been transferred.

In the postoffice appropriation bill the fast mail subsidies amounting to $142,000, between Washington and New Orleans, and $25,000 between Kansas City and Newton, Kas., are continued. The item for railway transportation amounts to $45,000,000, which is an increase of about 3 per cent.

AGAINST THE NEGRO

United States Supreme Court Throws Out Giles Case.

In the United States supreme court Tuesday an opinion was handed down by Justice Day in the case of Jackson Giles versus the board of registration of Montgomery county, Alabama, dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction, no federal question being involved. The case involved the suffrage clause of the new constitution of Alabama. This provision was attacked on a discrimination against the colored race, of which Giles is a member. The effect of the decision is against Giles.

Justice Harlan was the only member who dissented.

The decision in this case had been awaited with considerable interest throughout the United States, as it involved the suffrage clause of Alabama's new constitution. Giles and those who were backing him were hopeful of a favorable decision in view of the recent attitude of the court in the Rogers case, wherein the court reversed the supreme court of Alabama, which had held that the allegation by a defendant that negroes were excluded from the grand jury on account of color was irrelevant.

The Giles case, however, was not analagous to the Rogers case, and the decision of the supreme court follows the decision in the Mississippi case decided some years ago. Under this decision there is no remedy that the courts can apply, and relief, if any is to be given, must be legislative.

Bibb County Taxes.

The tax assessment of Bibb county is made the subject of a report to the governor on the books of the officials of that county by Assistant Examiner Sedberry.

Bibb county is looked upon as one of the richest counties in the state, having third the largest output of coal, and there are also valuable pine and hard wood forests that are practically untouched. And yet the examiner says that the lands are assessed at from 50 cents to $3 per acre.

Several county officers are short small amounts.

Uniform Book Law for Mississippi.

After an all-day's discussion the Mississippi house on Monday passed the uniform school book bill. The governor is given authority to appoint the school book commissioners, eight in number, who are to be taken from the ranks of the best teachers and educators of the state. The governor and the attorney general, who were suggested as members of the commission, were left off—very much to their delight.

Cornwell May Return.

Captain T. J. Cornwell, president of the Bessemer, Ala., Savings bank, who left Bessemer last June, it is stated, will probably return in the next few days. Following hard after Captain Cornwell's departure from the Marvel City the Bessemer Savings bank and the Bank of Commerce closed their doors. Governor Jelks has called in the reward for the arrest of Captain Cornwell, and a number of his friends in Bessemer, it is stated, have arranged to furnish bonds on the indictments returned against him by the grand jury.

Captain Cornwell has been in Honduras for the past several months. On yesterday a number of Bessemer friends sent a cablegram stating that all arrangements had been perfected for his return.

Assets Sold.

The assets of the defunct Bessemer Savings bank were sold Friday. Everything sold for cash. The leading event of the sale from a local standpoint was that of the handsome brick and stone building of the Bessemer Savings Bank and Trust company. It was bought in by J. J. Sullivan for $13,100. It is believed that Mr. Sullivan represented the Bessemer Bank and Trust company.

Edward Relgar, who gave his address as Chicago, was arrested at the white house and locked up pending an inquiry into his mental condition. Relgar is evidently of unbalanced mind. He has written many letters to the president, suggesting that people be named in accordance with their occupations. Relgar desired to see the president to ascertain why his letters had not been answered. When he was searched a loaded revolver and a box of cartridges were found in his pockets.

EATH DEALT BY DYNAMITE

enty-Five People are Hurled to Instant Annihiliation.

RECK CAUSED EXPLOSION

o Freight Trains Crash at Small Station in Utah and Deadly Cargo Scatters Ruin.

Twenty-five persons have been kill- fifteen others injured, several, it is lieved fatally, and a great amount railroad property destroyed by an plosion of a car load of dynamite Jackson, Utah, a telegraph station the western end of the Great Og- n-Lucien cut off on the Southern Pa ic railroad.

The explosion was caused by a col- ion between two freight trains, due, is said, to the failure of the air kes apparatus to operate. Eight of e dead and five of the injured are mericans; the others are Greek la- rers.

The dead are T. W. Burke, section reman, his wife and three children; W. Burke, a former general fore- an; W. L. Holler, messenger, for- erly of Andrew, Ind.; Owen Der- dy, conductor, formerly of Beaver m, Wis. Seventeen Greek laborers.

The explosion was terrific. Every- ing within a radius of half a mile s wrecked. The town of Terrace, miles to the north, was shaken as ough by an earthquake. Window nes in the station at Colon, 15 miles way, were shattered, and the sound the explosion was heard in Ogden y, 81 miles from the scene of the aster. The ground upon which the ains were standing was torn up for er a thousand feet, leaving a great cavation 30 feet in depth, fragments a dozen freight cars and two en- nes were thrown for incredible dis- nces over the surrounding country, e station building was blown to linters and the dead and injured ere scattered for hundreds of feet in directions, most of them having eir clothing torn off. Telegraph es and poles were torn down for a ousand feet and the first knowledge the disaster came from Terrace, 15 les away, the operator at that place porting to headquarters that he saw immense cloud of smoke ascend m Jackson and spread out at a eat height.

A relief train with doctors, nurses d stretchers was hurriedly dispatch- from Ogden. The train returned th the injured who were placed in company's general hospital.

The great loss of life among the eeks is accounted for by the fact at they occupied outfitting cars ich were standing near the spot ere the explosion occurred.

Of the forty-six persons at Jackson the time of the explosion, only nine caped death or injury. The great ilroad trestle over the lake was not maged, the explosion occurring a ort distance beyond the western end that structure.

FOES HAVE MET ON THE LAND

Initial Battle on the Banks of the the Yalu is Reported.

VICTORY WITH THE JAPS

Russians are Said to Have Been Repulsed With Heavy Loss--War News is Unreliable.

An Associated Press dispatch of Sunday from Chee Foo says: It is reported that the Russian advance on the Yalu has been repulsed, with a loss of 2,500 men.

London Daily Mail correspondent at New Chwang cabled Sunday night: "It is reported here that Russia and Japanese outposts on the Yalu have been engaged, the Russians suffering considerable loss. No details."

The cables are still absolutely silent with regard to the progress of the war, but there are vague rumors of land fighting. As an instance, the Paris edition of The New York Herald's correspondent at St. Petersburg talks of a Russian repulse on the Yalu river with a loss of 2,500 lives. These rumors are unconfirmed and from a reliable quarter. The Morning Post's Chee Foo correspondent says he learns that tens of thousands of Japanese are advancing by forced marches from various parts of Korea on the Yalu and that severe fighting is expected shortly. These are the only references to actual operations that have reached London.

Breach of Neutrality Charged.

The London Mail's Shanghai cable dated Sunday, says: The Madjur affair has assumed international importance. The French consul has sided with Russia, and backs up the claim that the Madjur is needed to protect Russian interests at Shanghai.

Japan's consul has telegraphed the Chinese foreign office, explaining the serious consequence possible if such a flagrant breach of neutrality is permitted. The Akitsushima has cleared for action.

The British warships Rinaldo, Phoenix and Butomart have anchored in the harbor.

The correspondent's first cablegram concerning the affair was as follows:

"The Russian gunboat Madjur is remaining in port in defiance of the Chinese order, which expired at 5 o'clock this afternoon. It is believed the Pei-yang squadron (Chinese) will be instructed to enforce the order.

"Russian and French authorities claim there has been no intringement of neutrality, but the Japanese assert the presence of the Madjur prevents their merchantment coming to port.

"The Japanese cruiser, Akitsuisima, is still outside the harbor waiting for the Madjur. Captain Cowan, commanding the Madjur, is an Englishman, educated at Eton, Oxford. He is ashore assisting the Russian consul."

The News in St. Petersburg.

A dispatch from Port Arthur received in St. Petersburg stated that the first land encounter occurred Saturday.

A picket of Cossacks attacked a small detachment of Japanese troops on Korean territory.

The Cossacks captured some Japanese prisoners, on whom they found maps and papers.

The collision was presumably between reconnoitering parties. An engagement is not anticipated immediately. A Port Arthur dispatch says the Japanese fleet was observed February 16 cruising off that port.

Jap Major and Guard Captured.

An Associated Press dispatch from St. Petersburg says: Major General Pflug, the chief of staff of Viceroy Alexieff, telegraphed from Port Arthur Saturday as follows:

A body of Cossacks, marching from Wiju, captured a Japanese major, Tatsura, with five soldiers and two civilians.

The reports regarding the enemy are generally contradictory and scarce.

PRESIDENT AMADOR INAUGURATED.

First Chief Executive of Panama Republic Takes the Oath of Office.

At Panama, February 20, Dr. Amador was inaugurated first president of the republic of Panama before the national constitutional convention. The inauguration occurred in the plaza, the same place where the act of Panaman independence was read on November 3, 1903.

Thousands of persons were present and the scene was most interesting. A number of ladies witnessed the ceremony, as did the civil and military officials.

THE CANAL TREATY

Senator Carmack Has a Hot Broadside to Discharge

Tuesday a vote will be had on the Panama canal treaty. With the Panama question disposed of, the senate will take up appropriation bills, giving precedence to the agricultural bill. It is expected that it will be debated at some length. Then the legislative, executive, judicial, naval, pension and army bills will be considered.

Senator Carmack, of Tennessee, if opportunity is afforded him before the vote is taken on the canal treaty, expects to deliver a speech on that subject with special reference to the forty million dollars. In discussing the matter the senator does not mince words. He declares that Vunau-Varilla, the minister from Panama, is the very worst of the knaves whose thieving operations bankrupted the old Panama Canal company, and to prove it the senator has official reports and documents from the French courts. Senator Carmack points out that in the beginning the French peasantry chiefly raised the money, about two hundred and eighty-five million dollars, to start the canal scheme.

Of this amount one hundred and seventy million dollars was corruptly expended in bribery of French newspapers, cabinet ministers and members of the French parliament. About one hundred and fifteen million dollars were nominally expended on the canal work, but about half of this sum went into the pockets of swindling contractors and others, and represented not a single day's work on the canal.

"I have heard on what I consider first-rate authority that Mr. W. N. Cromwell, the attorney of this company, is to receive 5 per cent, or about $2,000,000, of this $40,000,000. I should be glad to know whether this is true, and Mr. Cromwell no doubt, if he thinks it worth his while, can give me and the country the information.

"Then I should be glad to know what legitimate service Mr. Cromwell could have performed in connection with this business that would entitle him to such an enormous fee."

Hanna's Funeral.

The nation, state and home city of Senator Hanna bestowed upon him Friday afternoon their last honors. Funeral services over the remains of the dead statesman were held in St. Paul's Episcopal church.

As a mark of respect for the dead business was abandoned from 12 to 2 o'clock throughout the city. From 1 to 1:05 o'clock, traffic on all the steam and electric roads was suspended. During a portion of that time people stood with bowed heads.

The body, accompanied only by the family, pallbearers and Bishop Leonard, proceeded to Lakeview cemetery, where a final farewell of the dead was taken in Wade Memorial chapel. The services consisted simply of a prayer by the bishop. The body was deposited in crypt in the chapel to await burial at the pleasure of the family.

OBJECTIONABLE MATTER

To be Crusaded Out of Postal Rights. Advertisements Included.

The postoffice department has begun a crusade against the printing of objectional advertisements and stories in newspapers and periodicals throughout the country. The action is based on section 3893 of the revised statutes, which imposed a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not over fifty years, or both for any person depositing in the mails or aiding in circulating through the mails of any obscene print, pamphlet, etc.

It is proposed to amend this law to include vulgar advertisements and other printed matter. Under the new policy a number of papers containing questionable matter have been thrown out of the mails under telegraphic orders to the postmasters, and a campaign will be waged against objectionable medical advertisements which are widely published.

"Russia gladly and willingly favored the suggestion of Secretary Hay that, as far as possible, the belligerents in the far eastern war localize hostilities and respect the neutrality of China in the interest of a continuance of peaceful intercourse of the rest of the world." This statement was made by Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador to the United States, and he added: "My government expressed the conviction that Mr. Hay's suggestion was prompted by motives of the highest humanity and was mutually advantageous to the belligerents."

The report of Charles J. Bonaparte, who was appointed to investigate affairs in Indian Territory, has been received at the interior department.

FURTHER EXPANSION

San Domingo May Become a United States Colony

The turn affairs have taken in San Domingo gives credence to a rumor that has been prevalent around the war department and white house for several days to the effect that San Domingo is to be made part of the United States in a few weeks.

The president has made all arrangements for this, and it is boldly announced in administration circles that the strife ridden country would have been seized two weeks ago had it not been feared that such action would have jeopardized the ratification of the Panama canal treaty.

Francis B. Loomis, assistant secretary of state, has gone to the West Indies. Ostensibly Mr. Loomis is going with Admiral Dewey to witness the maneuvers, but it is understood that he is sent by the president to investigate the situation in San Domingo, where he will be on the spot ready to act when the administration's policy is unfolded.

Mississippi Money.

Mississippi's superintendent of education is figuring out the amount of school fund money that is to go to each of the seventy-five counties of the state, and in a few days the teachers will get their money. The sum to be distributed at this time on account of the January distribution is $833,333.33, and that will make a great hole in the state's strong box. The expenses of the legislature will be nearly another hundred thousand dollars, and when the running expenses for the month of March are paid there will be little or nothing left in the state treasury.

Car Report.

The report of the Alabama Car Service Association, issued last week, shows by detail the number of cars handled from each point last year. It credits Birmingham, 95,442 cars; Bessemer 69,772 cars; Ensley 56,748 cars, Anniston 27,308 cars, Mobile 44,662 cars, Montgomery 28,647 cars, North Birmingham 37,945 cars, Shemeld 38,266 cars.

The total for 1903 is 733,816, an increase over the previous year of 117,879.

Another Iron Maker.

The probabilities are that the work that has been suspended for the past few weeks on the construction of No. 6 furnace of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway company at Ensley, Ala., will be resumed in a few days. It is understood that a large number of workmen will be put at work on the furnace, and it will be pushed rapidly to completion

Not So Much Gold.

The production of gold for the year 1903 fell below that of 1902 to the extent of $5,500,000. The total, with the gold from Alaska included, is a little less than $74,500,000. In 1902 the total was more than $80,000,000. The miners' strike in Colorado is the principal cause of the decrease.

Big Stove Order.

The Sheffield, Ala., stove works has received from a wholesale firm in South Carolina the largest order for stoves ever given to an Alabama factory. The order calls for $25,000 worth of stoves, to be delivered at the earliest possible date.

The verdict of the arbitration court relative to the claims against Venezuela are made known. It recognizes the preference of England, Germany and Italy on 30 per cent of the import duties at La Guyra and Porto Cabello. The United States is charged with the execution of the sentence within three months.

Naval officials are considering earnestly the strengthening of the American Asiatic fleet in view of the vast interests of this country in the Philippines and China and in Korea. At the same time that the fleet is regarded as too small there is a desire to avoid exciting the suspicion of the old world powers, lest this government may be put in a false light.

The Japanese squadron has captured four Russian torpedo boats at Port Arthur by using Russian signals. This dispatch confirms reports from various quarters of a fresh attack on Port Arthur by the Japanese. The report adds that the Russian crews of the four torpedo boats have been transferred.

In the postoffice appropriation bill the fast mail subsidies amounting to $142,000, between Washington and New Orleans, and $25,000 between Kansas City and Newton, Kas., are continued. The item for railway transportation amounts to $45,000,000, which is an increase of about 3 per cent.

AGAINST THE NEGRO

United States Supreme Court Throws Out Giles Case.

In the United States supreme court Tuesday an opinion was handed down by Justice Day in the case of Jackron Giles versus the board of registration of Montgomery county, Alabama, dismissing the case for want of jurisdiction, no federal question being involved. The case involved the suffrage clause of the new constitution of Alabama. This provision was attacked on a discrimination against the colored race, of which Giles is a member. The effect of the decision is against Giles.

Justice Harlan was the only member who dissented.

The decision in this case had been awaited with considerable interest throughout the United States, as it involved the suffrage clause of Alabama's new constitution. Giles and those who were backing him were hopeful of a favorable decision in view of the recent attitude of the court in the Rogers case, wherein the court reversed the supreme court of Alabama, which had held that the allegation by a defendant that negroes were excluded from the grand jury on account of color was irrelevant.

The Giles case, however, was not analagous to the Rogers case, and the decision of the supreme court follows the decision in the Mississippi case decided some years ago. Under this decision there is no remedy that the courts can apply, and relief, if any is to be given, must be legislative.

Bibb County Taxes.

The tax assessment of Bibb county is made the subject of a report to the governor on the books of the officials of that county by Assistant Examiner Sedberry.

Bibb county is looked upon as one of the richest counties in the state, having third the largest output of coal, and there are also valuable pine and hard wood forests that are practically untouched. And yet the examiner says that the lands are assessed at from 50 cents to $3 per acre.

Several county officers are short small amounts.

Uniform Book Law for Mississippi.

After an all-day's discussion the Mississippi house on Monday passed the uniform school book bill. The governor is given authority to appoint the school book commissioners, eight in number, who are to be taken from the ranks of the best teachers and educators of the state. The governor and the attorney general, who were suggested as members of the commission, were left off—very much to their delight.

Cornwell May Return.

Captain T. J. Cornwell, president of the Bessemer, Ala., Savings bank, who left Bessemer last June, it is stated, will probably return in the next few days. Following hard after Captain Cornwell's departure from the Marvel City the Bessemer Savings bank and the Bank of Commerce closed their doors. Governor Jelks has called in the reward for the arrest of Captain Cornwell, and a number of his friends in Bessemer, it is stated, have arranged to furnish bonds on the indictments returned against him by the grand jury.

Captain Cornwell has been in Honduras for the past several months. On yesterday a number of Bessemer friends sent a cablegram stating that all arrangements had been perfected for his return.

Assets Sold.

The assets of the defunct Bessemer Savings bank were sold Friday. Everything sold for cash. The leading event of the sale from a local standpoint was that of the handsome brick and stone building of the Bessemer Savings Bank and Trust company. It was bought in by J. J. Sullivan for $13,100. It is believed that Mr. Sullivan represented the Bessemer Bank and Trust company.

Edward Relgar, who gave his address as Chicago, was arrested at the white house and locked up pending an inquiry into his mental condition. Relgar is evidently of unbalanced mind. He has written many letters to the president, suggesting that people be named in accordance with their occupations. Relgar desired to see the president to ascertain why his letters had not been answered. When he was searched a loaded revolver and a box of cartridges were found in his pockets.

The "London Express" has the news that Canada's army is to be increased to 100,000 men. Also that a Canadian regiment is to be stationed in British India by way of giving the officers and men practice under active service conditions.

LINES TO THE LIVER.

Let poets rave, as poets will,
About the heart and soul,
And in some high-toned sonnet still
Their lofty worth extol.
I, who must walk in humble ways
And modest muses woo,
I write this simple song to praise
The liver good and true.

What's heart or soul to mortal man,
What's anything, alack!
To us poor bilious creatures when
The liver's out of whack?
While sentiment, I take it, is
All well enough and nice,
Yet when we come right down to "biz,"
The liver cuts the ice.

So, don't you to the spooney bards'
Soft sentiment succumb,
For he who highest truth regards
Will keep his liver plumb.
He knows that heart and soul may bless
A mortal in a way,
But, oh! they're both "N. G." unless
Your liver's all "O. K."

THE TULIP MAN

By MINERVA M. LINDEN.

Copyrighted, 1908, by The Authors Publishing Company.

He was a tall, gaunt, white haired old man of seventy or more. He lived alone—just across the street, in an old fashioned frame building, covered with vines and creepers. In front was a little plot—a narrow strip of ground—where lilies of the valley grew in summer. Behind was a long garden filled in spring with rows and rows of blazing tulips.

I saw him first working with a little hoe among the bulbs with their long, green leaves. After that I saw him often. I would stop for a few moments on my way home in the evening and watch him while he went up and down the long rows.

He asked me to come in, one evening, and look at his tulips. I went; he showed me the different varieties, stepping among them with infinite care. Then we sat down on a little bench outside of the back door, where hop vines climbed up the side of the house, and he began the story of his life. What prompted him to tell it was my asking if he never tried to grow any flowers except tulips.

"Try, my man," he said, absently, then was silent for a while. A far-away look came into the faded eyes. He took his pipe from his mouth and knocked the ashes to the ground.

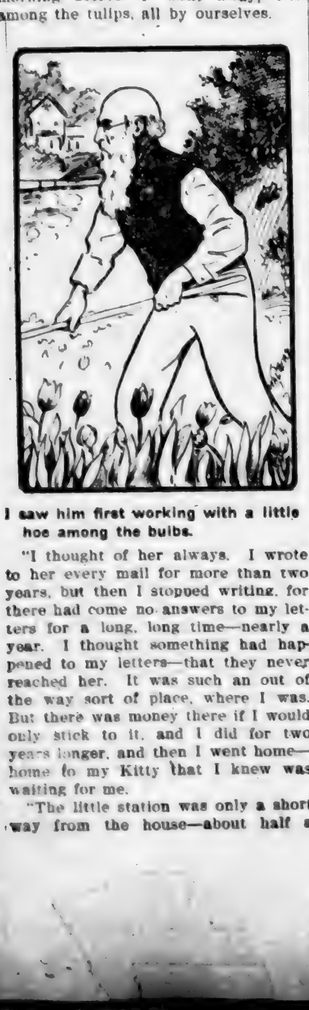
"You've never heard then? I thought everybody knew about my Kitty—Kitty and her tulips.

"It happened years ago—ah, me, so long ago; but it's as fresh to me as ever—my Kitty's simple white face and dark, pansy eyes." His coat sleeve went across his eyes as if wiping away a tear.

"When I think of that morning when I left her to go away out west, I can always see the tulips, too. They were something like these, only—ah! such blood-red ones and such white ones, so pure and delicate. Kitty, with her white apron and white linen sun-bonnet, always reminded me of the white ones.

"She lived out in the country. The house stood back from the road and you had to go down a long lane past the sheep pasture and the apple orchard to find it. I went to see her every day. She was all the world to me. I loved her—loved her with all my heart, and we were to be married when I came back—back from the west, with my pockets full of money. I bent down and kissed her and said, 'Well, good bye, Kitty—good bye, my girl. Keep a light heart till I come back. Good bye.'

"But she put her head on my shoulder and cried, 'Oh, don't go, Jim—don't go,' she kept saying over and over to the last. That was on the morning before I went away, out among the tulips, all by ourselves.



I saw him first working with a little hoe among the bulbs.

"I thought of her always. I wrote to her every mail for more than two years, but then I stopped writing, for there had come no answers to my letters for a long, long time—nearly a year. I thought something had happened to my letters—that they never reached her. It was such an out of the way sort of place, where I was. But there was money there if I would only stick to it, and I did for two years longer, and then I went home—home to my Kitty that I knew was waiting for me.

"The little station was only a short way from the house—about half a mile. So I walked. I say walked, but it was more like a run. I shaded my eyes at the head of the lane and looked down, thinking I might see her outside, somewhere—feeding the chickens, maybe, or sitting on the stoop. But I saw nothing of her.

"To the left in the barnyard an old man was milking a little black cow. I passed on up the path to the front door. I knocked; but everything was quiet. The place where the tulips grew was a wilderness of weeds.

"'Kitty! Kitty!' I called; 'Kitty, my girl, where are you?' I opened the door and went in. It was only a bare, smoke scented room, with a table in the center, covered with dirty dishes and newspapers.

"The old man came up the path with a pail of milk in his hand. It

"There she sat at the supper table."

was old Ben. He had worked on the place as long as I could remember. I met him now on the threshold.

"'Hello, Jim, hello,' says he; 'back at last—why, hello, hello. A welcome to ye.'

"Welcome? Welcome, with no Kitty; no sweetheart to claim my own; no trace of the old times, nothing, nothing—only an old man?

"We sat down on the doorstep and he told me all about it—about Kitty, her troubles with Joe Morgans and how she finally had to marry him.

"Her father and mother were both dead.

"Only Kitty left—only Ben to take care of the place. No wonder my head went around. I couldn't listen. I had to go away. I was nearly crazy—crazy to see Kitty.

"I struck off over the green fields; went over the rail fence at a leap, pushed through the milk-weed and wild gooseberry bushes. There stood the house! A window was open and I could look through it into the kitchen. I leaned against a big cherry tree and looked. There she sat at the supper table—the same white face—the same dark eyes—the same Kitty I had worked and grubbed for through four long years.

"Joe Morgans sat at the head of the table. But I didn't look at him—my eyes were on Kitty.

"Well, I couldn't stay there—there was no use. Kitty looked contented; maybe she was. I waited till I saw her get up from the table and brush the crumbs from her lap, then I crept away and walked all night.

"After that my money went: I spent it; I gave it away—wasted it. Why, I had lots of it. Why not? But I lived longer than I expected, and the money went sooner than I expected. I drifted here and there, but when I came to this spot I settled down, and I've made up my mind to die here with my tulips. They make me think of her—Kitty in the old days, before anything happened, you know—Kitty with her white apron and white sunbonnet—Kitty kneeling among her flowers, or leaning her little head on my big shoulder, saying she'd never like anybody but me."

The old man's chin sank on his breast, and he was silent for some time. The shadows of night had fallen. Lights were twinkling in the windows.

"It is a sad story," I said.

"Sad? Oh, yes, I suppose," he replied, rousing himself. "But I'm keeping you here listening, my man. It's growing late—time for an old man like me to go to bed; so good night. Come over in the morning and I'll pull you a bunch of tulips to take over home. Well, good night."

"Good night," I said, and left him.

* * * * *

It was a cold, bitter morning in winter. I paused at the gate on my way to the office and looked across the street at the frost starred windows of the old man's house and at the smokeless chimney. He was in the habit of rising early, and I stepped over to see if anything was the matter. There was no response to my rap, so I turned the knob and pushed open the door. A pervasive feeling of cold was in the air. A pile of pine shavings lay in readiness on the hearth.

I went over to the bed, standing in the corner by the stove, and there, with one big hand thrown out over the thick, red comforter, and the blue lips slightly parted, lay the old man. He had gone to wait for Kitty—to meet her, perhaps—who knows?

That day I visited the undertaker and searched the city greenhouses for his favorite flowers. At last I found some white ones, and the next afternoon we laid him away to rest, with a tulip on his breast.

HE SORTED THEM OUT.

Minister Was Satisfied the Knots Were Safely Tied.

A clergyman who has just returned from a trip to England tells a story he heard there of the marriages made on certain feast days, when no fee is charged and the young couples come in great numbers a long distance to take advantage of the custom.

The custom is not general, but local, being confined to certain rural places in the vicinity of Manchester and Oldham. "Upon one of those occasions," tells the clergyman, with a chuckle, "a delegation of fifty young people from Oldham and the surrounding country journeyed to Manchester, making a picturesque grouping at the Old English church of St. Mark's. Each one of the men carried a long staff or stick as the people there call a cane, and each of the young women brandished an umbrella, the use of which will be presently seen.

"After the ceremony of marrying the lot was concluded, and the crowd was going down the church aisle, one young woman hurried back and intercepted the rector as he was going to the vestry.

"'I theenk, meenster,' she panted, 'that you have morried me to the wrong felly.'

"Don't let that worry you," said the rector, who was in a hurry, "sort yourselves as you go out, "you're all married fast enough," and acting on his advice, they sorted out the right pairs.

"On their way back to Oldham they bought the things necessary to light housekeeping, stringing the lighter utensils on the sticks and umbrellas, poised on their shoulders."—Chicago Record Herald.

Like the Dog's.

Mrs. Frederick B. Schoff, the president of the National Congress of Mothers, dwelt forcibly in a recent address upon the evil of loquacity.

"Loquacity — talking overmuch," she said, "that is a fault inherent in too many mothers, and in too many fathers, too, if you come to that. Silence is a blessed thing and we should cultivate it when we have nothing to say. Silence is always better, to my mind, than a buzz of empty and meaningless talk. I used to know an old lady who talked overmuch. She was out walking one August afternoon when a man passed her with a dog. The dog's tongue hung out a little and the old lady stopped and said: 'That dog is not safe. It should not be at large. Its tongue hanging out of its mouth is a sure sign of rabies.'

"The old man, who knew the meddlesome old lady well, retorted: 'It's only a sign that the dog's tongue is too big for its mouth, the same as some old folks'."—Los Angeles Times.

An Incorrigible Dog.

The intelligence of the dog suffered somewhat by an Athens narrative in which it is made to appear that an old dog owned by F. Holcomb recently engaged with a rattler on the low grounds near the town, and was severely bitten. Mr. Holcomb was familiar with the formula for snake bites. He had some of the medicine on hand, consisting of whisky and quinine mixed in quantities to suit. Opening the dog's jaws he turned a liberal dose down him. Two or three days elapsed during which the animal was unable to walk straight, yet he seemed not to have any pain, and in fact appeared to enjoy himself. But at last he was sober again. One would naturally think that having been bitten once he would have fought shy of the swamp afterward, but the moment he was able to navigate he was back among the boys again watching for more snakes. This is why he seems unintelligent.—Detroit (Mich.) Tribune.

Condemned Murderer's Last Wish.

"I should like my relatives to have a photograph of me as they remember me four years ago; a picture of me not in the garb of a felon, nor with my prison number pinned on my breast, but one that will bear upon it no association with my terrible plight. This is all I ask." Burt Ross, condemned to die for the murder of Deputy Sheriff William J. Ward of San Diego, made the above request of Warden Tompkins. It is the first time in the annals of San Quentin prison that a condemned man has made such a request. It was granted by the warden, and a photograph of the murderer, in citizen's attire, was taken in the prison gallery, and copies will be given to Ross' relatives after his death, in accordance with his last wish.—San Francisco Examiner.

ADDS TO THE COTTON AREA.

Paraguay Is About to Engage in the Culture on a Large Scale.

The recent advance in the price of cotton in this country and in England has stimulated the culture of the plant in other countries. The possibility that the cotton manufacturers of the world are facing the prospect of a dearth of raw material seems to have excited the people of Paraguay. Cotton grows wild in that country, and the cultivated product, though different from ours, has a long and fine staple.

As in Peru, the plant is a small tree rather than a little bush, and it lives and produces for several years. European manufacturers have reported good results from its use. The Paraguayans, however, have never given much attention to its cultivation.

The newspapers of Asuncion have suddenly awakened to the opportunities presented, and have risen to the occasion. They are offering many suggestions to the government and assert that cotton will yet place Paraguay on the high road to prosperity.

They ask the government to employ the services of men of science, like Dr. Bertoni, to prepare pamphlets for distribution in the cotton trade of Great Britain, France and Germany, descriptive of the nature and qualities of Paraguayan cotton and the facilities for producing large supplies of it. They ask that Dr. Bertoni, Mr. Anisits and other experts be engaged to make a survey of the lands adapted to cotton cultivation in the republic; also that the government print and distribute among the farmers of the lowlands the best information as to the methods of cotton-raising.

"We may in a short time export $100,000,000 worth of cotton in a year," announces the enthusiastic Paraguay, a German weekly published at Asuncion.

WHAT'S THE BILL GOOD FOR?

Brooklyn Tailor's Comment on a Recent Find at Nippur.

On the car the other morning I happened to hang by the strap next to Bimmelstein's. Between begging pardons of and granting pardons to my near neighbors, I managed to read a few paragraphs in my newspaper. One of them told of a remarkable find by a Nippur expedition of the University of Pennsylvania. It was nothing less than a well-preserved and thoroughly authenticated tailor's bill nearly 5,000 years old.

Since Bimmelstein himself is engaged in the clothing business, I thought he would be interested in this ancient relic, so I told him about it, but the story seemed to make no impression on him.

"Hang it, man," said I, "don't you understand? It's a tailor bill almost 5,000 years old."

"Vell," he answered, "vot iss it good for? Dey can't gollect it."

No Plain Cooks.

Sir Thomas Horne, the president of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, made recently a tour of inspection over the Pennsylvania line from Philadelphia to Pittsburg.

Sir Thomas was much pleased with the service and cuisine of his dining car. He inspected the kitchen and showed great interest in the skilled maneuvers of the cook.

The cook, who was something of a wag, described to him distinguished visitor the kitchens of the great New York hotels, where the walls are of glass, the floors of vitrified brick, the tables of white marble, and the cooking utensils of German silver.

"A great hotel chef," he said, "has from fifty to seventy-five assistants under him. I know one of these chefs, and I visited him two weeks ago. His assistant cooks were all young women—the prettiest lot of young women I ever saw.

"'Why, Gaston,' I said to my friend, 'why pretty girls you employ!'

"'Indeed, they are pretty,' said he. 'Plain cooks won't do here.'"

Are Kind to Their Horses.

Evidently there is one place where there is little need of a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and that is Jersey. The farmers there are so careful of their horses that they do not work them more than is absolutely necessary, and frequently do work which is done elsewhere by horses.

If a farmer has to plow a heavy piece of ground he is obliged to use his team, but if the ground which is to be broken up is light it is very probable that he will take the place of a horse.

At first glance labor of this kind may seem very irksome, but it really is not, for the farms in Jersey are small and it does not take long to cultivate the ground. Still, in other places where the farms are equally small, no one thinks of sparing the horses, and there is little doubt that up-to-date agriculturists consider the Jersey farmers far behind the times because in the kindness of their hearts they are as lenient to their horses as possible.

The Masquerade.

Masked dancers in the Dance of life
We move sedately . . . wearily together.
Afraid to show a sign of inward strife,
We hold our souls in tether.

We dance with proud and smiling lips,
With frank, appealing eyes, with shy hands clinging.
We sing, and few will question if there slips
A sob into our singing.

Each has a certain step to learn,
Our prisoned feet move steadily in set paces.
And to and fro we pass, since life is stern,
Patiently, with masked faces.

Yet some there are who will not dance,
They sit apart most sorrowful and splendid.
But all the rest trip on as in a trance,
Until the Dance is ended.

There was a card on the business man's desk. On it was printed in large black type:

TIME IS MONEY.
DON'T TAKE MINE UNLESS YOU CAN GIVE VALUE RECEIVED.

The business man propped this up conspicuously against a bill file and then said wearily to the office boy: "Show him in."

A large, florid man entered.

"How are you, Simpson?" he said, cordially. "Are you busy?"

"Busy pretty much all the time."

"I calculated you would be, but there was a little matter I wanted to see you about. I don't suppose I'd have thought of it hardly but Tom Dempsey—— By the way, did you know Tom was married? Yes; he married some southern girl—a Miss Avery. I got a bid to the wedding but I didn't go. Lampson went and he says she's about as pretty a girl as he ever met. Comes of one of those high-toned old families, you know. They only got back from their honeymoon trip about three weeks ago. But I guess you didn't know him very well."

"What was this little matter he reminded you of?"

"Bless your heart, he didn't remind me of it! That's a pretty good joke. Ha, ha! No. I was going to say that Tom Dempsey and I had been to lunch together at the Tolferino and as it was so close by I thought I'd come up and see you. I had it on my mind some time."

"What did you have on your mind?"

"This matter I'm talking about. I thought possible I might see you at the Tolferino. It's pretty handy for you. But the prices are steep. What do you think our check was? We had julienne soup and chops—just plain lamb chops—nothing fancy about 'em—and——"

"What was this business you wanted to see me about, Keppler?"

"Well, I was just going to tell you. To begin with—— I'll tell you, maybe I'd better look in some other time. It isn't really a matter of any great importance and you may be too busy to listen."

"Go ahead. I'm busy, but if there is anything I can do for you——"

"That's just what I told Tom. We were talking about one thing and another over our cigars. Do you smoke, Simpson?"

"No. What did you want to ask me about?"

"Well, I'll tell you. Honestly, I think you're busy now and I'd like to talk this over at leisure with you some time. No, I won't bother about it now."

The business man sighed. "Well, if you won't," he said, turning to his desk.

"Tom Dempsey——" began the visitor.

"Say, you'll have to excuse me now," said the business man, looking at his watch. "I've got some work here to finish in a hurry. Good-by. Call again."

"Oh, good-by," said the visitor rather stiffly. "I didn't mean to take your valuable time."

He walked out of the office with an air of offended dignity and as soon as he had gone the business man took down the sign that he had propped up against the bill file and threw it into the waste basket.

Road to the Mines

This was the road between the silver mines
And the old smelter, twenty years ago;
A fading path beneath the slender pines
And the far summits of eternal snow.
Here, where the iron-roofed sheds have dropped to rust,
The quest of treasure claimed man's brawn and nerve;
The teamster's whiplash cracked through clouds of dust,
And the long mule team swung the plunging curve.

A score of years have passed since grating wheels
Slid down these rocks, held by the strident brake.
Unvexed the meadow-lark his anthem peals
To-day where yonder silvery aspens shake.
The underbrush grows thick as summers pass;
The ruts grow fainter with each winter snow;
And creeping ferns and flowers and mountain grass
Blot out the road men traveled years ago.

No more the rumbling, jarring wagons bear
Their freight of wealth. Abandoned lie the mines.
No more the fevered throngs come crowding there
Beneath the snow-peaks and the purple pines.

Long since they hastened on athirst for gold;
In far-off mines and streets they toil and plod.
While here unchanged the guardian forests hold Eternal riches from the stores of God.

Silver and gold the mountain gives up more;
Such as it has, it gives, unasked, unbought.
Infinite wealth passed by of men before
Mad for the petty baubles which they sought.
Nor hands of greed shall clutch the treasures stored.
Nor foot of pride come near to wreck man's will
On these, the treasure chambers of the Lord.
Locked in the fastnesses of sky and hill.

The pure in heart shall see them. Those who lift Unto the hills their eyes shall find again
Healing for soul and body, gracious gift
From the old burdens of life's toil and stain.
Infinite wealth of beauty, boundless store
Of fragrant gifts outreached from tree and sod,
So shall the fading roadway be one more
A road of treasure, leading up to God.

A Triumph of Nerve

"When I was a young man in the business," said Mr. G. S. Whitson, vice president of the National City bank, "I knew a chap who was a sort of a promoter-before-his-time. That is, if he had lived to-day he would have been exploiting industrial combinations. As it was he did the best he could in the small way his opportunities offered, and had plenty of money sometimes and none at all at others.

"He was a great fellow to talk impressively of his resources and his standing at the bank—my bank. He did have an account there, and I was very careful to see it was not overdrawn. One day he went to a simple-minded fellow who kept a grocery store and got him to cash a check for $50.

"The grocer sent his check to the bank. The chap who made it didn't have a dollar to his credit, so I promptly sent the check back to the grocer marked 'N. G.' in big, black letters.

"The grocer knew dimly that his check hadn't been paid, and he waited for the promoter. Finally he came strutting along, a few days later.

"'Here, you!' shouted the grocer. 'I want to see you. The bank sent back that check I cashed for you.'

"The grocer produced the check. The promoter looked it over carefully. He observed the big black 'N. G.' I had scrawled on it.

"'Why, my dear sir,' he said, reaching down in his pocket, pulling up a big roll of bills and handing $50 in cash to the grocer, 'allow me to supply the deficiency. I see the difficulty. All my checks are payable in gold. It is evident the bank had no gold on hand when you presented the check, for they marked it "N. G." which means "No Gold." Pleasant weather we're having, isn't it? Good morning.'"—New York World.

Story Got the Money

So apt was the story told by the Rev. Robert S. MacArthur in the pulpit last Sunday that it resulted in one of the largest collections of the year, says the New York Times. He spoke in warm terms of the character of John Eliot, the missionary to the Indians, one of whose most lovable traits was an unbounded generosity.

"Out of his salary of fifty pounds a year he gave large sums to charity," said Dr. MacArthur. "On one occasion the secretary of the Society of the Propagation of the Gospel, when paying Eliot his quarterly stipend, sought to do him a service. He hit upon a plan of safeguarding the missionary's money, knowing that in all likelihood Eliot otherwise would give away every penny of it before he reached his home." (Here Dr. MacArthur stepped forward to the side of the pulpit and drew out his pocket handkerchief.) "The wily secretary took Eliot's handkerchief and tied up some of the money this way in one corner, and some so in another, and so on with the four corners. And firm, hard knots he made of them before handing the handkerchief over to its owner.

"It chanced that Eliot on his way home fell in with a worthy woman whose appearance told of dire poverty and distress. He stopped to speak to her and pretty soon, his heart being touched, pulled out the handkerchief. He intended to give a sovereign to her. For some time he tugged and strained at the knots, but, try as he might, the corners refused to come untied. Then calmly rolling the handkerchief up into a ball, the missionary placed it in the astonished woman's hands, saying: 'My good woman, I think the Lord meant you to have it all.'

"The ushers," Dr. MacArthur added, "now will pass the basket for collection, and you can imitate John Eliot's example—if you are so minded."

And the congregation dug deep.

GOOD FROM AN

BY J. H. NICH

W E will just have to stay here, and make the best of it, but I don't believe the water will get up to the house."

"It may not, but if it does, what shall we do? In the night, too, if it was in the day, we might be able to save ourselves."

"If it does rise so high, we will not be the only ones in trouble. It will cover the whole town north of the river."

"Nelly, why can't we sell our chickens, and get money enough to keep us till the danger is over?"

"If it were not so near night, and Sunday, too, we might; but what would we do without them? They are almost our only dependence."

In a short time the dark, chilly, dismal night settled down. The darkest night in all the twenty-two years of Nellie Anderson's life. She and her sister Grace, aged fourteen, sat waiting and watching for some sign that the river would go down.

The house was so near the river, the lot so low, that of all those who would suffer from the flood, they would be the first to face the danger; and they were the least able to do so; and it being the last house along the river bank, in the city, they would be the last to receive help.

"Oh, Nelly, what shall we do if the water gets to the house? I wish we had gone away before it was dark."

"It may not reach the house; but if it should, it must get much higher before it puts us in much danger. We can move such things as we will need for a day or so up-stairs, and we will be safe there."

"It's coming. Listen!"

With a rush that threatened to carry the little house away, the water was around them, and they had no time to save anything. They crouched down beside the window in the little chamber, trying to see the water; but the only thing of which they could be sure was that it was still rising.

Nelly took the lamp and went to the stairway, to see if there was much water in the lower story; she found it was more than half way up to the ceiling. It was impossible to get anything from below, now, and they had brought no food with them. Again they sought the window. They could plainly hear the cries for help of those in distress in the town just around the bend above them; and sometimes they added their cries to those they heard; but the entire attention of those engaged in the work of rescue was devoted to saving those nearest at hand.

Again Nelly looked below. The water had nearly reached the ceiling now; in a few minutes more it would reach the upper story, then what could they do? Nelly tried to cheer Grace by telling her that it surely could not get much higher; that a little water in the upper story would not hurt them; that in the morning some one would be sure to see them and come to their help.

With another sudden rush the water was in the chamber, and the house trembled and shook. By the light of the lamp they could see it was nearly up to the window sill. The faces of both girls were pale now.

"Grace, if it rises much higher, we must try to reach the roof. We must not be caught in here!"

"How can we get out on the roof?"

"I think I can help you up from the window, then you can help me."

"Let's not try it yet; we may not need to. Oh!"

The house gave a mighty quiver, as if shaking itself loose from its foundation, swung part way round, caught on something, and hung, rocking wildly in the flood. The water was not so deep in the chamber now as it had been before the house floated.

"I think we will be all right now, Grace. The heaviest articles are below, and they will act as ballast, and keep the house right side up."

"If the house stays right side up we will get no deeper in the water than we are now."

With a sickening lurch the house took itself free, whirled around, caught again, swung part way round, came loose, and floated down with the current. As their light shone from the window they could see the trees slide by.

"Nelly, don't you think we would better put out the lamp? We don't want fire as well as water."

They were soon glad they had done this, for occasionally the house would strike some obstruction with such force it seemed as if it must go to pieces. They knew that they were going down stream rapidly, for sometimes they could get a glimpse of a tree as they swept past near it, and when the chamber window would turn toward the town they had left they could see the reflection of the lights in the clouds. GOOD FROM AN ILL WIND

BY J. H. NICHOLSON.

"WE will just have to stay

"Let's not try it yet; we may not need to. Oh!"

The house gave a mighty quiver, as if shaking itself loose from its foundation, swung part way round, caught on something, and hung, rocking wildly in the flood. The water was not quite so deep in the chamber now as it had been before the house floated.

"I think we will be all right now,
Grace. The heaviest articles are below, and they will act as ballast, and keep the house right side up."

"If the house stays right side up, we will get no deeper in the water than we are now."

With a sickening lurch the house broke itself free, whirled around, caught again, swung part way round, became loose, and floated down with the current. As their light shone from the window they could see the trees close by.

"Nelly, don't you think we would better put out the lamp? We don't want fire as well as water."

They were soon glad they had done so, for occasionally the house would strike some obstruction with such force it seemed as if it must go to pieces. They knew that they were being down stream rapidly, for sometimes they could get a glimpse of a house as they swept past near it, and from the chamber window would turn toward the town they had left they could see the reflection of the lights in the clouds. It kept growing fainter and farther away, and then they saw the reflection of the lights of another town in the opposite direction. Before morning they had lost sight of the lights they had left, but those below were becoming brighter; then daylight came to cheer them, and how thankful they were for it.

They could now see that they were moving rapidly, but they knew the chance of help was not so good here as it would have been in the city.
When they did see any one they would call for help, but rescue was impossible in that swift current. Once, toward mid-day, the house caught on something, and held for some time.
They began to hope it would not resume its wild journey again; but toward night, as the water continued to rise, it floated down stream again.

The cold, the hunger, the fatigue, and above all, the nervous strain was fast telling on their strength. It was growing darker; Monday night was closing down on them, and no hope of help, when they came around a bend and saw before them a scene which seemed to promise them either life or certain destruction at once. The river was running through what seemed to be a great city. Wreck and destruction was on every hand; bridges torn out, houses crushed, cars and buildings burning, and farther out they could see the twinkling lights of a great city.
But help was more impossible here than it had been before, for the current was so swift, the way blocked with so much wreckage that no boat could reach them, although the watchers on the bank could see them plainly.
Surely it was God's hand had held them back, during the day, until that mighty torrent had swept away the many obstructions through which they could not have passed earlier in the day.

They passed it all safely and in a few minutes they swept out on a much larger stream, where there was more room, and consequently less danger.
But it was dark now and the rain still falling, and they could see nothing save an occasional light in some window. The house sailed along smoothly now, the water being deeper and the channel wider, and so their nervous tension was somewhat relieved; but how slow dragged the night! How they longed for the light of day! When at last the night was over daylight found them exhausted, scarcely able to stand, hope all gone, longing for death, as a relief from that awful strain.

About 10 o'clock they were near the left side of the current, and as they swung around a bend toward the north, they were drawn still farther from the channel. A little farther down a strong current set off toward the left, onto the bottom, and it took them along with it. As they left the main stream, the house caught on some obstruction, but did not stop long. It floated out of the channel and toward the north, caught again, and as it came loose it revolved in the opposite direction, and as the window came toward the north they saw a house close by,
and above water.

Their craft continued to revolve and move with the stream a little longer, then it grounded in shallower water, and not over a quarter of a mile from the house, where they could now see a man and woman watching them.
The man called to them, then ran toward the water near the house, and soon they saw him coming to them in a boat.

* * * * * * *

Ned Taylor owned one of the best farms on the Missouri River bottom.
The house was on high ground, above any high water, though still quite close to the river. Along the south side of the farm was a small creek, coming down from the northwest.

Ned's sister, Emma, was his housekeeper, and like Ned had made her part of the domain to blossom as the rose; but now the river was higher than it had been for years. All Ned's crops were ruined, and though the house was still above water, and the stock still safe, the loss would be great.
Ned was troubled more about his sister's health than about his crops. She had only recently recovered from a severe fever, and now she seemed likely to have a relapse, and it was nearly impossible to get a doctor as the bottoms, for miles around, were under water.

Emma was lying on a lounge, placed in such a position she could see the river through the open door. She had a glass in her hands, through which she watched the wreckage coming around the bend.

"Ned, there comes a house down the river. Where could it have come from?"

"It might have come from K——.
This flood might easily have washed away a small house. Let me see."

He took the glass and looked.

"It is very close to this side; it may be drawn into the creek; there is a strong current running back west now."

Emma watched the house. It revolved slowly, and after awhile it swung around so she could see the window in the gable.

"Oh, Ned; Ned! come here quick!"

Ned ran to his sister, thinking something had happened to her.

"Oh, Ned! There is some one in that house! Two women! I can see them at the window! Look!"

The house had revolved so far that Ned could not see the window. Soon the house entered the current which ran back up the creek. It seemed to hang on something, then changed the direction of its revolution, and continued on its way; but now both Emma and Ned were standing in the door, and as the window came in sight again they could plainly see two women leaning from it, and heard a very faint call for help.

Ned replied with but one word,
"Coming," and started for his boat; before he reached it, Emma called to him:

"It's grounded out there in the pasture. No, it's loose again! Oh, Ned, it's going into the mouth of that little hollow! It is! It's fast now!
It can't get out now!"

Ned gave one glance and saw that Emma was right, then made every effort to reach it as soon as possible.
When he pulled up beneath the window he saw two most pitiful faces.

"Are you willing to give up your ship?"

"Yes, indeed! We'll surrender on any terms."

They were so weak they were scarce ly able to help themselves at all, and it was only after considerable difficulty Ned succeeded in getting them into the boat. When this was accomplished, and he was again at the oars, he asked them how long they had been afloat.

"Since Sunday night."

"Since Sunday night! How far did you come?"

"From T——."

"Is it possible! And have you been cooped up there all that time, without food?"

"Yes."

"And wet, and cold! I don't see how you stood it so long?"

"We could not have stood it much longer."

"Why didn't you leave before the water got so high?"

"We had no place to go; and if we had, we did not like to leave unless we were compelled to."

"And the house—who does it belong to?"

"It did belong to us, before it came down here. I don't know who it belongs to now."

"It is still yours. It is on my land, and I will buy it of you, if you wish.
But had you no relatives or friends where you could have gone?"

"No we are alone in the world, since father died; and the house was all he left."

"Well, you will find friends here. My sister and I are alone, also. We will make you welcome."

Food, warmth and a night's rest did them much good, and the next day they felt better. As Emma was not able to do her work, Nelly and Grace were glad of the chance to earn something by staying and keeping house for their friends.

When the water went down, so Ned could inspect the house, he paid them a good price for it, and they began to feel quite prosperous again. Ned was very busy those days, replanting his fields, and he was very glad the girls were there to look after Emma. He soon found that this was not the only reason he was glad to have them there.
He began to wonder how he could ever let Nelly go and he determined to try to persuade her to be his wife. Nelly, too, had learned a new lesson. She began to dread the time of separation.
She found Ned a delightful companion.

Now, don't say that three weeks' acquaintance was not enough; but just remember that two people living in the same house three weeks will be better acquainted than in six months under ordinary circumstances.

When Emma's health was fully recovered, Nelly decided it would be better for them to leave.

"You will not need us now. I think we will try to rent a house in W——, and move our household goods there."

Emma was startled at this sudden announcement. She had not thought of their leaving.

"Why do you want to go? Why not make this your home? We would be glad to have you do so."

"I do not think it would be best for us to stay; though it has been very pleasant for us here."

"Then why do you wish to go? We do not want you to. I shall ask Ned to persuade you to stay. I believe he can." Nelly blushed at this, but made no reply, and Emma put her arms around her and whispered, "I would like to have you for a sister."

When she had an opportunity to speak to Ned alone, she said:

"Ned, I think it's too bad. The girls are going to leave us now, when we were all settled so comfortably. Can't you persuade them to stay?"

"I don't know, but I shall try. I hope I can."

Ned found Nelly alone in the dining room.

"Nelly, why must you go away?
Don't you know how much I want you? Oh, Nelly, can't you love me?
I can't tell you how dear to me you have become, how much I love you.
Won't you be my wife? Won't you try to love me?"

His arms were around her, and he drew her very close to him, and kissed her, and she let her head rest on his shoulder.

"Nelly, say you do love me. Say you will be my wife."

"Yes, Ned, I do love you very much.
I will be your wife."—Waverley Magazine.

WIND AND SNOW.

When sleep had closed the lattices
Along the village street,
I heard the clang of iron mail,
The ring of steel-shod feet.
I pulled the muslin curtain by,
Between it peering forth,
And lo! beheld a wild gray knight
Come riding from the north.

The frost was in his streaming hair,
The ice was on his beard,
He shouted shrilly as he passed,
His cry was long and weird.
He struck the boughs that barred his way
And broke them in his flight,
Across his saddle-bow he bore
A maiden veiled in white.

My breath was frozen on the pane,
My lips were blue with cold,
When far away his strident voice
Died out upon the wold.
And when the clouded morning dawned,
All colorless and pale,
Before my door lay soft and white
The maiden's snowy veil.

THE SECRET OF IT.

By Susan Hubbard Martin.

Why he turned in at the parsonage gate that afternoon Mr. Barton Ellsworth did not know. He had just met the professor, and his brows were knit ominously over the interview. He was not in a friendly mood yet his steps turned intuitively toward the little house.

"Yes," the old professor had said,
as he rubbed his glasses reflectively
"your son could lead his classes if he would; he has the ability. But instead of that, his standing is dangerously near the failure mark. If he does not take a different course he will not pass the spring examination. I have reasoned with him, but he seems to have no care or ambition in the matter. Such a splendid intellect, too!
There's a curious lack of enthusiasm about him. Have you talked to him,
Mr. Ellsworth?"

Barton Ellsworth's sad face grew set and sadder still.

"No," he answered, shortly. Why, it had been weeks since he had so much as spoken to the boy, he thought.

"The truth is, professor," he went on, "since my wife's death I've scarcely noticed the lad. I haven't cared much whether I lived or died, and the boy never took to me, anyway. If his mother had been spared—" His voice broke.

"Yes, yes," the old professor answered, hastily, "I know it. It was a sad blow, Mr. Ellsworth, and the lad's loss is equal with yours. Never forget that. Sometimes we're selfish even in our grief. A mother's influence knows no boundaries."

"Thank you," was the answer, "I'll see Basil and—"

"Be gentle with him," interrupted the old professor, warningly. "Such lads need careful handling. A word too much, and the work of years is undone."

"I see no reason why Basil should not study," Barton Ellsworth answered, coldly. "I never had to be urged when I was a boy, and I did not have half his opportunities. Well, good day, professor. It's a little hard to a man of my pride to hear such a report of my only son, but my cup seems full of bitterness just now. Drop in and see me some evening. I'll be glad of a chat with you. My best regards to your wife. Good afternoon!"

The old professor looked regretfully after the tall figure as it strode away.
"It's a thousand pities," whispered the good man, "that Ellsworth looks at things in the way he does. If Basil's mother had only lived—but I am afraid his father's pride and severity will only chill the boy. What Basil needs is a wise and tender hand just now. Well, well, we can only advise in these cases, and pray."

As Barton Ellsworth came to the parsonage he went in. He had never been there before, for the minister's pastorate was yet new. The parsonage was a sunny little house, just now overflowing with children, for the new pastor had a family.

The minister's wife herself came to the door in answer to his ring. The baby, some 14 or 15 months old, was clinging to her skirt.

"No, he's not at home," she said, after Barton Ellsworth had introduced himself and asked for her husband.
"But won't you step in for a moment?
Do!" she urged gently, for she had heard of his great sorrow and read with a woman's quick and ready sympathy the trouble in the thin, sad face.
"My baby's just learning to walk," she added, stooping to unclasp the chubby hand. "This is her second day's experience." She smiled down at the tiny toddler at her feet, such a wonderfully beautiful smile.

Barton Ellsworth saw the look.
"There's a woman with a mother's heart," he thought instantly. "Edith was always like that."

Because of his wife he followed her in. "I'll stop just a moment," he said.

The minister's wife led him into the little sitting-room. The floor was littered with children's toys. There was nothing fine in the room, only plain chairs, a good picture or two and an open piano, but it had that indescribable look of home about it that grand houses so many times lack.

Two little boys about four and six were playing contentedly on the floor.
"This is Paul and this is Silas," the mother explained, smilingly. "We like Bible names best," she added. "Our baby's name is Ruth."

She drew forward the best chair the room afforded. "Come here, dears, and speak to the gentleman," she said.

The little boys rose obediently.
Something in the two pairs of brown eyes raised to his moved him strangely.
They reminded him of Basil. What a fine little fellow he had been, and how proud Edith was of him!

"When I am old and helpless," she had often said, "my son will take care of me. Look at him, Barton. Aren't his eyes beautiful, and see his firm little muscles. There's no baby like mother's boy!" she had cried, catching him to her heart.

The little boys, having spoken to him went back to their mother. They leaned upon her affectionately, pressing their dimpled hands against her pretty gown. He noticed that she did not rebuke them.

"You have quite a family," he remarked, gently. "There are two more in school, I understand."

"Yes," smiled the minister's wife,
"two girls, Mary and Rachel. And you —you have a son, too."

Barton Ellsworth nodded and his face grew stern. He thought of the professor's report. "Yes," he answered,
"one—only."

The little woman saw the look. She took the chubby hand of the smallest boy, clasping it fondly. "They're a great care," she said, gently, "but we have always been so fond of our children."

Barton Ellsworth winced. He thought of his great empty house, of its lonely grandeur, its silent rooms impregnated, as it were, with his great grief. No wonder the boy did not like to stay in them. And what was it she had said?
"Fond of her children." The words rang in his ears still.

Had he been fond of Basil? Had he taken the interest a father should have taken in an only son? He had left the boy to the emptiness of the silent house, full of the memories of his mother, shutting himself in his library night after night. He had evinced no care in the lad's progress, had made no effort to win his love or confidence.
Day after day he had sat opposite him at meals, silent, stern, unapproachable.
Was it strange, then, under these conditions, that the boy was about to fail?
Was it to be marveled at that he had lost heart in his studies?

He looked across at the minister's little children as they clung about their mother, and in that moment it was shown him what a parent ought to be.
"God forgive me!" he thought.

He rose suddenly. He wanted to go home and think it all out. "Tell your husband I'll come in again," he said, as he shook the little woman's hand.
"Good-by, and—God bless you!"

The minister's wife looked after him a little puzzled. "I wonder what could have moved him so?" she whispered.
"There certainly were tears in his eyes."

That night at dinner Barton Ellsworth looked at his son. "How did school go to-day, Basil?" he said.

The boy dropped his fork. The question, coming from the usually silent figure opposite, startled him. A flush rose to his cheek.

"Not very well, sir," he stammered.
"I—I—"

"Are the studies too hard?" asked the kind voice.

"No," was the answer. "I could do them all right, but the truth is, father,
I haven't been studying."

Barton Ellsworth rose. "Bring your books into the library, Basil," he said.
"I think you and I can help one another." He went over and stood by him.
"I want my boy to be a good student," he said. "Nothing short of the best will satisfy me. I met the professor today, my son," he explained, "and he thinks you could do better if you really set your mind on it. We'll see if he isn't right. It's partly my fault, Basil," he went on. "I've neglected you. I want my boy to forgive me; will he?"

The quick tears rushed to Basil's eyes. "Don't, father!" he said in a broken voice. "It's all my fault. I didn't study because—I didn't think you cared."

Barton Ellsworth stooped and kissed the smooth, boyish cheek. "I do care very much, my son," he said.

He seemed to see again a little woman with pretty children clinging to her gown. How they loved her! She was making a success of her mission, and he had come near failing in his.
"We have always—" he heard the soft voice speaking again—!" "We have always been so fond of our children," that was the secret of her power, and he had found it out.

"Come, Basil," he said, gently, "come,
my son."

And arm in arm they went into the library, where the picture of a lovely woman smiled down upon them, as if she knew and understood.—Youth's Companion.

Myths of Childhood.

Speak the truth! So say the rigid moralists who would banish the myths of childhood—the fairies and dwarfs and giants; goblins and sprites—and even the good old saint who travels the wide world over to thrill millions of young hearts with the joy of his coming. Nobody seems to know when he began his rounds, for every country claims him, and many are the guises under which he appears. He is the St.
Nicholas of Holland, the Holy Man of Tyrol; the beautiful maiden of Alsace, who bears the gifts of the Christ Child to the children of earth. The tinkle of her silver bell has been heard on many a hearth, but mortal eye has never seen her, so dazzling is the sheen of her golden crown with its encircling rows of gleaming tapers.—Donahoe's

It really seems that the club of women in London which has entered on a crusade against the use of the word "spinster" might find something to do more worthy of women's clubs. There's one good old-fashioned way for a spinster to change her name, and if she will not conform to this why then let her remain "spinster" in word as well as in deed. Things are being made too easy anyway for unmarried women. It seems to some of us, and we advise certain preachers who like to be sensational, to take up this phase of the doings of society. For if they succeed in having themselves called something that sounds really attractive in place of "old maids" and "spinsters" there will be no such thing as getting them to forsake their care free lives for the responsibilities of the married state.

REPUBLICAN DISTRICT CONVENTION.

The regular republican convention for the fourth congressional district was held at Talladega on the 23d inst. in the court house. About 50 delegates were certified to the convention and the proceedings were enthusiastic and harmonious. Many were absent from the convention (who had signified their intention of attending), helping to pay the last sad honors to Samuel R. Bingham, whose funeral was in progress while the convention was in session. Next week's paper will contain a full account of the proceedings, resolutions, nominations, etc.

The delegation (?) that (according to the Banner) insisted on announcing Probate Judge Adams in that paper's last issue, would have greatly strengthened that act had they (?) appended their (?) names.

S. R. BINGHAM DEAD.

Mr. Samuel Rice Bingham, of Talladega, died at an early hour yesterday morning at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. W. G. Oliver, 1102 Twenty-eighth street, this city, where he was visiting.

The death of Mr. Bingham was due to heart failure and was entirely unexpected. He retired about 11 o'clock Saturday night, apparently feeling as well as usual, and at 2 o'clock had been visited by death. He died in his sleep, the end coming very peacefully.

The body was carried this morning to the old home in Talladega, where the funeral will take place tomorrow.

News of the death of Mr. Bingham will be received over the state with deep regret. He was widely known and was held in the highest esteem by all who enjoyed an acquaintance with him. He was a man of fine intellect, of sterling integrity and as gentle as a woman. His kindly disposition shone forth on all occasions and he was held in the most affectionate regard by all who knew him well. His life was an active one and he was prominently identified with a number of important interests at Talladega. For several years he was chief in the office of the internal revenue collector in Birmingham, during which time he made his home in this city. He was fifty-five years of age and is survived by a widow and four children. The latter are Arthur, Dallas and Earnest Bingham and Mrs. W. G. Oliver. He is also survived by four brothers, Messrs. Henry C., Thomas C., John A. and Julian H. Bingham, the latter of this city. He was a son of the late Arthur Bingham.—Birmingham News.

Clearest Style is Best.

Obscurity of manner has diverse origins, says the London Spectator. It may appear in the writer who is overnice no less than in the writer who is careless. In spite of Browning and a few others who shall be safe if we stand by the aphorism of the French critic and believe that clarity of language and clarity of thought are never dissociated. After all, there is no need for anxiety if we cannot endure the rack of introspection to which the cleverness of very modern writers would condemn us. Great genius has nearly always united profound ideas with very simple speech. Even in that most difficult art, the analysis of human character, the highest achievements stand out in a frame of pellucid utterance. Nobody, therefore, has call to be ashamed if he confesses that in the main Mr. Meredith and Mr. Henry James are beyond him. In Shakespeare, Balzac and George Eliot he will find consolation when all his modernly artistic friends have done their worst in the way of reproach.—Philadelphia Record.

He Liked Young People.

In his last work, "Facts and Comments," the late Mr. Herbert Spencer gives a curious bit of self-revelation. He confesses that though he particularly liked the society of young people, it bored him to an unendurable extent if they worried him with unintelligent chatter, and that to avoid this it was his custom to ask them some question which could not be answered without a good deal of thought. He was accustomed to base his judgement of their intellects upon the answers returned, and we can well imagine that those who were suddenly confronted with some such problem as "Why is the sea salt"? must have regarded a drive with the great philosopher as something of an ordeal.—London Globe.

So far from being an evidence of a national levity and lack of seriousness slang is the language of sincerity, declares Prof. Herman Spencer in a recent number of Booklovers' Magazine. It is the result of an instinctive effort to get as far away as possible from everything like pretentiousness. It is the antipodes of pathos. It is the language of the whole people, because it is expressive of the national sense of humor that is never so keen as when it contemplates with a joy likewise unutterable the spectacle presented by the fake exposed. It is blunt, it is crude, it is brutal sometimes, but it is always sincere. It directs against the citadels of evil the mighty enginery of laughter. It does for our nascent abuses what the mordant satire of Martial and Juvenal failed to do for decadent Rome.

The reported discovery of gold in beds of sand in Texas raises some puzzling questions. If the deposits are like placers, the separation of the precious metal from the material with which it is associated would be easy, but one cannot help wondering how any considerable quantity of the sand or gravel is going to be raised to a place where it can be washed, comments a writer in the New York Tribune. Were the side of a huge bank exposed it could be attacked with powerful jets, and eaten away in short order. If the site were the bed of a stream, shovels and dredges would be available for purposes of excavation. When a stratum of "pay dirt" is so covered that access can be had only from above, and when the overlaying layers are 200 or 300 feet thick, however, a different kind of campaign must be organized. If there were an ample supply of water and two sets of tubing were sunk, no doubt the stuff could be pumped up, but if it should cost $1 to uncover ten cents' worth of gold there would not be much profit in the business.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

President Roosevelt has signed the Urgent Deficiency bill.

The Indian Appropriation bill has been completed. It will carry an expenditure of $7,610,831, as against $8,521,306 appropriated last year. Of the sum named, $3,551,968 is for Indian schools.

MARRIED.

Mr. J. A. Davis and Miss Bettie E. Dennis were married at the home of the bride on the 17th inst. Elder J. W. Howell officiated. We tender our heartiest congratulations to the young couple for their future happiness and prosperity.

THORSBY.

Editor Union—I want to say that events seem to get more and more interesting. We note with pleasure that in the republican mass convention held in Clanton on the 13th inst they passed a resolution to co-operate with the populists in the nomination and election of our next corps of county officers, which is the proper thing to do in this issue as to whether the sovereignty of the people shall be maintained or shall the schemers, rings and tricksters secure the control of our county affairs. I am reliably informed that schemes are on foot encouraging the nomination of a third ticket. Now, can any man mistake the meaning of this? And we want to say right here that the man who works or talks to that end needs watching as a boodle grabber Our people understand the situation, and should such a thing happen it would help our cause, as all good populists and republicans have a common interest in the county ticket. When the time comes to place a ticket in the field and for the people to voice their choice for standard bearers, any populist or republican who will agree to support the ticket will be eligible to offer himself to the people and they will decide as between candidates. We will win, for we are prepared to meet any condition that may be sprung upon us. I am unalterably opposed to bossism of any kind in whatever shape it presents itself. We will devote ourselves to the cultivation of the land and also raise a good crop of clean politics, until sweet summer time, when the melons and fruits are ripe, and we will have a jolly good time campaigning, meet the people on the hustings, do our work in the open. How different that is from the "Court House Club" that make slates and figure in the dark, only to be wiped out when they come before the people.

THE OPEN GRATE AGAIN.

Granddaughter of Alabama Governor Dead from Burns.

Miss Elizabeth O'Neal, daughter of the Hon. and Mrs. Emmet O'Neal, of Florence, Ala., died from the effects of burns received December 26th. She was standing in front of an open fire when her clothes became ignited. She was taken to Memphis and everything possible was done to save her life, but after nearly eight weeks of suffering death came on her 17th birthday. She was a granddaughter of the late Governor O'Neil, of Alabama.

The Cane Crop.

Favorable weather conditions are still prevalent throughout the sugar district and the work of planting cane has been practically finished.

It is reported that local capitalists of Montgomery will organize a company to be known as the Kentucky-Alabama Oil company with a capital of $300,000.

It is figured that 4000 trees have been sacrificed to make the paper on which nine recent "popular" novels were printed, observes the New Bedford Standard. And one tree was probably better worth while than all the nine novels.

Should an inclined railway be constructed up Monte Sano, near Huntsville, Ala., it will result in the development of one or more coal mines on the mountain that have been worked in a desultory way for several years. The chief difficulty in the way of placing the coal on the market is the question of transportation. Local capitalists, it is said, are ready to work the mines extensively if a railroad down the mountain is ever built.

The invitation extended Hon. William H. Hearst to come down to Mississippi and address the legislature has been heard from, but Mr. Hearst has not yet replied one way or the other. His secretary, Mr. L. J. O'Reiley, writes from Washington Hon. L. Pink Smith, clerk of the house, that the resolution "will have Mr. Hearst's personal attention at the earliest possible moment."

The floating indebtedness of the Southern railway, including $8,800,000 of certificates of indebtedness as of June 30, 1903, is stated to be in the neighborhood of $13,000,000. The debt has been largely incurred in the double tracking and general improvement of a great part of the main line, and in the purchase of equipment needed at all times by this system.

Russia is addressing the powers either through their representatives at St. Petersburg, the emperor's envoys abroad or both, a vigorous communication charging Japan with repeated violations of the laws of nations, in threatening to attack a neutral port, Chemulpo, Korea, unless the Russian war ships within came out to face an overwhelming force.

A business of nearly $200,000 a year is done by lumber men in Lauderdale county, Alabama. There are now stacked on the Tennessee river wharf at Florence, Ala., about 12,000 crossties awaiting shipment, which are valued at $30,000, and this is merely one item.

It is understood that bond to the amount of $16,100 has been agreed upon in the Cornwell case and everything has been arranged so there will be no hitch when he presents himself, which will be at an early date.

The proceedings of the Alabama Press association in its thirty-second annual session, held in Anniston last May, have been issued and are being circulated.

The Southern railway ticket office in the Hotel Albert building, Selma, Ala., was robbed last Saturday.

Opelika, Ala., will soon have a paid fire department equipped with improved fire fighting apparatus.

Orders have been issued for the mustering out of the Montgomery, Ala., Mounted Rifles.

Bessemer, Ala., will vote on bonds for a $35,000 high school on Monday, the 29th.

Birmingham had 364 fires last year, with losses aggregating $120,603.

Eight prisoners escaped from the Anniston jail Monday morning.

Lauderdale county's books are reported substantially correct.

AGRICULTURAL.

Beets as Fodder.

The farmers of Germany have discovered that dried sugar beets make an excellent fodder, which may be used as a substitute for maize. The beets may be kept without difficulty if they are properly sacked and stored. This use of them will be likely to prevent any over-production of sugar. They will be turned into fodder whenever the price of sugar falls too low.

Rheumatism in Swine.

An unusual number of inquiries are made regarding a cure for rheumatism among swine, mainly with the summer dropped pigs. In the majority of cases this trouble is due to pens that are either draughty or damp, perhaps both. This being the case, the first thing to do is to fix the pens, seeing to it that the floor is dry and kept so, and that the pigs have a heavy bedding of dry material every night. Then see that the water given them is clean, and that there are no direct draughts of air blowing over them at night. To relieve the attack, let the feed be of middlings and milk, for the pigs and the hogs also, with a half pint of dried blood meal divided equally for the three feeds daily and mixed in the feed. If other attacks follow, give five grains each of salol and quinine concealed in some vegetable, such as the half of a small potato.

A Wagon Tongue.

It is not always possible to have a two-horse wagon sufficiently light for long distance driving where it is best to use two horses. The illustration shows a tongue which may be easily made by a local blacksmith at small expense, for use on a light one-horse wagon. The illustration needs little description, the main points being to have the pole made of tough lumber and about two inches square at the small end and three and one-half inches square at the large end.

The circle should be made of two-inch wagon felloes. Bolt the shaft couplings to the circle, the double-tree resting on the tongue where the circle is bolted to the tongue. This wagon pole is quickly attached and is very light, hence not a burden on the horses, and the expense of making it is small. —Indianapolis News.

Nut Trees For Shade.

We plant out almost innumerable shade trees that yield us absolutely nothing besides their services as parasols in summer and perhaps as windbreak in winter. If nut-bearing trees were planted in their stead they would make as good a growth, serve the purposes of the others equally well and yield us a good supply of nuts at the same time. Nearly or quite all of our nut-bearing trees are hardy in the larger sections of our country. Hickory, walnut, chestnut, pecan and filberts—the most common kind of nuts we have—can be found to some extent all over this country, and with a little pains in planting such, and otherwise giving them due attention, could be made to grow almost anywhere. The principal reason for this not being done is, people have not thought of it. We have been accustomed to buying and setting out all kinds of fruit trees, but whenever we wanted a supply of nuts we expected to go to the woods and gather them. No effort was made to grow them at home.

Along the walks and lanes in pastures, nut-bearing trees might be planted either in groves or strips, and used as wind-breaks for stock, the orchard or the farm buildings and as a combination of shade, protection and fruit—of the useful and the agreeable.

Increase the Poultry.

The average farmer does not keep poultry enough. A little larger investment in poultry will increase the income of the farm and bring a profit that cannot be equalled by the same amount invested in any other line of farming. By this I do not mean that the farmer shall become a fancier or a poultry specialist, but I do mean that he usually neglects the faithful hen, and if he will post up on this branch of live stock husbandry and take as much pains with his hens as he does with his other live stock he can increase his profits with very little labor and money expended.

The poultry business now is a stable business. Just as much so as hogs or cattle or the dairy. It used to be that you could scarcely sell poultry and eggs at certain seasons of the year, but that is not the case now. There is a market for all the poultry and eggs that can be produced, and at fair prices. The large packers have developed the poultry market just the same as they have the meat market, and our poultry and eggs are transported by them to the markets of the world. Both eggs and poultry are preserved in cold storage and distributed to the people as the market warrants.

The farmer can produce a pound of chicken just as cheaply as he can a pound of beef, pork or mutton, and it always brings a better price. Why, then, not give this branch of our business more attention? With good laying stock eggs can be produced at a handsome profit. Instead of a farmer having twenty-five or thirty hens he ought to keep 200 or 300, or more, as his fancy and the size of his farm permits.—Colon J. Little, in Commercial Poultry.

Parasites of Clover.

A popular edition of Bulletin No. 70 has been issued by the experiment station of Iowa State College, on the subject of "Some Weeds of Iowa." It was prepared by Dr. L. H. Pommel, botanist of the station. The following section on the dodder will be found of interest, for this parasite weed is found in many parts of the country.

During the last few years, Dr. Pommel says, dodders have made their appearance upon clover in different sections of the country. Five species have been reported upon alfalfa and clover. Mr. Dewey states, from his experience, that the dodder is rarely found east of the Missouri River. No doubt, however, it occurs occasionally. Farmers should, therefore, be on their guard for this plant. It belongs to the same family as the common morning glory.

The dodders are leafless, except the small scales on the stems; herbs of yellowish color, with threadlike stems twining around the plants upon which they live. They pierce the bark with small and short rootlets, which are called suckers, or haustoria. The seeds are small, yet there is stored sufficient nourishment in them to give the embryo a start. The seed germinates in the soil and grows sufficiently in length to allow it to come in contact with the plant upon which it lives, when it immediately sends in its suckers, and thus becomes established upon the plant as though it was a part of the host.

The dodders contain no chlorophyll, the green coloring matter found in leaves, and hence cannot make plant food; that is, make starch out of raw material such as ordinary green leaves do, but must derive their nourishment entirely from the host upon which they live. Such plants are called parasites.

The first and most important point is to obtain seed that is free from the dodder seed. It is best, therefore, to obtain the seed grown in the Mississippi Valley and the East. European seed should not under any consideration be purchased. There is likelihood of some danger from the East, some danger from the South, and especially from the West. Clover seed grown in States south of Iowa is hardly suited for our conditions, and it is not likely that the Iowa farmer will purchase much of this seed.

Farmers cannot too emphatically be cautioned against sowing dodder infested clover seed. The ultimate loss caused by the dodder will greatly exceed the cost of cleaning the clover seed, and clean seed should be bought at any price.

The dodder may be exterminated when once established in the following way: First, by the herbicidal treatment. For this purpose a solution of copper sulphate in the following proportions will be found efficacious: One pound of copper sulphate to four gallons of water at the rate of fifty gallons to the acre.

ALFALFA AND CLOVER DODDERS.

It is advisable to mow the patch if a small one, rake the material into a pile, allowing it to dry, and then burn. This should be watched carefully, for if the seed is formed young dodder plants will make their appearance upon the new growth of clover coming on. So it is best to follow the mowing by hoeing if the patch is a small one, and continuing this for several weeks until all danger of infection is passed. Dewey recommends keeping the soil stirred for about two inches, and that shallow cultivation is best since the seeds, if buried deeper cannot come to the surface and infect the clover plant.

Farm Notes.

There is very little profit in feeding an old cow grain to make good beef.

Digestion is best accomplished when all other parts of the body are at rest.

With dairy stock more than others, merit must be settled by actual test.

Other things being equal, the best offspring comes from matured animals.

Under all conditions young animals make the largest gain in proportion to food eaten.

It is the amount digested and assimilated and not the amount eaten that benefits the horse.

By prepotency is meant the power of the animal to stamp his progeny with characteristics.

The time to sell a horse after he has been raised for market is whenever a good price is offered.

IN WOMAN'S REALM

Beauty Hints For Women.

Every woman knows what sleep will do toward restoring the looks. But the woman who is a part of the social whirl during the gay months works such havoc with her nerves that she has to learn to rest; she has to begin all over again at the foot of the ladder that leads to beauty.

Rest is imperative, regular habits are essential, proper food is necessary.

The most difficult task in the repairing process is to learn to rest.

A tired-out woman is not a woman in a normal state. She is nerve-sick, and repose is the one achievement quite beyond her power to acquire.

But repose you must have, if you would replace your wan, jaded look by freshness and beauty.

The physical decadence that follows a perversion of all nature's laws is accompanied by a condition of nervous excitement, nerve exhaustion, that must be cured before the subject need expect improved looks.

Don't make the mistake of taking medicine for frazzled nerves. A narcotic or a stimulant will only produce the imitation of the real condition that you must earn by the exercise of self-control and a perseverance in the laws that govern health and good looks.

Every woman needs an abundance of sleep—eight or nine hours at the least.

To get into a normal condition after weeks and months of defying physical laws requires the exercise of will power, but it can be done. If you are able to sleep—I am now speaking to the army of society martyrs who wish to join the repair class—treat yourself to just as much natural slumber as you can get. Never mind at first how or when you take a nap. Exhausted nature recuperates very rapidly during normal sleep.

The rest cure is in order for the first week without reservation. Sleep will smooth out the wrinkles in many a tired face, bring back roses to the cheeks and brightness to the eyes.

If you cannot sleep, you must court the drowsy god by long hours spent out of doors, walking, driving, riding.

Next to rest in importance in the beauty restoration treatment is deep breathing.

Very few women breathe correctly, and rarely, if ever, does a tired woman fill her lungs to the brim with life-bringing oxygen.

To breathe correctly is to send the blood bounding through the veins, and once the blood circulates freely, health is established. Correct breathing has been so often described in this page that it is only necessary to refer to it.

Don't forget that deep, full breathing is essential to the development of the greatest beauty your skin may attain.

Deep breathing not only produces beauty but health, and by the simple practice of correctly inhaling and exhaling, always through the nostrils, pure oxygen many diseases are absolutely cured.—St. Louis Star.

Newest Thing in Fans.

The feather fan is something we have all seen and heard about. But the bird feather fan is a new and beautiful relation of the old style kind, which has just made it bow to the world of fashion.

These bird feather fans are of a soft and artistic beauty that defies description. They are generally mounted on tortoise-shell sticks and are made in odd and irregular shapes, some like the outspread wing of a bird, some heart shaped and some like an inverted serrated leaf.

One plain, but perfect little fan, was formed entirely of the iridescent neck feathers of a dove, in shades ranging all through the new petunia colors to the sharpest metallic blues, which are almost green. These words are but harsh and ineffective syllables with which to convey the idea of the soft and lustrous and melting hues which combined to make this fan a perfect gem of its kind. Seen in one light, the fan was magenta, pink and purple. Seen in another, it was light blue, dark blue and purple.

A heart shaped fan was composed of the brilliant bronze-green feathers of the peacock. This had a line of white; the edge was finished with brown. These fans are all of the folding variety.

The partridge fan was all tones of brown, from the faintest ashen hue to the tawny russet. On one side was mounted in delicate perfection the head of a partridge. When the fan was closed the head rested upon the soft cluster of feathers.

The pheasant fan was a very effective one in brown, with the tiny white speckled feathers flicking it here and there. A line of the copper-colored large feathers was along the edge, with deep brown and white to finish it.

These bird feather fans promise to be immensely popular. They are entirely new and most artistically made and in a wide range of colors and design, so that every woman may possess one in harmony with her gown.

A Girl's Room.

Her class colors had been white and gold, and upon that scheme and her love of wild flowers her mother built up the furnishings of the room that greeted her when she came back from college.

A plain side wall paper in a solid color was used. The cool, misty tone of delicate terre verte is charming and most suggestive of dewy fields. Frieze and ceiling were done in a greenish cream, running to a pure white, picked out with green and gold. On the floor was used a fine Japanese matting, with white ground, figured in dull green, and over it scattered a number of soft rugs in harmonious colors to give warmth. Ruffled curtains of dotted Swiss hang at the windows, mounted on small brass rods and draped back with white cords and tassels.

The window seat is upholstered with French cretonne in green, gold and white, and massed with dainty pillows of art linens, edged with ruffles of shaded green and yellow ribbons brocaded with tiny white daisies.

Furniture of bird's-eye maple was chosen, and a pretty screen, with panels of shirred silk, added much to the artistic completion of the room, as well as for use in shutting off chilling draughts. On the bed the French bolster was covered with buttercup yellow silk, and this with dotted Swiss; the spread to match, trimmed generously with left-in bands of insertion. For the bureau, etc., covers of round thread, white hemstitched linen were selected and embroidered with masses of golden blossoms. The table cover was of figured cretonne, edged with embroidered linen. The needed china was all in the prevailing white and gold and the small toilet articles of ivory, silver mounted.—New Haven Register.

How Men and Women Love.

When a woman's love is strong it takes possession of her to the exclusion of pretty nearly everything else. When a man's love is strong it does the same, and, as the records of everyday crimes so to prove, with an even greater intensity; but a man has more self-control, more dissimulation, more cunning, which all go to screen his real self from the eyes of his fellows. He may not, I grant you, be ready to give up his horses, his trade, his books, his sports, or—unless, indeed, he be very young and very lovesick—his dinner, but he, often enough, stakes his all upon one throw, and, if unlucky, is ready to give up far more than all these put together—viz., his life itself.

Here and there a woman puts an end to her existence through hopelessness, grief, and despair; here and there she droops and fades, withering away silently because she has lost her chief hold on life; here and there she sinks into a heart-broken melancholy or gentle passivity; but how rarely do we find, even in the verjest abandonment of love and passion, that a woman will be driven thereby to commit a crime? A man, driven to desperation by a woman's perfidy or fickleness, kills her, or his rival or himself. A woman in like case may suffer a thousand times as much, but she will never harm the one she loves, or has loved, or her successor. She will make no tragedy—but her whole life is the tragedy. She will forgive—because she is a woman; but she will not forget—because she is a woman.—Mirror-Farmer.

Velours chiffon makes most exquisite gowns for dress occasions.

A medium shade of porcelain blue, two browns—seal and golden—pistache and seaweed green, zinc gray, salmon pink, a new red and a heliotrope are the fashionable shades for spring.

A SERMON FOR SUNDAY

SUBJECT: "WHAT ARE THE PERMANENT ELEMENTS OF RELIGION?"

An Eloquent and Forceful Discourse by the Rev. John M. Davidson—Man's Interest in the Incarnation—A Striking Thought About the "Divinity of Man."

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—In the Fourth Unitarian Church, Flatbush, Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. John M. Davidson, preached on "What Are the Permanent Elements of Religion?" He said:

In this period of questioning, when old structures of religious faith are being torn down and new ones are taking their places, when what seems the very foundation of faith is being removed here and there to make way for new material, it is well worth our while to ask the question that is consequent upon such a condition, What elements of our religious faith are permanent and are likely to resist the tendency to change? It is a question that is agitating more people than ever before in history. We have been told that there is a growing indifference to religion, that men are abandoning the churches, that paganism has re-absorbed large sections of the country, even Puritan New England sharing in the general dissolution.

No one can deny that the influence of the church is not as great as it was when almost the only educated men were ministers. We who occupy the pulpits today frankly recognize the fact that the occupants of the pews are not only our equals in intellect, but are capable of giving us instruction in many departments of thought wherein the minister of old time was held to be supreme. The minister of to-day must recognize his relatively changed condition. He addresses minds at least as well informed and as bright as his own—and on many subjects more so. And he is woefully mistaken and unalert if he does not welcome the change as an advantage to himself and his work rather than a detriment. Nevertheless, for the time being, this condition tends to bring down the church attendance figures and to lessen the church's influence. It will continue to do so until the church finds men who are leaders (if not in intellect) in the effort for social amelioration. They must be specialists and authorities in their field, as the physicians and lawyers are in medicine and jurisprudence.

That the temporary falling off in the influence of the church as an institution argues for an indifference to religion I do not believe. The church has not yet learned its work. It is still delving in theologies and philosophies, when men are no more interested in the one than the other. Both theology and philosophy are vital matters, but the old manner of discussing these subjects cannot now interest men who are touched by the spirit of the scientific age. Until science and the whole new method of thought that follows upon recent scientific discovery have entered into and vivified theology and philosophy, they will cease to interest or influence man. They have no point of contact with his interests. But men are interested in religion. This very questioning and unrest proves it. Even the return to paganism, as it has been called, that trend, particularly noticeable in rural New England, away from the formalism of the church and back to nature, it not so alarming as appears at first glance. We are learning to see that, although for centuries we have called certain peoples "pagans," thinking to give them a bad name and so to avoid more tedious investigation into the character of these same pagans, we have much to learn about religion, and we may not seldom sit with profit at the feet of many a pagan prophet. Men are asking whether, after all, a comparatively small sect is right and all the rest wrong, or whether there is not a bit of truth in them all. They go further. They ask now whether that truth may not make all peoples free; they are wondering whether, after all, salvation is to be found with one and universal destruction with the other, whether the Creator of all nations is likely to make one of them His favorite, to give that one a true and final revelation and to withhold it from all others. Men are going even further than this in their questioning. They are putting the religions side by side for comparison. They are inquiring whether or not the truth that is in one may not be found occasionally in another, and they are finding through this comparative study of religions that, at bottom, all are alike. Great areas of parallel beliefs and aspirations are found making the claim of exclusive revelation ridiculous. In fact, when it is found that every single form of religion on the face of the earth lays claim to an exclusive revelation of some sort, and we find that the term "heretic" is merely an expression of one man's, or group of men's, point of view, we begin to open our eyes to the fact that our own past claims in the matter may not carry so much weight as we had thought.

The discoveries that we have made during the last century about the habits of life and the character of thought of the other half of the world, the scientific methods of investigation into the subject of religion, it origin, rise and—often—its decay, into religious literatures, and among them our own Bible, are broadening in view, even while, and perhaps because, they disturb our complacency. Religion is given a new interest. We find that we Christians are not the only members of God's family, and that there are others who care for Him as much as we do and whom He loves as greatly as He loves us.

I say that this is the tendency of men's minds to-day. Hardly do the most of us admit the changed point of view as an accomplished fact, even to ourselves, and in many localities the old exclusiveness is as impenetrable as ever it was in the dark ages. Universally, where religious exclusiveness is found it is accompanied, bred and safeguarded by some form of claims to final revelation or final authority for truth—some artificial guarantee that the doctrine preached in that church in the beginning is now and ever shall be preached without change, world without end. That such claim is manifestly impossible to substantiate has never deterred the church from making it. It is one recognition—though a weak one—that absolute truth is unchangeable, and every religion and every church that claims to have a final and true revelation must, of course, claim to possess a knowledge of that "absolute" which Spencer calls "unknowable." Not one such body could step forth boldly and lay hold on the great affirmation of to-day, that the faith of to-day is but the stepping stone to the faith of to-morrow; that revelation is not sealed; that truth is a living thing, growing as we grow; that mankind is saved through perpetual evolution from lower to higher, or, in other words, by fulfilling one meted destiny of becoming perfect as the Father in Heaven is perfect. Our business to-day is frankly to admit that the final revelation is yet far off and that we have by no means found the "absolute" truth. The knowledge of to-day is but a little section of that absolute. The thing for us to remember, and to take courage from remembering, is that we are here to enlarge, and that we are enlarging, that section of knowledge.

I have said that whatever religious exclusiveness is found it is accompanied by some kind of authority purporting to guarantee the permanency and integrity of its faith. The creed has been changed from its original meaning—"credo, I believe"—to an imperative "thou shalt believe." From being a simple statement of an individual faith it has become a formal statement of a system of dogma to which all who would be saved must subscribe. No latitude is allowed for individual interpretations or for the growth of religious and theological conceptions. The aim is simply to lay down a body of doctrine which embodies final truth, and a confession which the whole world must subscribe, regardless of individual reason and unaffected by the growth of knowledge and moral consciousness. The attempt has always failed. There is no creed that has the same meaning for us to-day which it held for mankind a century ago. It is not now actually changed in form, but in the case of a notable number, it is changed in content to the minds of its adherents.

If we are but willing to open our eyes we shall find that there are hundreds of methods of salvation, and each method has its sect. But what does the method matter beside the tremendous ultimate fact that all the world is looking for salvation? Here is the universal and permanent element. In some way the truth has penetrated through every mind that we are prone to think this world in order to grow. We are all more or less universally interested in speculations about Nirvana, or about atonements, or about the "survival of the fittest," nor is the discussion as to the proper aim, whether for happiness or virtue. Perhaps one is interested in one or another of these means to the end, but we are all interested in the outcome—salvation of the human race. It is a universal longing and is one of the permanent things of life.

Then mankind has been universally interested in another thing—the incarnation. Ever since man became man and realized that there was a power outside of himself to which he was bound, he has thought this power as in some way entering and becoming the guiding power of the object of the visible world. At first it was a mere stick or stone, a tree or animal or wild beast that was the chosen deity of deity. Then in good time there grew that none but man would be a suitable habitation for the Creator. We hear of the Greek heroes, "descendants of the gods," of Druidic and Delphic priests and of prophets in all lands whose life was controlled in an especial way by God. We hear of a perfect incarnation in Buddha, born of a virgin, with a divine parentage attested by miracles of various kinds, and teaching that there were many incarnations similar to his, and that whenever the world has advanced to a condition in which its needs are different from the old, God incarnates Himself in a mortal who thereupon becomes a great leader and prophet. Our minds, of course, now revert to another incarnation, that of God in Jesus, who also taught that there are many incarnations; who prayed that His disciples might be one with God as He Himself was one with Him. And as we see the tendency of men to obscure the great truth by the particular example, the truth which has most obviously appealed to men is the incarnation of God in a single man, or, formerly, in a class of men as prophets or priests. The truth of it endures, and that has been pointed out by Jesus and all the greatest leaders. The men is that of perpetual and universal incarnation. God has breathed the breath of life and has lit the spark of divinity in mankind, for we are His children, made in His moral image, inheritors of His divinity because we are natural sons and daughters. This is the tremendous fact toward which the world is groping. It explains the well proven fact that mankind's trend is forward rather than downward. It gives us the courage for going on, for keeping on in the struggle when to our restricted vision the obstacles seem insuperable. It compels us to believe that this world is destined good, that the good is "hastening on toward immortality," while evil is doomed to destruction. If "God's in His heaven" is God's in His world as well, the guarantee of its fundamental integrity, the implanting of every good thing in the heart of man.

Do you not see how intimately connected are the two ideas, the incarnation of God and the divinity of man? Both ideas are everywhere recurrent in the theology of the world, though their particular expression in one faith is utterly different from that in another, and it is the difference in the isolated expressions of the truth that keeps men apart. The permanent is the larger truth must wait upon our further enlightenment and broadening of view before it can bring us together. We are learning, it is true. The existence of the unwonted spirit of toleration and unselfishness in religion, the modern armation of the universality of spirit shows that we are catching some glimpses of the larger truth that lies behind our incarnations and our atonements, our theophanies and our avatars. Our Buddhas and Jesus of past times, if we had heard the real message of Jesus and the prophets and poets we should long since have discovered this truth. To be a man is to be a descendant of God, to be a descendant of God is to be His prophet and incarnation, the inheritor of His divinity. And this is the larger permanent truth, the truth which is prepared for by every religion that the world has ever known.

After having agreed that to do right is the end of conduct, can we not take hands with each other by the hand in the fellowship of a common profession, even though we may differ as to the adoption of means to that end? Can we all recognize the fact that the salvation of humanity is the permanent object of all religious effort, then our various methods of attaining salvation will soon take their proper places as subordinate elements. Our faith and variable according as the needs of men vary. The creed then will be no more a Shibboleth by which to save one and exclude another, but a covenant of kindred minds bent upon a common object and drawn together by the natural sympathy of similar beliefs. Religion will be no longer made up of religions—some true, some true—but will be recognized as fundamentally a unit wherever man has lifted up his head and called on the power that is above him. We shall see that the essential elements of religion are not the differences that divide, they are the permanent and fundamental things upon which the forms of religion are founded, and which if we but let them, will unite men in sympathy of common aspirations and aspirations.

Good Out of Blunders.

What we intend to do is an indication of our spirit and purpose. We are responsible for our words and acts as we endeavor to have them effective for good or ill. But God is ever working in love. He educes brings good out of ill, or out of those and speech beyond the best motive of speaker or doer. A co-worker in Christ service in Cuba notes the statement in these columns that Emerson's search for truth made discoveries which are hidden to those who think far more of God than he did. Then she wisely adds: "And that is continually done in this world has been illustrated to me for years. One who makes a true picture of anything in the universe—a leaf or a flower, a shell, a landscape, a cloud or a star, an act of joy, or any such thing—may and must reveal to some others more than he himself has seen. A child describing in a childish way some new flower might, without knowing it, give valuable information to the botanist." How good is God, to use not the welfare of others not only our best endeavors, but our very blunders and our poorest efforts!

The Alloy of Self.

Achievement fused with self is too base to stand the test of time. The secret of the success of one who had accomplished much in many fields was well expressed when it was said that he had learned to concentrate his powers on the result, irrespective of how that result would affect himself. Every atom of force deflected toward self becomes friction. Introspection, self-consciousness and egotism are all synonyms for wasted energy. Are you striving to rid yourself of this waste?

The world, lying in sin and sorrow, with a thousand desires to be better, cries calls to the church for examples of those who rise above evil and walk and talk with God.—The Rev. Roy Palmer.

SISTERS OF CHARITY

All Over the United States Use Peru-na for Catarrh.

A recommend recently received from a Catholic institution in the Southwest reads as follows:

A Prominent Mother Superior Says:

"I can testify from experience to the efficiency of Peruna as one of the very best medicines, and it gives me pleasure to add my praise to that of thousands who have used it. For years I suffered with catarrh of the stomach, all remedies proving valueless for relief. Last spring I went to Colorado, hoping to be benefited by a change of climate, and while there a friend advised me to try Peruna. After using two bottles I found myself very much improved. The remains of my old disease being now so slight, I consider myself cured, yet for a while I intend to continue the use of Peruna. I am now treating another patient with your medicine. She has been sick with malaria and troubled with leucorrhœa. I have no doubt that a cure will be speedily effected."

These are samples of letters received by Dr. Hartman from the various orders of Catholic Sisters throughout the United States.

The names and addresses to these letters have been withheld from respect to the Sisters, but will be furnished on request.

One-half of the diseases which afflict mankind are due to some catarrhal derangement of the mucous membrane lining some organ or passage of the body.

A remedy that would act immediately upon the congested mucous membrane, restoring it to its normal state, would consequently cure all these diseases. Catarrh is catarrh wherever located, whether it be in the head, throat, lungs, stomach, kidneys or pelvic organs. A remedy that will cure it in one location will cure it in all locations. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

Household Matters

Bread Griddle Cakes.

Add one and one-half cupfuls of grated bread crumbs to one and one-half cupfuls of scalded milk, let soak half an hour, then add one egg well beaten, half a cup of flour, half a teaspoonful of salt, four level teaspoonfuls of baking powder; beat well and cook on the griddle.

Entire Wheat Griddle Cakes.

Mix half a cup of entire wheat flour, one cupful of wheat flour, three level teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt and two tablespoonfuls of sugar; beat one egg, add to it one and one-half cupfuls of milk and one tablespoonful of melted butter, pour this upon the flour mixture; beat well and bake on a griddle.

Cornmeal and Rice Muffins.

Scald half a cup of milk, pour it over half a cup of corn meal and let stand ten minutes, then add half a cupful of cold boiled rice, half a cupful of flour, half a teaspoon of salt, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, three level teaspoonful of butter and the white of the yolk of one egg well beaten, one tablespoonful of butter and the white of the egg beaten stiff; bake in muffin pans, in a quick oven, twenty minutes.

Hollandaise Sauce.

Cream half a cup of butter, add the yolk of one egg and beat well, then add another yolk and beat again; then add one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, a little pepper and the juice of one-fourth lemon, a little at a time; just before serving add one-fourth cupful of boiling water; place the bowl in a pan of boiling water and stir slowly and constantly until the mixture thickens; remove and stir one minute; if the sauce cooks too long it will curdle.

Lobster Cream.

Boil a two-pound lobster fifteen minutes, remove and when cold break the shell and take out the meat and chop it quite fine; put half a cupful of milk and half a cupful of bread crumbs over the fire and cook for ten minutes; then add one-fourth cupful of cream, half a teaspoonful of salt, a little cayenne pepper and the whites of two eggs beaten stiff; add the lobster meat; turn into a buttered mold; stand in a pan of hot water, cover with buttered paper and bake in a moderate oven twenty minutes; serve with lobster sauce, made by rubbing lobster coral through a sieve and adding it to a cream sauce.

Style in Table Linens.

Ireland, Germany and Scotland all contribute their quota to the appointment of the modern table, and, as every housewife knows, there are styles in table linens no less than in bonnets. The satin damasks are exquisite in pattern and in weave, and the new motifs for borders are really the work of artists, says the Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

To accompany these beautiful things are all white centrepieces and servlettes in German raised embroidery and open work. In the meantime a change is rung over the damask and the lace cloth by the exquisite cloths of linen inset and bordered with Cluny.

To prevent blue spotting the clothes gather up the corners and tie together. Dip this bag in the water and squeeze it until the water is blue enough. In this the way the clothes will never become spotted.

Carpets which have become spotted by having liquids, etc., spilt upon them may be freshened up and the spots removed by going over the surface with a cloth dipped in warm water in which ammonia has been put.

A woman who is her own laundress folds all flat pieces, like towels, pillowcases and sheets, carefully; then passes them several times through the wringer. The effect is as if they had been mangled, and it saves a deal of ironing.

See that the sides or walls of your meat safes are occasionally scoured with soap and slaked quicklime. All places where provisions are kept should be so constructed that a brisk current of cool air can be made to pass through them at will.

Never sweep dust from one room to another, nor from upstairs to the lower part of the house. Always take it up in the dustpan where you have previously placed some tea leaves. This prevents the dust from scattering again and returning to its old haunts.

Kerosene will not only remove the dirt that collects in a sort of rim around the sides of a porcelain bathtub, but it will take off the white blotches that form on zinc-lined bathtubs. Apply with a cloth saturated in the fluid and then wrung out. Follow with hot water and soda.

Use a clean firebrick instead of the ordinary iron stand, and you will retain the heat of the iron much longer. The usual iron stand not only admits the air to the bottom of the iron, but it conducts the heat from it. The brick, being a non-conductor of heat, retains the heat in the smoothing iron much longer.

The old-fashioned cuckoo clocks, so characteristic of some parts of Germany, are being displaced by alarm clocks of the American type.

Mrs. Haskell, Worthy Vice Templar, Independent Order Good Templars, of Silver Lake, Mass., tells of her cure by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: Four years ago I was nearly dead with inflammation and ulceration. I endured daily untold agony, and life was a burden to me. I had used medicines and washes internally and externally until I made up my mind that there was no relief for me. Calling at the home of a friend, I noticed a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My friend endorsed it highly and I decided to give it a trial to see if it would help me. It took patience and perseverence for I was in bad condition, and I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for nearly five months before I was cured, but what a change, from despair to happiness, from misery to the delightful exhilarating feeling health always brings. I would not change back for a thousand dollars, and your Vegetable Compound is a grand medicine.

"I wish every sick woman would try it and be convinced."—MRS. IDA HASKELL, Silver Lake, Mass. Worthy Vice Templar, Independent Order of Good Templars.

When a medicine has been successful in more than a million cases, is it justice to yourself to say, without trying it, "I do not believe it would help me"?

Surely you cannot wish to remain weak, and sick and discouraged, exhausted with each day's work. You have some derangement of the feminine organism, and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you just as surely as it has others.

Mrs. Tillie Hart, of Larimore, N. D., says:

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM: I might have been spared many months of suffering and pain if I had known of the efficacy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a few months sooner, for I tried many remedies without finding anything which helped me before I tried the Vegetable Compound. I dreaded the approach of the menstrual period every month, as it meant much suffering and pain. Some months the flow was very scanty and others it was profuse, but after I had used the Compound for two months I became regular and natural, and so I continued until I felt perfectly well, and the parts were strengthened to perform the work without assistance and pain. I am like a different woman now, where before I did not care to live, and I am pleased to testify as to the good your Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Sincerely yours, MRS. TILLIE HART, Larimore, N. D.

Be it, therefore, believed by all women who are ill that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the medicine they should take. It has stood the test of time, and it has hundreds of thousands of cures to its credit. Women should consider it unwise to use any other medicine.

Mrs. Pinkham, whose address is Lynn, Mass, will answer cheerfully and without cost all letters addressed to her by sick women. Perhaps she has just the knowledge that will help your case—try her to-day—it costs nothing.

CAPSICUM VASELINE

(PUT UP IN COLLAPSIBLE TUBES)

A substitute for and superior to mustard or any other plaster, and will not blister the most delicate skin. The pain-allaying and curative qualities of this article are wonderful. It will stop the toothache at once, and relieve headache and sciatica. We recommend it as the best and safest external counter-irritant known, also as an external remedy for pains in the chest and stomach and all rheumatic, neuralgic and gouty complaints. A trial will prove what we claim for it, and it will be found to be invaluable in the household. Many people say "It is the best of all of your preparations." Price 15 cts., at all druggists or other dealers, or by sending this amount to us in postage stamps we will send you a tube by mail. No article should be accepted by the public unless the same carries our label, as otherwise it is not genuine. CHESEBROUGH MFG. CO., 17 State Street, NEW YORK CITY.

Washington's Hand.

George Washington's hand was described as that of a giant. On the last occasion of General Lafayette's visit to this country he remarked to Mr. Custis, when referring to a former visit:

"You were holding to a single finger of the good general's remarkable hand—the greatest feat you could perform at that time."

Washington was the champion jumper of his day. In one match he covered twenty-one feet three inches, easily beating all competitors.

Reforming the Dyspeptics.

The Dyspeptic Club, recently formed in Jersey City, aims evidently to create a new "department of the interior" and to manage it on advanced and economic theories. So far there are only fifty-seven members in the organization, although a very much greater number, mostly Americans, are plainly eligible.

Each member must make quarterly written reports of experiences. The diversity of these should certainly give due variety to the sessions. But this is the only way to get facts. But actions of different foods must be duly estimated. Pie and pain, buckwheat and bloat, sausage and suffering, pickle and pang, cabbage and colic, ham and heartburn, must show their proper relations. The humiliating part of the business is that each culprit must confess his weak will and his misplaced confidences, while pork, pie and pudding will still hold their own against odds. Thus, no member should be trusted to give absolute impartial testimony unless he can prove that he was free from cramp, hyperacidity, headache or borborygmus when his report was written. Gastralgia is as apt, in a reflex way, to affect the higher moral sense of truth as is a colic to warp sound judgment on the ordinary relation of cause and effect. The only time for good resolution is when the paroxysm is on.—Medical Record.

Danced With Sixty-Seven.

Miss Margaret Costello and John Polinski of Jersey City were married at the Polish Roman Catholic Church at Bayonne. A reception followed at their home at Pine street and Communipaw avenue.

The bridegroom told his wife that it was a custom of his country for the bride to dance with every male guest at the wedding. There were sixty-seven men guests, and Mrs. Polinski waltzed with every one of them, concluding the final waltz by falling unconscious.

FIRST VICE PRESIDENT HINES MAKES APPEAL TO PEOPLE OF ALABAMA.

Walker D. Harris first vice president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company has given out an address to the people of Alabama in which he makes a strong appeal against the election of any man as president of the railroad commission who has prejudiced the laws and powers of the commission. The following is his circular letter to the people:

February 24, 1904

To the People of Alabama:

Would you think it fair and just if the lawyer who appeared in court and argued a case against you in favor of your opponent should be called to sit as the judge in that same case at the next term of court?

Last June Mr. B. B. Comer appeared before the railroad commission of Alabama and argued vigorously that all railroad rates in Alabama should be reduced. As candidate for president of the railroad commission he is now promising to decide all those matters against the railroad companies. His various lines of business give him a direct and very large interest in a great many of the most important of these matters. Do you think it fair and just to make him one of the judges to hear and decide the very controversy in which he has already appeared as an advocate or attorney, in which he has a large personal interest, and which he has completely prejudged in advance of trial or hearing?

The people of Alabama would not elect any man as president of the railroad commission who had appeared before the railroad commission in that controversy in behalf of the railroads. If they would not elect a man representing the railroads, should they in justice elect a man who appeared against the railroads, and who is adversely interested to them?

The law of Alabama declares that a judge must not act in a case in which he has been attorney or in which he is interested. Does not the same spirit of fairness require that a man should not be elected president of the railroad commission for the express purpose of deciding matters in which he is interested both personally and as attorney?

We do not, of course, deny or question the right of the state to decide what is just and fair as between the shippers and the railroads, and that the railroad commission has ample power to render such decisions and make them effective.

We do feel, however, that we have the right to ask you to select some fair-minded and disinterested man as president of the railroad commission, before whom the railroads, as well as the shippers, can appear in the confident belief that a fair and impartial hearing will be accorded.

Very respectfully,
WALKER D. HINES.
First Vice President of L. and N. Railroad Co

POPULISTS TOGETHER.

St. Louis, Feb. 24.—The joint committee of the fusionists and the middle-of-the-road populists, representing the people's party of the United States, today issued the official call for a national convention of the people's party, to meet in Springfield, Ill., July 4, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon for the purpose of nominating candidates for the office of president and vice president of the United States, and formulating a national platform.

Prior to the joint conference of the two committees the following resolutions of the national committee, in the nature of a pledge to the middle-of-the-road committee, was presented:

"Resolved, by the people's party, in its national committee meeting held in St. Louis, Feb. 22 and 23, 1904, do hereby set out and state that we do fix the fourth day of July as the date of holding the national convention of the people's party, and we further declare ourselves determined to name as our candidates for president and vice president only members of the people's party and further resolve that we shall give the same our undivided support.

FIRST VICE PRESIDENT HINES MAKES APPEAL TO PEOPLE OF ALABAMA.

Walker D. POPULISTS TOGETHER.

St. Louis, Feb. 24.—The joint committee of the fusionists and the middle-of-the-road populists, representing the people's party of the United States, today issued the official call for a national convention of the people's party, to meet in Springfield, Ill., July 4, 1904, at 12 o'clock noon for the purpose of nominating candidates for the office of president and vice president of the United States, and formulating a national platform.

Prior to the joint conference of the two committees the following resolutions of the national committee, in the nature of a pledge to the middle-of-the-road committee, was presented:

"Resolved, by the people's party, in its national committee meeting held in St. Louis, Feb. 22 and 23, 1904, do hereby set out and state that we do fix the fourth day of July as the date of holding the national convention of the people's party, and we further declare ourselves determined to name as our candidates for president and vice president only members of the people's party and further resolve that we shall give the same our undivided support.

"Resolved, it is our most earnest and sincere desire that all persons who are in favor of the principles of populism will jointly assist this committee in its efforts to perform the duties above outlined.

J. H. Edmiston, Chairman.
Chas. De France, Sec. Pro Tem.

This pledge effectually eradicated all existing differences and fuses these two factions harmoniously.

Work was immediately begun on the official call by the joint committee, and it was issued late today. The basis of representation shall be one delegate from each congressional district in each state, with an additional delegate at large for each state for each 2,000 or majority fraction thereof cast for General James B. Weaver for president in 1892; the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory five delegates each and three delegates from each of the other territories.

The declaration of principles of the people's party formulated and issued by the national committees in joint session reiterates oft repeated declarations and adds:

"In the people's party of the nation lies the only hope of perpetuation of popular institutions. We ratify and affirm the fundamental principles of the platform of the people's party adopted at its national convention in Omaha in 1892.

"The platform of the people's party made at Omaha in 1892 was originally made in conference called and held by the labor organizations February 22, 1892. We therefore invite the wealth producers to take part in the primaries that shall choose delegates to our convention, guaranteeing that the influence of this party shall be given to advance the interests of organized labor by the recognition of the union label on manufactured products as well as in legislation which at least is the only hope for just conditions for labor."

THORSBY.

I had an interesting letter from a friend near Randolph last week, in which he makes some good points as to why we should not wait too long before getting out our men for the various county offices. He says we have more good men than there are places, and that we should begin to discuss the qualifications of the probable candidates and thus call out our best material, and bring them to the front and offset the efforts of the demmies to draw as many populists as possible into their primary in order to get them obligated to vote that ticket in the general election. Principally, though, to make as big a show as they can in their primary. They are wasting lots of paper writing to men for their support, that they call ignoramuses when they meet in their club at the court house, and they would not know our people if it was not for their votes. My friend suggests names as follows, viz.: For probate judge, L. H. Reynolds, A. G. Dake, Moses Robinson, J. W. Moore, etc.; for circuit clerk, E. H. Adams, Professor Anderson, S. H. Collins, etc.; for county commissioners, S. E. Waldrop, W. Y. Nix, B. H. Wells, W. H. Conway, T. G. Milling, A. T. Hathcock, H. A. J. Harris, etc.; for collector, T. J. Hubbard, E. H. Adams, J. T. Letcher, James Grant, James Mims, F. M. Lett, R. M. Hubbard, Rev. J. H. Thomas, etc.; for assessor, L. B. Pounds, Professor Anderson, E. G. Rollins, D. C. Gandy, etc. And yet there are many good men not mentioned, so you see we have lots of good material—men who have never yet "bowed the knee to Baal," nor will they ever sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. So let every one bring forth his man or men, and let them be discussed, every one putting forth his best reasons in support of his man, and why he would be suitable for any particular office; for we certainly desire to have only men who are worthy and well qualified to discharge the duties of their office, and at the same time choose men from the rank and file who are in touch with the masses, and who would not take the democratic "taint" as soon as they reach the court house steps. Well, the demmies have set April 11th to hold the funeral services over the few populist deserters who died in trying to reach the democratic pie counter, and the people will bury the fragments, demmies and all, in November with an appropriate epitaph, "Died from an overdose of fraud."

"X-RAY."

FOURTH ANNUAL STATEMENT.

Farmers' Mutual Insurance Association of Alabama (Chilton County Branch).

In the four years ending February 3, 1904, that this association has been in existence in this county, it has levied sixteen assessments to pay 24 losses, viz.: Lightning, 1; wind, 3; fire, 20. The TOTAL of the sixteen assessments was $2.24 3-4 per hundred, being an average YEARLY assessment of 56 1-5 cents on each hundred dollars of insurance, which is a fraction over one-half of one per cent per annum.

ALEX G. DAKE,
President Chilton Co. Branch.

ONE MORE CRUISER

Carrying the Stars and Stripes Goes Into Commission

The new United States sheathed cruiser Des Moines was placed in commission Tuesday at the Charlestown navy yard, the occasion being attended by the usual ceremonies. Commander Alexander McCracken, U. S. N., is to be her first commander. She is similar in design to the Cleveland, the Tacoma, the Chattanooga and the Galveston. In the construction of the Des Moines and her sister ships corn pith with an estimated capacity of 6,720 cubic feet has been used as an obdurating material for the water line protection, so that if the hull should be pierced by a shot the swelling of the corn pith placed between the outer and inner plates will prevent the ingress of the water.

After Washington's Will.

An attempt has been made to steal the will of George Washington from the clerk's office of the Fairfax, Va., court house. The outer doors of the vault were shattered by the explosive used, but the document, which reposes in a glass case with other valuable papers, was unharmed. It is supposed the would-be thieves fled without accomplishing their object because of the unexpectedly loud explosion, which aroused many persons residing near the court house. The will is in Washington's writing and was made the year of his death. It covers twenty-nine closely written pages, each of which bears the signature of the first president.

Organizing Great Pilgrimage.

In Mexico a great pilgrimage to Loudres, Rome and the Holy Land is being organized. It is expected that 2,000 people will make the journey, going in special trains to New York and thence by steamer to France. Many wealthy pilgrims desire to pay their respects to the new pope.

Senator Gallinger introduced a bill increasing the salaries of the executive officers of the government and also of senators and members of the house of representatives. The bill provides that the new salaries shall take effect March 4, 1905. The bill fixes the following scale: President, $75,000; vice president, $15,000; speaker of the house, $12,000; members of the cabinet, $15,000; senators and members of the house, $8,000.

Merritt O. Chance, of Ohio, who has been secretary to the secretary of war for several years, has been appointed chief of the division of supply to the postoffice department to succeed Michael W. Louis, who was removed as the result of the postal investigation.

John Alexander Dowie, of Zion City, Ill., has appealed to the American consul at Melbourne for protection. When the mob broke up his meeting Sunday, he is said to have hidden three hours in the organ loft. Hereafter his meetings will be held behind closed doors.

It is reported that the loss of the Russian gunboat Yenisei will have serious consequences. The vessel had placed torpedoes at various places, and the maps indicating these spots went down with the ship.

Mississippi day at the world's fair will be July 7th. The date is the anniversary of the meeting of the first constitutional convention which paved the way for the entrance of Mississippi into the union.

An Alabama man has sued his wife for $3,700 for failure to support him and their children.

The visitors to the Library of Congress in the last fiscal year numbered 834,201.

A Russian cruiser is blocked in the Suez canal.

Jacksonville, Fla., is to have a fire boat.

AUDITOR'S REPORT

Certain Figures of Interest Concerning Alabama.

Copies of the annual report of State Auditor Thomas L. Sowell are ready for distribution. The report shows that Alabama has 7,046 pieces of state tax land on hand. In the year 1902 the state received from the sale of tax land $54,206.14, which was four times as much as received in any year since 1899.

The report shows definitely the result of the reduction by the new constitution of the tax rates. Under the old constitution as fixed by the statutes the Alabama tax rate was 7 1-2 mills. As fixed by the new constitution the rate is 6 1-2 mills. Three mills is set apart from this for school purposes and one mill for helpless confederate soldiers. Under the old constitution during 1902 the total amount of general taxes was $1,628,745.16. With this cut made by the new constitution this general fund was in 1903 reduced to $773,198.68.

From the report it is learned that the total receipts of the state in 1903 were $3,201,840.42, and the disbursements in the same year were $2,937,383.07. The report shows, in one feature of interest, that the state received $16,929.75 from corporations taxes. The pensioners of the state, confederate soldiers and their widows, are paid annually $273,153.46.

The auditor's report shows that the last session of the legislature cost the state $59,823.76.

SHOOTING IN SELMA.

Jesse Seay, an ex-Policeman, Wounds C. P. O'Connor.

Early Monday morning Jesse Seay, formerly a police officer of Selma, shot and fatally wounded C. P. O'Connor, an artificial stone sidewalk and curbing layer, who has boarded with the Seays for some time. Seay was on a spree and asked O'Connor if he had paid his board. On being told that he had not, Seay is reported as having said he was going to have either the money or the man's life. A few words are said to have passed when Seay put his pistol to O'Connor's abdomen and fired. There is little if any hope for O'Connor's recovery. An operation was performed as a last resort, but the surgeons do not give out much hope for his recovery.

Seay was discharged from the police force for his too free use of his pistol, having killed a negro boy and a white jail bird before his removal from the force.

100 MILES THROUGH THE AIR.

A Moundville, Ala., Relic Picked Up Near Warrior.

A check for $2.64 drawn by a lumber company of Moundville, dated January 24, 1903, and drawn on the Merchants and Planters' bank, Tuscaloosa, Ala., payable to J. H. Spence, and with that name endorsed on it, was found in a field ten miles west of Warrior. It is believed that this check was carried by the wind on the night of the storm at Moundville.

Gadsden Fire Protection.

A fire engine recently purchased has been shipped and is expected to arrive this week. The engine was purchased by the city at a cost of $4,500 and was built and designed especially for Gadsden. Gadsden is the smallest city in the state to own an engine of this kind, but the water works are such that it was deemed necessary for the safety of the city to purchase a fire engine of this kind.

Opelika Bank Closed.

The Shaparde bank, the oldest institution in Opelika, closed its doors Saturday after an examination by State Examiner Rutledge. Notice is posted on the door which reads: "Closed pending action of state treasurer." The hope is expressed that depositors will be paid in full.

In a collision on the A. G. S. at Coaling, Ala., Sunday Bert Kingsley, a tramp, was killed and Engineer George Kerlin and the negro fireman, Green, were injured. The freights were both extras. It seems that Engineer Kerlin misjudged the distance at Coaling, where he was to meet the other train, and was unable to stop his train in time to prevent the collision. There is quite a steep grade at this point and he had a heavy train behind him.

W. L. Taylor, a merchant of York, Ala., was dangerously wounded by the accidental discharge of a pistol which had dropped. The ball penetrated his lung.

March was warmest in Alabama in 1898, coldest in 1896. The 19th is the average date of the last killing frost. The latest date is April 8th.

Opelika, Ala., is to have a paid fire department.

TWINS IN DISASTER.

Decatur Has Serious Fire—Second Only to New Decatur's.

Following closely in the wake of the New Decatur fire a disastrous fire occurred in Decatur last Friday morning. The fire was of unknown origin and caused a loss of something like $70,000 on the buildings and stock of goods.

The fire originated in the second story of a large two-story frame building owned by the Mineral Land Company.

The losses were: Echols opera house, loss $10,000, insurance $5,000; one-story frame cottage owned by Jas. Edwards, loss $1,500, about half insured; two-story frame business house (where the fire originated), loss $2,000, about half insured; a two-story frame business house and stables, about half insured. It is said that Mr. Brown will build a fine hotel on the lot where this building burned. The loss on stocks of goods were: Holmes Bros., wholesale tobacconists and confectioners, heaviest losers, $30,000, half insured; Tom Williams, toombstone and marble works, $2,000; several hundred dollars' worth of hay stored in the Mineral Land Company's block by Brock & Spight.

The loss on the buildings and stock of goods is only about half covered by insurance, while the people who lived in the buildings were poor and carried no insurance whatever.

Two Mail Clerks Killed.

A negro supposed to be crazy shot and killed Postal Clerk Stockton and possibly fatally wounded Postal Clerk Bass on the Alabama Great Southern train two miles north of Meridian.

The negro jumped from the train after shooting the clerks and made his escape into the woods. He is being followed by a posse with bloodhounds and it is believed that he will be caught. The negro is supposed to have boarded the train at Meridian and ridden the two miles before he was discovered. He crept into the mail car and shot the clerks. The train backed back to Meridian to get more clerks, and also to report the affair. It was at first thought that it was an attempt to hold up and rob the train and the passengers, but this was discounted by the fact that there was only one negro.

Cuban Elections.

Sunday the congressional elections, the first ever conducted entirely under Cuban auspices, were quiet. Predictions of disturbances at certain points caused some apprehension, but so far as reported nothing unusual occurred.

Three Killed.

Three were killed in Hargrove mines by an explosion Friday night and their bodies horribly burned. Jake Waldenberger, white, recently from Tennessee, and two negroes were the unfortunates. The explosion was what is commonly termed a "windy shot."

Work at the new Anniston, Ala., foundry is progressing rapidly. The company's patterns, machinery and other effects are unloaded and stored. The grading for the foundry is completed and the material for its erection will be on the ground and Monday morning the foundations will start. The spur track into the grounds is completed and the pipes have been carried in.

The artesian well which has supplied Marion with water caved in recently and disclosed a fine coal seam about six hundred feet under the surface. It is now thought that a valuable coal property has been discovered.

Lamar county's grand jury has returned 71 true bills, among which is one against Elna Webb, a boy of about 17 years of age, for the killing of a Mr. Hill at Pharos on the 11th of this month. Webb is out on bond.

The senate committee on public buildings and grounds ordered a favorable report on the bill appropriating $2,000,000 for a postoffice site in New York city in connection with the Pennsylvania railroad station.

The negro cook at the home of Samuel Waller, where a sensational burglary and arson case occurred recently, is under detention, as the Phoenix City authorities think she can give them valuable testimony.

The state board of assessment will hold its annual meeting March 8th in the office of Auditor Sowell. The board fixes the assessment of all railroad property in the state.

A general order has issued from the office of the adjutant general calling for an inspection of all the companies of the Third regiment of infantry, Alabama national guards.

The Louisville and Nashville bridge of the Altoona extension is nearing completion and in about two weeks will be turned over to the company.

James A. Pugh, a veteran newspaper man and the first president of the Virginia Press Association, is dead.

Woman's Realm.

TURKISH WOMEN CONTENT.

Their Prevailing Passion is a Fondness For Sweets and Smoking.

It is not an easy matter to form a just idea of the beauty of the Turkish women, for beneath their coquettish veils and unenviable dresses, their glowing complexions, immense black eyes, well turned chins, perfect outline of face, their figures may be anything but charming.

Paying calls and attending wedding festivals, promenading, driving, shopping and seeking the bath are the chief amusements of the odalisque. Before the outings faces are blanched, then rouged, eyebrows and eyelashes touched up, and numerous little coquetries resorted to, which, when toned down by the transparent yashmak, are calculated to provoke admiration in the breast of a spectator.

Only a few of the rich garments of the harem are worn — they are too heavy, and only intended for display. A harem is composed of various nationalities, and occasionally it is difficult to enforce harmony. Many times we have been amused by stage pictures representing a seraglio "tempest in the tea pot," fancying it an exaggeration, but if we recollect the dust that flies when two lady birds are disagreeing, we may readily realize that fifty or more damsels might cause, with but little effort, cyclonic effects.

When the inmates of the harem take advantage of their outing to indulge in a little harmless flirtation they have the advantage of being able to avoid the male relatives. It would be impossible for a man to recognize his wife beneath such a costume, and while the husbands are devoutly smiting their breasts in the mosques, the wives are driving in their carriages, enveloped in clouds of gauze and decked with jewelry.

What can prevent or eclipse the flashing of the black, swimming, languid eye? A voluptuous form, delicately small white hands, features not at all coarse—all these are hidden. The eye alone must bear all the odium of the intriguante. The Turkish woman is neither so bad nor so good as she is painted, her coquetry is not of the perfidious kind, and she obeys her lord and master passively. Her prevailing passion is fondness for sweets and smoking—nothing can describe the amount of confectionery and tobacco consumed in a harem.

Treating Stubborn Hair.

Brushing, shampooing, etc., which are such important elements in good grooming, will improve even seemingly hopeless locks, while systematic training will after a time make the most obstinate hair lie in the desired direction. Because the hair has been somewhat neglected in this respect in the past, do not work on the principle that if a certain amount of care is beneficial a good deal will do wonders; heroic measures almost always prove disastrous. Coax but do not force matters, as too frequent brushing and other manipulations of the hair irritate the scalp and cause the hair to fall out. Hair which is scrupulously clean but very stubborn in its habit of growth needs training instead of shampooing, a common error in this day of good grooming. Close observation will soon teach one the difference between fluffy hair and that which is extremely dry. Never under any circumstances allow the hair to remain at night in the coil or pleats worn during the day, for injury is done the scalp, and the hair soon assumes awkward lines from the hours of pressure in the wrong direction. Before retiring brush the hair thoroughly and confine it in one or two very loose pleats. This will insure a free circulation of air through the hair and relax the delicate muscles of the scalp which are more or less irritated by the pressure of numerous pins and the weight of the hair confined at one point. To assist in the training moisten the hair with a little good tonic such as a preparation of quinine and bay rum containing a small per cent. of oil, and brush in the desired direction each time the brushing is done.—Marion Olcott Prentice, in Mirror and Farmer.

Why Always Pretend?

What a good thing it would be if women would be true to themselves and converse intelligently when in the society of gentlemen. There is nothing that honest men desire more than to understand that mysterious race that is so like themselves, and yet so unlike, who share their homes but not their thoughts; who are so shrewd, so practical and so irrational. The poor men yearn to break down the invisible barriers and see into the real life of those they love so well. But the loved ones smile and chatter and say pretty things, things they have borrowed from men and improved in the borrowing, but never a word of the really true, and in many instances vital thoughts that are working in their busy brains, says the Business Woman's Magazine.

So the men flatter and lie because they think women like it, and the women accept it all because they think it is man's nature, and the men think women are dear empty-headed angels, and the women think men are fine intelligent brutes, and the two classes go on loving and despising one another accordingly, and all for the want of a little discernment and truthfulness in conversation.

Troubles of the Widow.

The widows of Kansas occasionally have a heap of trouble with the pension department at Washington. Mary Ann Petty, widow of John Petty, of Neodesha, recently applied for a pension. She found that John had been possessed of four wives before he married her, and that the department wanted to know what had become of them all before it would grant the pension. After considerable effort she was able to show that three of them had died, and that one had been divorced.

Another case was that of a Wichita widow. Many years ago she was divorced from her first husband. Recently she applied for a pension on account of a second husband who had died. The department discovered that she had been divorced from "Edward" Jones instead of "Edmond" Jones, a mistake having been made in the divorce papers. Now she is compelled to institute a suit for divorce against the first husband in order to make the record clear on the claim that she was the legal wife of the man on whose account she expects the pension.—Kansas City Journal.

Latest Note in Embroidery.

The very latest note of embroidery is found in the oblong figures which remind one of framed pictures. A small bouquet of flowers is embroidered in the centre and an oblong frame is worked around it. Again there is a neat little application of flowers, and, around it, is worked a frame of silver with a few pearls inset.

The delicately embroidered head, in medallion shape, is a feature of many an embroidery scheme, and these heads are almost always surrounded by little circles of gold thread. One exquisite white waist was made of white China silk. Along the yoke there were small painted heads and each head was set in a frame of gold.

A White Waist.

A lovely white waist is made of panne crepe de chine, a new, very soft fabric. It has a square yoke of fagotted together bands of the material, the points of the yolks extending over the sleeves, giving a very long-shouldered effect. Below the yoke the waist is simply gathered, and is very likely bloused into a narrow belt. The full bishop sleeves are gathered into cuffs of the fagotted bands. Directly in front, crossing the edge of the yoke, is applied a large rose of Venice lace, the petal edges of which are heavily raised with hand embroidery. Similar lace applications are seen on each shoulder.

A Princesse Gown.

A princesse gown of turquoise blue chiffon had a high girdle and a hip yoke of close shirring, from which the accordion-pleated skirt fell in long lines crossed by several groups of shirred tucks. The waist above the shirred girdle was accordion-pleated and had a close band of shirred tucks around the upper part. Below this fell two full ruffles of the chiffon, forming a bertha. Many strings of pearls and turquoise pendants were worn.

The Correct Thing.

Pleated skirts and Etons of all sorts may be relied upon as correct with perfect safety.

NEW JAPANESE NAVY.

MANNED BY A RIGHT GOOD, STURDY AND HARDY LOT.

Japan Is Fortunate in Possessing for Seafaring Purposes a Population Made Up of Boatmen, Sailors and Fisherfolk.

I would like to lay certain facts before the public with respect to the Japanese navy, which, while it is quite one of the best in existence, appears to me to attract less attention in England than its sister service and than it deserves, writes a correspondent of the London Spectator. Just why Japan should possess such a fine navy is largely due to the fact that, with her long and much broken coast line, one-half of which faces the mightiest of oceans, and the other half the stormy seas divding her from the mainland of Asia, and with innumerable creeks and streams running in all directions, she is singularly fortunate in possessing for her naval purposes a population, a goodly proportion of which is made up of boatmen, sailors and fisherfolk. And a right good, sturdy and hardy lot of men they are, too, with plenty of "go" and dash in them, and just the material for the making of good men-o'-war's men.

Leaving out certain matters of much interest from a historical point of view, it is interesting to know that the Japanese navy has been modeled upon lines strictly British.

Yokosuka may be considered the headquarters of the Japanese navy, but Kure in the Inland sea, is in no way behind in importance, for in addition to superior dock yard accommodation and a fine arsenal, the harbor there is in every way—for naval purposes—one of the finest in existence. Saseho, close to Nagasaki, is magnificently situated for commanding the waters lying between Japan and Corea, and no less so as a base for offensive operations in the Gulf of Pechill and China seas. Malzuru, on the Sea of Japan and Muroran, in Yezo, are yards of secondary importance and are more coaling stations and harbors of refuge for small craft than anything else as yet. Should Japan be drawn into a war with Russia, they might, however, be of inestimable value to her as places of embarkation for troops destined for the mainland of Asia, as well as for the purposes already mentioned.

The education of Japanese naval officers is in the first place carried out at the Naval College at Etajima. The cadets enter when about 17 years of age, and after a three years' course join a training ship for cruising purposes. Returning to Japan, they are then posted to sea-going men-o'-war, and upon being promoted to sub-lieutenant, go through gunnery, torpedo, etc., schools, and later on through a course at the Naval Academy at Tokyo. The work done is good, but though the Japanese are apt pupils and keen soldiers when young, they too often fall off as they grow older, and this, I think, is largely due to certain old-time family customs that still hold sway in Japan. Every Japanese officer marries somewhat young, and no sooner has he prepared a home than members of his family at once begin to make his home theirs also. Household cares induced by such a state of affairs often prove too much for many of them; their early keenness vanishes, and then a general falling off in efficiency soon takes place.

As I explained in my former letter on the Japanese army, the Satsuma element is the all-predominating one in the Japanese navy. This most undoubtedly worked all right so long as Japan had a navy of 100,000 tons and less, but since its excessive augmentation during the last few years men of other clans have been joining in ever-increasing numbers, and bid fair in time to challenge the Satsuma predominance, and the consequence is that the Japanese navy, like the Japanese army, is no longer the happy family affair it was a few years back. The officers then knew each other, got on together, and so everything worked for efficiency. The cadets now joining are certainly not of the same high stamp they were when I first took up my duties at the naval college, Etajima, and this means a good deal—certainly more in Japan than in England.

The Japanese blue jackets and petty officers are very fine men indeed, far better so, on an average, than their comrades of the army. They are better fed, clothed, and looked after, and a very great proportion of them join the service voluntarily. Taking them on the whole, they are a fairly intelligent lot of men, far more so than the Russians, but in physique they cannot in any way compare with them. Recruited entirely from the fisherfolk classes, they are a fairly hardy lot of men, and having been brought up to the sea, soon make themselves quite at home on joining. The stokers and engine room artificers are not as good as they might be, but from all I have been able to gather they are improving.

Of the strength of the ships in the Japanese navy, there is no need to write, for the fullest of information regarding that may be obtained from books and annuals devoted to such matters. The best of the Japanese ships are as good as the best in any navy. The Russians undoubtedly have officers and men superior to any the Japanese can bring forward, but I firmly believe—and I have seen a good deal of both—the average Japanese officer and man are every whit as good as the average Russian. Whether the Japanese is quite so stubborn a fighter as the Rusian time alone will tell, but there can be no doubt that while the Russians have a great contempt for the Japanese, the latter, on the other hand, have some considerable respect for Russian prowess. The naval strength of Russia in Far Eastern waters is now, so far as first class fighting ships are concerned, quite equal to that of the Japanese; but the Japanese possess a huge secondary fleet that might be brought into most effective use after the first line had fought a crippling fight. The Russians are, however, immeasurably inferior to the Japanese in regard to coaling and dockyard facilities and bases of operation. And then the much vaunted Japanese patriotism? That, too, like their true fighting capabilities, has yet to be put to the test, and until it is done no one can say how the Japanese forces and public will behave in the face of reverses, no matter how unimportant they may be.

THE GENTLE OUTLAW.

Gov. Ferguson Is Astonished by the Manners of Bill Doolin.

In yesterday's issue the Journal printed the personal account of Gov. Tom G. Ferguson of his meeting with Bill Doolin, the notorious Oklahoma outlaw. The chief point of interest in the story was that the governor found that the outlaw, in friendly intercourse, was so harmless in appearance so gentle in word and action, and withal such a quiet, obliging and lovable character that he seemed incapable of committing crime, either by violence or treachery. The governor showed Doolin to be of the cast in which Byron's Corsair was moulded, "the mildest mannered man who ever scuttled ship or cut a throat." And so Doolin in fact was, during the days of his supremacy, and so have been most of all of the desperadoes in the frontier life of the west.

There is nothing very surprising in this peculiarity when you come to think about it carefully. As men are not all good, so also are they never all bad. The deepest villain that ever drew breath, drew gun or stretched a halter has had some streaks or fits of goodness and displayed occasionally a pride, a sense of honor or feeling of pity or remorse which contrasted strangely and often grotesquely with the general tenor and course of his bloody and vicious career. At least, it has been so in the west. The James gang and the Younger boys are reputed to have waylaid and robbed the rich and then given up the booty so gotten to relieve the needy and distressed. Quantrell was such a loving and exemplary husband that one of his widows composed this epitaph for inscription upon the tombstone over his last resting place: "One hero less on earth, one angel more in heaven." It is not at all certain, however, that Quantrell, in spite of his domestic virtues, is really in heaven, but it is quite probable that had he lived until the animosities excited by his bloody deeds had subsided, many morbid minded people would have coincided with the flattering opinion entertained by his widow, and would have been glad to do him special honor as a conqueror and a hero.

The ruffians and the totally bad men who took to the road in the pioneer days in the west all died early. It was only your insinuating, plausible rogue who lasted for any considerable time. The drunken, boasting, bullying, noisy fellows do not make successful desperadoes.—Kansas City Journal.

It is stated in the last part of the Animal World (Hutchinson) that one which used to beg for a hospital in Ireland collected in five years nearly $15,000. He had a special banking account, which was submitted periodically to a chartered accountant.

SPORT OF THE AUTOMANIAC

Necessity For Laws Governing the Speed of the Automobiles.

The Massachusetts Legislature of this year, after careful deliberation, passed a bill to regulate the use of automobiles and motor cycles. It provides for the registering of machines and the licensing of their operators; it limited, their speed to fifteen miles an hour on country roads, and to ten miles an hour in cities or the thickly settled parts of towns. The law was to go into effect on the 1st of September, and now before it has really had a chance to be tried and its workings observed the automobilists, it is understood, are organizing to secure its repeal at the meeting of the next Legislature. The registration of the machines and the numbering of them plainly, together with the licensing of their operators for the purpose of identification, appear to be particularly obnoxious to those affected by these measures.

This is thoroughly characteristic of the automaniac who wishes to indulge in his favorite sport of rushing through the crowded streets and over country roads at railroad speed without the slightest regard for the rights of other users of public highways and then to evade any responsibility for the accidents he may cause by avoiding recognition. Such individuals can be restrained only by the most stringent measures. The Massachusetts law, as it now stands, is none too strict and is far less so than the law which it has been found necessary to enact in England and on the continent of Europe. Instead of trying to have this law repealed, the automobilists would do well to keep quiet lest a worse thing happen to them.

This organized effort to have the speed limit both in town and country increased and to do away with the means of identifying those who violate the laws in this respect has moved certain gentlemen of prominence in Boston to issue a circular letter calling attention to the matter. The letter asks for cooperation in bringing this matter to the attention of candidates for election to the Legislature, so as to secure a statement from them of their attitude in regard to it. The law was passed after a careful canvass and deserves a fair trial for a year or more, so that its effects may be observed. Then, if it is found to work any real hardship to automobilists, modifications can be considered. Experience abroad has shown how utterly inconsiderate of the rights of others many automobilists are and that severe punishment is the only thing that will make such listen to reason. The Massachusetts law is commendable as far as it goes, and could be imitated with advantage in other States, and the people may be depended upon, as soon as their attention is aroused, to second the efforts of those moving in opposition to the effort to secure its repeal.—Providence Journal.

Umbrellas Now Made to Order.

In these progressive days one is not obliged to buy umbrellas "ready made" unless one choose. It is quite the fashion to go to a manufacturer and order an umbrella made up to suit the individual taste.

The handles and tips are in great variety—in gold, silver, pearl, tortoise shell and gun metal. Some are plain, while others are handsomely mounted and decorated. When the umbrella wears out the handle and tips, if of the best material, will be as good as new. The frame can then be turned over to an umbrella maker to re-cover.

Among the novelties in Christmas gifts in the leading dry goods houses were handles and tips, which came beautifully mounted in a box.

Long-Range Prayer.

The Swiss mountaineers have a custom of calling through speaking trumpets at dusk each evening: "Praise the Lord God!" This call may be started by one herdsman, and is answered by others from neighboring peaks, the sound being much prolonged as it reverberates from one mountain to another.

After a short interval, supposedly devoted to prayer, a herdsman calls in the same manner, "Good night!" this, too, being repeated by his fellows. Then they all retire to their huts.

Horsehair for Bows.

There is a vast amount of horsehair annually used in the United States for making and repairing violin, violoncello and bass viol bows. All of the hair comes from Germany and Russia, in which countries the tails of horses are generally allowed to grow much longer than here. The foreign hair is also coarser in texture and tougher than that which grows on the American horse, and these qualities make the imported article more valuable than the domestic product is for the purpose.

There are only two kinds of horse hair suitable for making bows and they are of white and black variety. The former is used for violin bows and the latter, which is heavier and stronger, is the best material for making bows for cello and bass viols, because it bites the larger strings better. The imported hair is put up in hanks of thirty-six inches long, which is five or six inches longer than the standard violin bow. A hank is sufficient for one violin bow, while two hanks are required to hair a cello or bass viol bow. There are about one and one-half ounces of hair in a hank which is worth from 20 to 30 cents according to the quality of the hair.—Philadelphia Record.

The Sturdy Camel.

A camel has twice the carrying power of an ox. With an ordinary load of 400 pounds he can travel twelve or fourteen days without water, going forty miles a day. Camels are fit to work at five years old, but their strength begins to decline at twenty-five, although they usually live to forty. The Tartars have herds of these animals, often 1,000, belonging to one family. They were numerous in antiquity, for the patriarch Job had 3,000. The Timbuktu or Meharri breed is remarkable for speed and used only for couriers, going 800 miles in eight days with a meal of dates or grain at nightfall.

SERMON FOR SUNDAY

INTERESTING DISCOURSE BY THE REV. DR. H. C. SWENTZEL.

Text: The Divine Carpenter—Christ Revenged to the Grand Army of Self-Respecting Workingmen—His Life Condemns the Sinfulness of Idleness.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—An interesting and practical sermon was preached Sunday morning by Rev. Dr. Henry C. Swentzel, rector of St. Luke's Church, Clinton avenue, near Fulton street. The subject was "The Divine Carpenter," and the text St. Mark vi:3: "Is not this the carpenter?" Dr. Swentzel said:

The glorious Son of Man was a mechanic. It is well worth while to consider those thirteen years which He spent at Nazareth concerning which we would dearly love to know so much, but of which it is possible to learn so little. Whether He were rich or poor, whether He devoted Himself exclusively to the exercises of religion or was occupied with other concerns as well; whether He were, so to say, a man among men, or lived a strange weird life as a recluse in the wilderness—these are queries upon which we may reflect with profit.

During the period which began when the Christ Child went down from among the doctors in the temple to the Galilean home to prepare for His public life there is only one bit of definite information concerning Him, and that is furnished almost accidentally in the text.

The people who had known Him as a child were astonished when they heard His sayings and saw His mighty works. The record which He made among them in bygone years was worthy of Him and ought to have prepared them to expect large things of Him sooner or later, but they could not forget that He had lived among them as a common artisan. When He returns to them with all the fame He had won and was about to spend a brief season with them in order that His former friends and neighbors might not be neglected in His ministry, they recall His antecedents, and they ask with mingled wonder and scorn, "Is not this the carpenter?"

The question establishes the fact that Jesus had been known as a village carpenter. From the days of youth until He set out to do the stupendous work for which He was sent, He accepted the trade of His reputed father and was occupied largely with its ordinary employment. He belonged to the "working classes." A descendant of the royal David He must surely was, and yet He thought not of the throne of His renowned ancestor. He was indeed a king, but not after the worldly fashion, for He came to be King of souls, to rule the heart and conscience of man. He seems to have had no ambition to attain unto a lofty station, and the paraphernalia of earthly greatness had no charms for Him. His ministerial purpose was to save the world, both the classes and the masses, and He would, therefore, identify Himself personally and actively with the multitudes and not only with a privileged few. He could teach princely virtues without being a prince, and He would benefit the hosts of mankind by allying Himself with the conditions and experiences of the many. He understood full well that no political contrivances could bring the kingdom of God to this earth, and He considered that the needs of the millions could be served in no other way than by the moral and spiritual democracy which it was His mission to establish.

Our Lord was a workingman. It must not, therefore, be supposed that He held a brief or thundered a bull of excommunication against riches. He had something to say against mammon worship, and He warned against the temptations of opulence, but He never branded wealth as essentially evil. He taught emphatically that the responsibility of people is in exact proportion to what they have, and that, inasmuch as money entails numerous obligations, they who have it can be saved only through the most devoted regard for their duties. Some of His disciples were well-to-do, and both the midnight inquirer and the good man of Arimathea were dear to Him. The common people heard Him gladly, but others were not excluded from His blessing simply because they had possessions. The gifts of the Magi at the beginning of His career and the rich man's tomb wherein His mangled corpse reposed at the last, indicate that His mission included both the many and the few. He advocated none of the insane social or political heresies which some believe in now, but, taking full account of human inequalities, He taught the world to do its best, to live manfully amid the strains and stress of life, to use the present situation with all its ills for the glory of God and the well being of the human family. No Croesus could have been the Son of Man. The real Son of Man must be typical and representative in every noble way. He must be the brother of the toiling millions who earn their bread in the sweat of their face, and who deal every day with the urgent problem of livelihood.

And yet Jesus did not accept the state of squalid poverty. He was no saint. The purpose of infinite love which brought Him hither could not prompt Him to accept the state of such a forlorn character. It would be impossible for any individual who was poor through his own guilt to be other than an incongruous and repulsive figure, or to stand as the model of perfect manhood. Pauperism as an evil in every sense; and while society is bound to help it, it is too degrading and polluting to merit encouragement, and an enlightened state will wisely make laws by which, if possible, to crush it. Guilty poverty should be rebuked and shamed. The Son of Man could choose it not, for then He would have disgraced Himself and presented an inferior ideal for His followers. Never by allowing Himself to be a burden to others or by becoming an object of public charity could He have spoken to men and elevated their standards and raised the tone of their thought. Neither a high social degree nor a discreditable beggary would have been in harmony with Himself or the interests which He had in view; for in either case He would not have been in a position from which He could touch the minds and hearts and lives of the nations. The Son of Man must be where He can speak to all with equal advantage, where He can reach their affections and wield His blessed power over the sphere of their practical questions and activities. He could not have been one who was arrayed in purple and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day, nor could He have adopted the position of a squalid and self-inflicted poverty. He would not be either rich or sinfully poor, but an honest, industrious, royal workingman.

"Is not this the carpenter?" In this obvious and half reproachful question of His acquaintances is a happy revelation of the ideal of the Son of Man for all the world. It was in Joseph's shop that He spent at least three years of His manhood. It was at the bench and with the tools of a mechanic that He chose to live in order that His example might speak lessons of truth and inspiration to all human souls. The Scriptures lay stress upon His humble circumstances, but they do not place Him on a par with the thriftless sluggard who deserves to feel the pinch of want. No effort of ours can fathom the depths of His humiliation who, being the Son of God, became the Son of Mary and a carpenter; who, though He was rich yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich, but He knew no indigence. We see this divine Being in Nazareth on a self-supporting basis, making a living by mending plows and yokes, repairing houses and doing all the jobs which fall to a village carpenter; we see Him working with His hands for bread and learning by day that way of labor which must be trodden by all bread-winners. Horsehair for Bows.

There is a vast amount of horsehair annually used in the United States for making and repairing violin, violoncello and bass viol bows. All of the hair comes from Germany and Russia, in which countries the tails of horses are generally allowed to grow much longer than here. The foreign hair is also coarser in texture and tougher than that which grows on the American horse, and these qualities make the imported article more valuable than the domestic product is for the purpose.

There are only two kinds of horse hair suitable for making bows and they are of white and black varieties. The former is used for violin bows, and the latter, which is heavier and stronger, is the best material for making bows for cello and bass viols, because it bites the larger strings better. The imported hair is put up in hanks of thirty-six inches long, which is five or six inches longer than the standard violin bow. A hank is sufficient for one violin bow, while two hanks are required to hair a cello or bass viol bow. There are about one and one-half ounces of hair in a hank, which is worth from 20 to 30 cents, according to the quality of the hair.—Philadelphia Record.

The Sturdy Camel.

A camel has twice the carrying power of an ox. With an ordinary load of 400 pounds he can travel twelve or fourteen days without water, going forty miles a day. Camels are said to work at five years old, but their strength begins to decline at twenty-five, although they usually live to forty. The Tartars have herds of these animals, often 1,000, belonging to one family. They were numerous in antiquity, for the patriarch Job had 3,000. The Timbuktu or Meharri breed is remarkable for speed and used only for couriers, going 800 miles in eight days with a meal of dates or grain at nightfall.

Gives to Salzer's Oats its heartiest endorsement. Salzer's New National Oats yielded in 1903 from 150 to 300 bu. per acre in 30 different States, and you, Mr. Farmer, can beat this in 1904, if you will. Salzer's Teosinte, pedigree seeds, bred up through careful selection to big yields.

	Per Acre.
Salzer's Beardless Barley yielded	121 bu.
Salzer's Home Builder Corn	300 bu.
Seltz and Macaroni Wheat	80 bu.
Salzer's Victoria Rape	60,000 lbs.
Salzer's Teosinte, the fodder wonder	160,000 lbs.
Salzer's Billion Dollar Grass	50,000 lbs.
Salzer's Pedigree Potatoes	1,000 bu.

Now such yields pay and you can have them, Mr. Farmer, in 1904.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. SERMON FOR SUNDAY

INTERESTING DISCOURSE BY THE REV. DR. H. C. SWENTZEL.

Text: The Divine Carpenter—Christ Belonged to the Grand Army of Self-Respecting Workingmen—His Life Condemns the Sinfulness of Idleness.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—An interesting and helpful sermon was preached Sunday morning by Rev. Dr. Henry C. Swentzel, rector of St. Luke's Church, Clinton avenue, near Fulton street. The subject was "The Divine Carpenter," and the text St. Mark vi:3: "Is not this the carpenter?" Dr. Swentzel said:

The glorious Son of Man was a mechanic. It is well worth while to consider those thirteen years which He spent at Nazareth, concerning which we would dearly love to know so much, but of which it is possible to learn so little. Whether He were rich or poor, whether He devoted Himself exclusively to the exercises of religion or was occupied with other concerns as well; whether He were, so to say, a man among men, or lived a strange weird life as a recluse in the wilderness—these are queries upon which we may reflect with profit.

During the period which began when the Christ Child went down from among the doctors in the temple to the Galilean home to prepare for His public life there is only a bit of definite information concerning them, and that is furnished almost accidentally in the text.

The people who had known Him all long were astonished when they heard the sayings and saw His mighty works. The record which He made among them in the gone years was worthy of Him and might to have prepared them to expect large things of Him sooner or later, but they could not forget that He had lived among them as a common artisan. When He returns to them with all the fame He had won and was about to spend a brief season with them in order that His former friends and neighbors might not be neglected in His ministry, they recall His antecedents, and they ask with mingled wonder and scorn, "Is not this the carpenter?" The question establishes the fact that Jesus had been known as a village carpenter. From the days of youth until He set out to do the stupendous work for which He was sent, He accepted the trade of His reputed father and was occupied largely with its ordinary employment. He belonged to the "working classes." A descendant of the royal David He most surely was, and yet He thought not of the throne of His renowned ancestor. He was indeed a king, but not after the world's fashion, for He came to be King of men, to rule the heart and conscience of mankind. He seems to have had no ambition to attain unto a lofty station, and the paraphernalia of earthly greatness had no charms for Him. His masterful purpose was to save the world, both the classes and the masses, and He would, therefore, identify Himself personally and actively with the multitudes and not only with a privileged few. He could teach princely virtues without being a prince, and He would benefit the hosts of mankind by allying Himself with the conditions and experiences of the many. He understood full well that no political contrivances could bring the kingdom of God to this earth, and He considered that the needs of the millions could be served in no other way than by the moral and spiritual democracy which it was His mission to establish.

Our Lord was a workingman. It must not, therefore, be supposed that He held a brief or thundered a bull of excommunication against riches. He had something to say against mammon worship, and He warned against the temptations of opulence, but He never branded wealth as essentially evil. He taught emphatically that the responsibility of people is in exact proportion to what they have, and that, inasmuch as money entails numerous obligations, they who have it can be saved only through the most devoted regard for their duties. Some of His disciples were well-to-do, and both the midnight inquirer and the good man of Arimathea were dear to Him. The common people heard Him gladly, but others were not excluded from His blessing simply because they had possessions. The gifts of the Magi at the beginning of His career and the rich man's tomb wherein His mangled corpse reposed at the last, indicate that His mission included both the many and the few. He advocated none of the insane social or political heresies which some believe in now, but, taking full account of human inequalities, He taught the world to do its best, to live manfully amid the strains and stress of life, to use the present situation with all its ills for the glory of God and the well-being of the human family. No Croesus could have been the Son of Man. The real Son of Man must be typical and representative in every noble way. He must be the brother of the toiling millions who earn their bread in the sweat of their face, and who deal every day with the urgent problem of livelihood.

And yet Jesus did not accept the state of squalid poverty. He was no pauper. The purpose of infinite love which brought Him hither could not prompt Him to accept the state of such a forlorn character. It would be impossible for any individual who was poor through his own guilt to be other than an incongruous and repulsive figure, or to stand as the model of perfect manhood. Pauperism is an evil in every sense; and while society is bound to help it, it is too degrading and polluting to merit encouragement, and an enlightened state will wisely make laws by which, if possible, to crush it. Guilty poverty should be rebuked and shamed. The Son of Man could choose it not, for then He would have disgraced Himself and presented an inferior ideal for His followers. Never by allowing Himself to be a burden to others or by becoming an object of public charity could He have spoken to men and elevated their standards and raised the tone of their thought. Neither a high social degree nor a discreditable beggary would have been in harmony with Himself or the interests which He had in view; for in either case He would not have been in a position from which He could touch the minds and hearts and lives of the nations. The Son of Man must be where He can speak to all with equal advantage, where He can reach their affections and wield His blessed power over the sphere of their practical questions and activities. He could not have been one who was arrayed in purple and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day, neither could He have adopted the portion of a squalid and self-inflicted poverty. He would not be either rich or sinfully poor, but an honest, industrious, royal workingman.

"Is not this the carpenter?" In this envious and half reproachful question of His acquaintances is a happy revelation of the ideal of the Son of Man for all the world. It was in Joseph's shop that He spent all save three years of His manhood. It was at the bench and with the tools of a mechanic that He chose to live in order that His example might speak lessons of truth and inspiration to all human souls. The Scriptures lay stress upon His humble circumstances, but they do not place Him on a par with the thriftless sluggard who deserves to feel the pinch of want. No effort of ours can fathom the depths of His humiliation who, being the Son of God, became the Son of Mary and a carpenter; who, though He was rich yet for our sakes He became poor, that we through His poverty might be rich, but He knew no indigence. We see this divine Being in Nazareth on a self-supporting basis, making a living by mending plows and yokes, repairing houses and doing all the jobs which fall to a village carpenter; we see Him working with His hands for bread and learning by day that way of labor which must be trodden by all bread-winners. He belonged to the grand army of self-respecting workingmen. Not from a palace nor yet from a hovel, but from the workshop of an artisan does Jesus of Nazareth make common cause with all the people of the passing generations.

How surely our Lord condemns the sinfulness of indolence, and how sublimely does His example urge the employment of our energies. He might have maintained Himself without work, but to have done so would have been to set the seal of His sanction upon the very spirit that prompts the average individual to get through this world with as little effort as possible—the spirit that is plainly the spirit of the devil, and that is the prolific cause of crime and woe. He who fed the crowds from a few loaves and fishes might have wrought a daily miracle for Himself, but never once was His omnipotence exerted in His own behalf. He accepted the very situation which confronts us. Engaged with the occupations of His trade during so many years, He exalts industry into a divine virtue and brands sloth as a deadly sin. He has no favor for an ambition that longs for absolute ease. It may not be necessary for any one to be occupied with the burdens of business, but we are all bound to keep in personal touch with the life of humanity. There are other spheres of usefulness than the field and the shop, the office or the counting room. The church asks for thousands who are willing to follow the example of splendid heroes who have withdrawn from the haunts of trade and from the hope of gain in order to devote themselves exclusively to the ministry of Christian laymen. Everywhere are charities calling loudly for encouragement and service. Politics presents a wide range for the activities of patriotism and of the very highest religion. There is something for everybody to do, and no one is justified in living for himself in a sequestered and attractive nook away from the demands that sound from every quarter. Each individual should have some occupation, a place in the world's vast factories, a work of some sort which shall tell for the happiness of others.

The Lord has a strong word for labor. He is the fellow and the champion of all toilers. He has a meaning for all those who work with their brain or with their hands, for all such are workingmen. He has forever consecrated the everydayness of life. He adopts the workaday world. "The Light of Asia," which states beautifully certain features of the Buddhist religion, represents the incarnate Buddha as a wandering beggar, asking food. Jesus Christ was no beggar. The mendicant, any more than the pauper, receives not the approval of His own practice, by which He sanctified labor until the end of the world. The Galilean Carpenter was no less the incarnate Son of God during the years which He spent at Nazareth than He was on the mountain of the transfiguration or on the first Easter Day. There are many reasons why work is honorable, but it receives its crowning glory from the experience of the divine Christ during the long period of which we know nothing save that He was a mechanic. He has endured all occupations with dignity that nothing short of our own disloyalty can possibly take away. It matters not what one's daily toils are, they are worthy of fidelity and energy, and they are as much a part of God's service as the saying of prayers and the receiving of religious rites. The emperor and his humblest subject, the prime minister and the street sweeper, the millionaire and his valet, all are included in the spirit of industry and devotion which Jesus manifested at the bench which stood in a shop or, perhaps, at times under a huge tree at Nazareth. He has hallowed all vocations by the consecration of His personal industry, and they should be interpreted and accepted as a sacred part of the life which now is.

The Nazareth Carpenter teaches that worldly place of itself is nothing worth. A man may be a man wherever he is, and labor is honorable whatever it may be. Station or the lack of it does not make the man or his life. The people of lowly degree may likewise learn precious lessons of the Galilean artisan. They become discouraged because they fancy themselves to be of no account, and they too often cherish an unhappy contempt for their daily toils. They despise the factory or the office as necessary evils. Jesus has a lesson for them which He pronounces from the Nazareth shop. Long years He spent in obscurity. No murmurs escape Him, no signs of impatience, no evidences of a restless longing to be otherwise, no vulgar and godless disposition to try to improve upon the plans of divine providence. Quietly day after day He was concerned with the unimpressive and uninteresting matters of His business, and His only aim was to be true to the state where He was destined to live until the time came for beginning the public ministry. Wherever the Heavenly Father has placed us, we, the sons of men, can be the sons of God. The real things of life are not earthly and temporal, and the true estimate of ourselves is not the place—be it lofty or lowly—which we hold among men. The divine Carpenter is a comfort and an inspiration to all.

Amid the employment of His trade did Jesus prepare Himself for His public life. There He was made ready, at least in part, to exercise all those transcendently great qualities of mind and heart which marked His ministry. For three years He gave Himself up to His work as the world's Redeemer, but for fifteen years and more, as was probably the case, He was only a carpenter. Surely He did not spend all His time and energy upon His daily toils. Often did He devote Himself to godly exercises of prayer and contemplation, without which no one can develop the traits of highest character. But He was no recluse. He settled the truth once for all that the place for strong-minded, stout-hearted folk to serve God is in the world; the arena for doing the Father's will is right here, where we have abundant opportunities for the culture of holy graces and the practice of holy living. We need the benefits of occasional solitude, but we are bound to think so seriously of life and of God's cause as to give no place to the mawkish sentimentalism which adores perpetual seclusion and calls it the noblest type of religion. The divine Carpenter hesitated not to spend the years upon which His future work was founded amid the activities incident to the daily interests of mankind. He was a bread-winner, a wage-earner.

Work is God's ordinance. If it was a curse in the beginning, it is a blessing now. It is one of the best tonics. It is scarcely less than a sacrament. It may be debased, even as may the sacrament of the altar in which one may eat and drink damnation to his soul, but it is something of a sacrament which is intended, if used aright, to strengthen and uplift, and to further the divine plans. It is a sacred duty. It is the privilege and the prerogative of taking part in the vast activities of humanity. It is an invitation to the market place to dispense comforts, to have a share in the world's progress and the making of history. It proclaims independence, it disciplines character, it schools the affections. We are only holy ground and are doing holy things when we go with Christ's spirit to the daily round and the common task. The founder of Christianity, the incarnate Son of God, the universal Man, was a village carpenter.

Holiness and Humility.

The highest lesson a believer has to learn is humility. O, that every Christian who seeks to advance in holiness may remember this well! There may be intense consecration, and fervent zeal, and heavenly experience, and yet, if it is not prevented by dealings of the Lord, there may be an unconscious self-exaltation with it all.

Let us learn the lesson—the highest holiness is the deepest humility, and let us remember that it comes not of itself, but only as it is made a matter of special dealing on the part of our faithful Lord and His faithful servant.—Andrew Murray.

THE LOST CHILD.

It was far to go for the little fellow,
And I think it was dark out there,
Away from the sunshine, warm and mellow,
That sweetened his earthly air.

It was far to go, it was dark, I know,
And it broke my heart that it should be so.

The distance between a joy and joy,
Or between a star and a star,
Some measure like this we may employ,
Nor measure at last how far.

And they were not fleet, they were little feet
That stumbled beside me in the street.

Oh little fellow, dear little fellow,
Once, where the strange paths crossed
In magical woods of sunlit yellow,
You, lagging behind, were lost—

Just a step aside; but I knew that wide
And terrified look, the day you died!

When it is day I can dissemble
And cover from sight my care,
But when it is dark, in tears I tremble—
"What if he be lost out there?"

In my troubled sleep, I cower, I weep
I am little and lost, and the dark is deep.

When the ghost moon steals down the mountain hollow
To glide through my window bars,
I wake and pray to be dead, to follow
His stumbles between the stars.

Poor Old Parson Bradley.

By John B. Sheridan.

"So they are going to investigate the character of old Parson Bradley," said Mrs. Hearall to Mrs. Steadfast, as they journeyed toward the little church on the hill.

"Yes, so I am informed; but really I do not believe that our venerable pastor is guilty of the charges preferred against him."

"Well, I do," replied Mrs. Hearall, "for I have long suspected that he was an arrant knave and a rank hypocrite."

"But why you should think so is beyond my comprehension. The dear old man has gone in and out before us for thirty long years, and until that mysterious meeting in Green's pasture, his character has been without a blemish."

"Oh, yes, without a blemish, so far as we know. But you and I know that he had no business to be prowling around in the woods with a strange woman, and his wife sick at home."

"It does look strange," said Mrs. Steadfast; "still I shall believe him innocent until he is proved guilty."

"And I," retorted Mrs. Hearall, "shall believe him guilty until he is proved innocent."

The arrival at the church terminated the conversation, and the two ladies took their places in the crowded auditorium of the little church, where they had often listened to the words of wisdom that fell from the lips of him who was now about to be tried for gross immorality, as set forth in the charges and specifications of old Hezekiah Squinteye.

"My friends," said Parson Bradley, as he ascended the rostrum, "we are now ready to proceed with the business for which this meeting has been convened. Deacon Lovewell will now proceed with the prosecution."

"Brothers and sisters," said Deacon Lovewell, "a painful duty has called us together this evening; a duty which requires more than ordinary forbearance and fortitude in this age of vice and crime. And as one who has the welfare of this church at heart, I feel it to be a duty incumbent upon me to lay before you some rumors respecting the character of our venerable pastor. And in order to facilitate matters, I now call upon Brother Hezekiah Squinteye to give evidence in the case now pending against the accused."

"Brothers, sisters and friends," said Brother Squinteye, "a few weeks ago, while traveling over Green's pasture in search of a stray cow, I heard voices issuing from a thicket close by, and in looking in the direction whence the sound emanated, I saw Brother Bradley deeply engaged in conversation with a young and beautiful woman, whose countenance I did not recognize. Fearing that something was wrong, I lay in ambush until Brother Bradley took his departure, which he did in a few minutes thereafter. Now, while I would not willingly charge our pastor with conduct unbecoming a minister, I must confess that I was deeply grieved to see him imprint a kiss upon the cheek of the fair one ere he returned to the parsonage."

"Did he return alone?" asked Lovewell.

"Yes, sir."

"And what direction did the woman take?"

"I do not know, as I immediately started in pursuit of the missing cow."

"Have you mentioned this affair to any person except myself, since the occurrence took place?"

"Yes, I think I have mentioned it to Mrs. Nevertattle, Mrs. Runwell and Mrs. Speakfast."

"Then you must have believed that our pastor had been guilty of some crime, or else you would not give publicity to the matter?"

"I would have it otherwise; but, to tell the truth, I have felt ever since that memorable afternoon that our pastor is not what he ought to be."

"Brother Bradley will now take the stand, and give us his statement in regard to the matter under consideration," said Deacon Lovewell.

"My friends," said the pastor, "thirty years ago the Master called me to labor among you, since which time I have tried hard to do my duty as a Christian minister. I have married nearly all of you who are now sitting in judgment upon me; I have followed your loved ones to the cold and silent grave; I have wept with those who wept, and rejoiced with those who rejoiced; and in return you have solaced myself and my aged companion in the hour of bereavement and sorrow. Is it any wonder, then, that as I stand here before you this evening my heart goes out toward you in love and gratitude. But, my friends, when I think that now in my old age I should be suspected of immorality, I feel that my life's work is nearly done. And if those who are anxious to get rid of me will have a little patience, they need not get up another scandal to accomplish their nefarious designs. And now let me explain the mystery in Green's pasture, so that you may be enabled to judge me impartially.

"Ten weeks ago, when my wife was convalescent, after a long and tedious sickness, she expressed a wish for some strawberries; but as I was too poor to buy them, my daughter Hattie went out to gather some in the pasture, and after a few minutes I rejoined her, and when I had enough to make a mess I returned to the parsonage, while Hattie remained to gather more. Brother Squinteye speaks truly when he said that I kissed the fair one, for when I thought of the loved ones slumbering on the hillside, and of her who alone remained to comfort me in my declining years, a father's love took possession of my heart, and I kissed my child and breathed a prayer for her temporal and spiritual welfare while traveling through this vale of tears. Man may question my right to do this, but the great Searcher of hearts will not condemn the act. My friends, I am done. Words fail to convey the emotions of a troubled soul. My heart is crush——"

The sentence was not finished. Ere the audience reached the platform, the spirit of poor old Parson Bradley had taken its flight from earth to heaven; and amid the tears and the lamentations of his parishioners, his corpse was carried back to the parsonage, and the little church on the hill was without a pastor.—New York Weekly.

WORDS AND CRIME.

Some Interesting Speculations as to the Origin of "Yegg."

"Where did Billy Pinkerton and the other men engaged in the detective business stumble upon the word 'yegg,' which is applied to a certain class of mendicants?" asked a man who takes much interest in the study of words. "I have not yet been able to find any trace of the word in any of the etymologies at my command, and hence have been at a loss to under stand where they found the word 'yegg.' They refer to a class of mendicants as 'yeggs' or 'yeggmen,' and I noticed a few weeks ago that the police of Boston had made a raid on this objectionable class, and were making an effort to rid the city of them. The 'yegg' is a rather curious member, and is looked upon as one of the most dangeroue men engaged in a shady calling. He is a desperate sort of offender, and while his crimes are not of the larger and more aggravated sort, he is a hard proposition to deal with. The 'yegg' is the fellow who will slip around the back way in the garb of beggar who will ask you for food, and who will talk to you for a while, in fact, as long as you will stand for it, and who will, in the meantime, carefully survey the premises, examine the doors and windows visually, find out just where everything is located, and leave the place with the mental map, as it were, of the whole situation. If he thinks it worth while he may come back and see what he can pick up in the wee sma' hours of the night. If the prospects are not good, if there isn't a prosperous look about the place, the chances are that he will not honor you with a call.

"But I was speaking more particularly about the word 'yegg' and how the detectives and police of the country happened to pick it up. As I said before, I have been unable to find any sort of trace of the word in the dictionaries and etymologies at my command. There is nothing to even suggest it in anything I have been able to find. Where did they get the word 'yegg'? I suppose they have simply picked it up, like many other words now current have been picked up. The offending class of the country have added vastly to the current vocabulary. Many of the words originating with them have become of common use, many others are understood only by the police and crooks, while still others are understandable only to the men who bring them into existence, the esoterics of the criminal cult who invent words to meet the secret requirements of their calling. It may be that 'yegg' was brought into existence just in this way. At any rate, the word is here, and it is pretty generally understood over the country by men who have been in touch with police departments in the larger cities.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

By Way of Chicago.

A pupil of one of the public schools in Chicago sends this communication:

Dear Sir—In our school this morning an amusing dialogue took place.

A primary teacher of Chicago, wishing to impress upon her pupils the necessity of greater quiet, said:

"I am a great deal larger than any of you, yet I don't make any noise when I walk around the room."

"Perhaps," remarked little 7-year-old Kenneth, "you don't wear shoes."

"Oh, yes I do," quickly replied the teacher; "just look. Did you ever see any larger than mine?"

Kenneth surveyed them carefully.

"Yes," he replied slowly, "Once—in a show."

THE BUCCANEERS IN PANAMA

MASONRY RELICS OF DRAKE AND MORGAN

The Trip From Panama to Porto Bello---Columbus' Search For a Strait Connecting the Two Oceans --- The Old Highway Across the Isthmus.

PANAMA.—There are moments when one can seem to comprehend, dimly, the interest of the Isthmus. Some carbolized vaseline on the red-bug bites, some Amer Picon for the fever, a little quinine for malaria, and a brisk pony ride down the Savannah road, or a cayuco trip up the Chagres, or a tossing, heart-shaking press through uneasy seas in a gasoline launch to Porto Bello—that fascinating "Mouth of the Treasure of the World," as Sir Henry Morgan called it—little adventures like these set one's fancy going. The Isthmus is then not merely a small republic, by Jonah's gourd, as a horse-breeder would say, out of a bribe-bought revolution; it is the scene of acts that minds have delectably dwelt upon, when young, during twenty generations. Here are the jungles, here are the seas, and here are the masonry settlements which Balboa cut through, the plate-fleets sailed, that Pizarro built, and that Drake and Morgan sacked. These were the seas in which Sir Francis Drake in two small pinnaces had ravaged plate-fleets of Spain when "convoyed by three armed galleons."

Bells rang when we reached Porto Bello; small dugout cayucos put out from shore. When we entered one, all standing, like pictures of Columbus discovering America, the gunwales sank below water amidships. It took more than mere water and mere wetness to affect us now. Drawn up on the shore were most of the villagers, and the American Consul, Rodriguez, who, I think, never has seen North America, like many another American Consul down by the equator. But he trades with New York, sends ivory nuts to be made into buttons, etc., and has the sense of hospitality highly developed. I wanted to go first to the Royal Treasure House, which was the Mecca (is it an anachronism to use the phrase?) of the brethren of the coast. Here it was—solid masonry. Tropical vines, which need only sun, rain and air to grow, had branched from its mortar, had separated the careful laying and cementing. The roof was off; there were openings which showed where the doors had been.

"Look at those arches," said the contractor, who had come along; "they have no keystones!" Of course they hadn't; ancient peoples had advanced ways of accomplishing ends. Consider the Pyramids; consider San Lorenzo fort, up the Chagres River, in Panama. No one knows how they did it without steam derricks bigger than we are acquainted with. It's a fine old pile, this skeleton of a treasure house. "I mean to restore it as a custom house," remarked the contractor, pulling a red-blossoming plant from a crevice. "All I'll have to do is to supply doors and a roof."

We debouched upon a cobblestone street, a long street, connecting with jungle at both ends, with whitewashed half-stucco, half-wood, and occasionally coral-stone houses along it. Wild wig-waggings attracted us to the American Consul's —Sr. Rodriguez's home, spacious, pretty (for those parts), showing wealth in its decoration—interesting chromos from an early American period, grasses in vases, mirrors with the name of his dead wife emblazoned at the bottom. There is no irony in this description—I am simply speaking literally; it should be read likewise. Sr. Rodriguez gave us more than any stretch of the meaning of hospitality in America, north or south, west or east, comprises; and he gave it out of his heart; he was what you honestly look for when a Spanish-blooded person says, in conventional fashion, "My house is yours." He showed us his family Bible, with the names and dates of his offspring written down. "Thirty-two children," he said, proudly, and we read their names. Against some of them was the record. "Died——." The mother, too, was dead.

Under guidance of the principal citizens we went to the two old churches —old beyond anything known of in Christian America. One was in ruins; one is still worshiped in. The latter, indeed, was the church which rang its bells when it saw men with American raincoats coming ashore, thinking they were priests in cassocks. The chief citizens of the place for 400 years were buried under the flags of the floor. "I knew it," said I, thinking of Mayor De Leon's calmness during our voyage; "here are De Leons to beat the band." They ranged, under our feet, back to 1600, twenty years before the Mayflower at Plymouth, New England.

Along here Columbus passed looking for "a strait connecting the Atlantic with another great ocean." Indians at Honduras had told him of one, or so he understood them. What they really apprised him of was that only a narrow neck of land here separated the two oceans; but his mind was fixed upon navigation, and he searched for a water passage, and stopped a few miles beyond Porto Bello at Nombre de Dios, from which point, some twelve years later, young Vasco Nunez del Balboa, noble but poor, energetic, engaging, and a wonder with the sword, made a march inland to that "peak in Darien" from which he discovered the Pacific Ocean, and fell down and prayed in emotion. Of supreme moments in the civilization of the world few are greater than this. Francisco Pizarro was with Balboa on this march, according to old Peter Martyr; and 150 men with arquebuses, crossbows, swords, pikes and bloodhounds (the latter to track Indians). Balboa's own hound, which he called Leonica, kept always at his heels, even to the lone peak in Darien, and was allowed rations like any soldier, and "an equal share of the booty," which profited his master much.

Twelve days it took those mail-clad warriors, preceded by maroons cutting the way, to reach the peak. Some died, "from the most pestilential climate in the world;" and there were skirmishes with the Indians, the same tribes who are now supposed to be allies of the United States, in spite of the fact that one great chief, Inanaquina, has gone to Cathagena to be entertained by Colombian officers. On September 25, 1513, Balboa saw the sea beyond, the sea that really reached to the East of Marco Polo, and he sent Pizarro ahead with scouts, following himself, wading waist deep into the surf to draw his sword and take possession for Castile and Leon. Very near the same spot at Acla, a settlement he founded. Balboa was put to death for treason. His treason was that long before he had started he had usurped the governor's place, and Spain did not hear of his marvelous discoveries till a new governor with orders to execute Balboa had been sent to the Isthmus and had fulfilled the mission. Pizarro went on down the Pacific to the conquest of Peru; and the gold of the Incas presently came streaming back and over seas to Spain. At Porto Bello and at Nombre de Dios are the two split ends of the only path, except the fifty-year-old Panama Railroad, which even to this day exists across this junction of two continents.

The road, though paved with stone, is thick with bush now. Two years ago a mine owner had forty machete men go ahead of him and clear a trail, and then by means of many relays of mules he made the journey to Panama in twenty hours. Drake heard of this road in 1570. He heard of the gold, silver and pearls that came over it for Spain. At that time the port of departure was Nombre de Dios, just above here, and for that port Drake left Plymouth, England, with two ships and seventy-three men, and, it is believed, the sanction of Queen Elizabeth. Leaving his ships out of sight, he used his pinnaces in scouting, and found the plate-fleet in the harbor, with her escort of three armed galleons, waiting for the cargo. One night he rushed the town, old John Oxenham, who was afterwards hanged in Lima as a pirate, his lieutenant. The Spanish fled. Silver was abundant; but Drake wanted gold and pearls. The Spanish returned, for the church bell ringer, was still faithfully pealing the alarm, and they took courage. Drake was wounded in the leg, and his men carried him away in retreat. For three years he waited his chance on the Isle of Pines, taking, meantime, with his pinnaces, several old ships, cutting out a treasure ship from her escort at Carthagena; and then got word of a rich train coming down the Panama road. Yellow fever had killed off all but forty-eight of his men; his surgeon had died, too, "of his own medicines."

The fortifications of Porto Bello are beautiful. In the style which Vauban brought to a climax in the days of Louis le Soleil of France, they have the rampart, the esplanade, the glacis, and the rest in lovely line and symmetry. Every point commands some other point; and underneath them is the dungeon, with one square opening, of historical romance. We found the walls, of course, scribbled with the dreads and wishes and farewells of innumerable prisoners. Ramparts scarcely reached to the waistline of a man; and the sentry boxes, decorative little round-topped towers placed for architectural no less than for military effect, were hardly big enough for a man to turn around in. Red flowers, long and slim, like a folded morning glory, grew in the rifle slits. Small orchids thrived under the dislocated iron guns —so old that none of the marks telling the date of manufacture can be deciphered. People who fancy that ancient ruins are only to be encountered in the Old World should see these of Spanish America. They are European in character, with a story that seems almost Asiatic in age. At the other end of the town's waterfront stands the walls of the castle which Morgan sacked and raped of its gold and pearls—making the priests and nuns of the place go ahead to put up scaling ladders and take the brunt of the arquebuses.—New York Evening Post.

Use Less Meat.

In the comparatively wealthy districts of Germany the consumption of meat, since American meats have been barred, has fallen to three ounces a day a person.

Subscription price, in advance, per year, $1.

For advertising rates, call at the office, Sixth street, opposite court house.

Entered April 15, 1903, at Clanton, Ala., as second class matter, under act of congress of March 3, 1879.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications to the Union must be signed by the writer's real name as well as that name which they wish to put in the paper. Letters must reach the editor Tuesday morning to get in the same week. While we will publish any and all communications complying with these requirements that do not contain any improper language, we are not responsible for the opinions expressed. tf

SPECIAL OFFER.

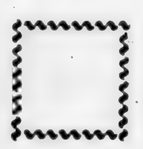
The Yellow Jacket, published bi-weekly at Moravian Falls, N. C., is an extremely bright, readable paper. We will send the UNION and YELLOW JACKET for one year for $1 in advance. This is a combination that ought to get every good man in Chilton county on our list, and is only open for a short time. tf

The Union was indorsed by the Union meeting of populists and republicans on August 5th without a dissenting voice, as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the people of Chilton county, in mass meeting assembled, considering the necessity of having a newspaper friendly to the people's political interests, and recognising THE UNION as such paper, we hereby indorse said paper and agree to support it with friendliness and with OUR SUBSCRIPTIONS, and will endeavor to spread its circulation." tf

Several hundred subscribers will get this paper with a big red cross on it. It means that you owe us a dollar and we owe it to some other fellows. Some small fellow will make a big kick about this red cross and will stop his paper, and some clever fellows will come in and pay up like a white man always does, and tell us they had just forgotten all about it. tf

DOES THIS STRIKE YOU?



I hereby announce myself as a candidate for judge of the 15th judicial circuit, subject to the action of the democratic primaries to be held on April 11th, 1904.

EDITORIAL.

THE FOURTH DISTRICT.

The regular republicans of the fourth district met in convention at Talladega February 23d. A full account of the proceedings in this issue of the Union

Chilton county first, and now the fourth district strikes at the root of this evil business of federal office holders tearing up the republican state organization, in order to compass the nomination of their patron.

The best thing that could happen to the republican party of Alabama as an organization would be to have a democratic president for the next four four years; that would weed out the PAP HUNTERS, and we would then have a party united on principles.

But when we consider what four years of democratic rule would mean to the country at large, it seems like paying too big a price for the the unification of the party in this state, so we will have to just wait and "trust in the Lord."

The rump convention at Calera on February 23d met at night. Reports say the attendance was slim and to judge from the published reports in the papers it must have been so; else why were they forced to put a man in as secretary who is NOT a qualified voter in the state of Alabama and is also a resident of another congressional district? Mr. J. D. Dennis, postmaster at Marion, Perry county, former deputy marshal and editor of the Alabamian, is the one we refer to, though having such a record as an office holder Mr. Dennis has not resided in Alabama but about 18 months, and he is not a registered voter.

Hon. Terry Richardson, of Montgomery, has been appointed special judge of the 15th judicial circuit to serve until May 1st, when the governor will appoint the nominee of the democratic primary to fill the balance of Judge Winter's term. It is understood that Mr. Richardson is not a candidate for the nomination.

OUR CIRCUIT JUDGESHIP.

In another column will be found the announcement of Hon. T. S. Sayre, of Montgomery, as a candidate for judge of the 15th judicial circuit, which includes the counties of Chilton, Montgomery, Elmore and Autauga. Mr. Sayre is one of the best known lawyers of middle Alabama. He has practiced his profession in Montgomery for many years and is regarded as an attorney and advocate of ripe experience and his candidacy is backed by the most flattering indorsements from the bar of that city.

AN OPEN LETTER.

We call our readers' attention to the letter of Hon. Walter D. Hines, first vice president of the L. and N. R. R. and ask them to read it carefully with the attention it merits, as an able exposition of the railroads' side of the controversy. In our opinion the railroad commission should be an impartial body, which would deal out exact justice in all disputes between the people and the railroads. "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none."

FARMERS' INSURANCE.

It would well repay all our farmers to study the SWORN STATEMENT of the Farmers' Insurance Association published in this issue. It fully disposes of any wild statements made through malice or ignorance as to the cost of this method of insurance and is a convincing proof of the economy of administration. Many of the largest standard insurance companies REFUSE to insure any farm or plantation property, and such of them that do charge a rate of $150 per $100 a year in ADVANCE, about three times the cost of the Farmers' Association, besides such companies do not pay for damage by wind, but the Farmers' does. Every self-respecting farmer should protect himself by means of insurance against those misfortunes which are liable to occur to any one.

FOURTH DISTRICT REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Talladega, Ala., Feb. 23, 1904.

By virtue of a call from the republican executive committee of the fourth congressional district of Alabama at a regular meeting of said committee held in the city of Anniston on the 30th day of November, 1903, the republicans of the fourth congressional district met in convention in the court house in the city of Talladega at noon on this day.

J. W. Kitchens, chairman of the executive committee, called the meeting to order and stated that the executive committee requested him to call to the chair as temporary chairman of this convention Wallace C. Edler, of Chilton county, and J. A. Edwards as temporary secretary. That said executive committee had prepared a temporary roll of the convention from credentials presented by delegations from the various counties of the district. Temporary Chairman Wallace C. Edler took the chair and requested a reading of the temporary roll of the convention by the secretary. Temporary Secretary J. A. Edwards then read the following roll of delegates from the several counties of the district, to-wit:

Chilton County Delegates—Lee Vickers, Wallace C. Edler, H. B. Rogers, M. F. Lett, H. A. Wilson, George W. Edwards, J. N. Dennis, J. Bice; alternates, J. E. Littlejohn, Lum Smith, J. M. Culpepper, B. H. Wells, R. C. Riggins, W. L. Popwell, R. A. Miller, L. D. Popwell.

Calhoun County Delegates—J. N. Boyer, C. W. Paul, George B. Randolph, T. W. Massey, J. D. McCullom, Samuel Burgess, E. A. Hammett, W. D. Martin; alternates, George A. Noble, Wood Hanna, Richard Nabors, W. J. Couch, William Harris, W. E. Box, George Phillips, M. H. Harrison.

Cleburne County Delegates—J. W. Baber, R. S. Blackmon, E. J. Burgess, W. A. Brown, Dr. R. L. B. Black, R. A. Perryman, J. W. Kitchens; no alternates.

Dallas County Delegates—J. G. Johnson, L. W. Mason.

Shelby County Delegates—M. B. Morgan, J. W. M. Page, W. W. Richardson, J. D. Henderson, J. M. Wallace, W. W. Albright, J. L. Vandiver, J. T. Porter, James N. Robertson, John Kendrick, Noah Edmundson, J. T. Cromwell, A. P. R. Dahl, J. H. Robertson.

Talladega County—J. J. Sims, George W. Parsons, Milton Avery, R. L. Reagan, Pat Sheridan, E. A. Hodge, T. W. Carr, W. M. Billingsley, T. B. Knight, O. L. Mullendore, A. W. Huston, J. F. Warwick, T. J. Wilson.

On motion of H. A. Wilson, of Chilton, the temporary roll of the convention was made a permanent roll, there being no contest filed to the executive committee.

On motion of G. B. Randolph, of Calhoun, a committee of three was appointed on permanent organization and order of business, as follows: G. B. Randolph, R. L. Reagan, E. A. Hodge.

On motion of R. A. Perryman, of Cleburne, a committee of three was appointed on resolutions. Committee appointed as follows: R. A. Perryman, G. W. Parsons, T. W. Massey.

Committee on permanent organization and business reported as follows:

That the committee recommend that the temporary organization of this convention be made the permanent organization of the same. Order of business:

1. The election of two delegates and two alternates to the national convention which meets in Chicago on the 21st day of June, 1904.

2. Nomination of candidate for congress from the fourth congressional district.

3. Nomination of presidential elector and alternate.

4. Election of the chairman of the district executive committee.

5. Election of a new district executive committee.

(Signed)

G. B. RANDOLPH,
Chairman

Report of the committee adopted

Chairman Edler then announced the convention permanently organized and ready for business in accordance with the report of the committee.

First, the election of two delegates and two alternates to the national convention. The names of J. A. Edwards, of Talladega, and R. A. Perryman, of Cleburne, were placed in nomination as delegates to the national convention. On motion of G. B. Randolph, the election of Edwards and Perryman was made by acclamation. The names of James N. Robertson and Graves Embry were presented and elected as alternates to said national convention.

Chairman announces the next order of business the nomination of a candidate for congressman from the fourth congressional district H. A. Wilson, of Chilton county, presented the name of John W. Kitchens, of Cleburne. No other names being presented, John W. Kitchens was nominated by acclamation.

The name of G. B. Randolph, of Calhoun county, was then presented as a presidential elector of the fourth congressional district There being no other names presented, G. B. Randolph was nominated by acclamation.

The name of Dr. D. B. Harris was then presented as an alternate elector. Other names being withdrawn, Dr. D. B. Harris was nominated by acclamation.

Chairman announces election of a district chairman then in order. H. A. Wilson, of Chilton county, was then elected by the convention as chairman of the district executive committee.

The name of J. A. Edwards was then presented and duly elected secretary of the executive committee.

On motion of J. A. Edwards, a committee of five was appointed to select a new executive committee for the fourth district. Said committee reported as follows:

"We, the committee, recommend the election of the following committeemen from the several counties: Calhoun, G. B. Randolph, J. W. Hawk, Chilton, Lee Vickers, Wallace C. Edler; Cleburne, J. W. Kitchens, R. A. Perryman; Shelby, James H. Page, John H. Robertson; Dallas, L. W. Mason, J. G. Johnson; Talladega, E. A. Hodge, A. W. Houston."

Report of committee adopted.

Committee on resolutions presented to the convention the following report:

"Be it resolved by the republicans of the fourth congressional district of Alabama in convention assembled at Talladega, this the 23d day of February, 1904, that we heartily indorse the action of Chairman W. I. Wellman and National Committeeman J. W. Dimmick and return to them our sincere thanks for the sturdy efforts they have made to preserve the integrity of our party, and we hereby condemn the course pursued by the referees for more than a year past, and we condemn the unusual methods (heretofore unknown in our party) they have adopted in their attempt to destroy the party organization and take it back to the corrupt conditions of the past. We reaffirm our allegiance to the republican party and indorse the platform adopted by the last national republican convention and pledge our loyal support to the nominees and platform of the next convention to be held at Chicago June 21, 1904.

"Be it further resolved by the republicans of the fourth congressional district that it is the sense of this convention that no member of the republican executive committee shall hereafter accept an appointment to a federal office.

"Resolved further, That the chairman of the executive committee of the fourth congressional district be and is hereby ordered and empowered to declare vacant the seat of any member of this committee who shall in the future accept a federal appointment.

"Resolved further, That we express our confidence in Chairman J. W. Kitchens and the district committee and indorse their action in the past two years' management of the party's affairs.

"Be it resolved, That, speaking specially for the republicans of this district, and, as we feel, voicing the sentiments of the republicans of the state, we hereby express our deep sorrow for the sudden death of Samuel Rice Bingham, which occurred at Birmingham on the morning of February 20, 1904. Mr. Bingham was a lifelong republican of the stalwart type and had the confidence of his party in the state. He was known as a first-class man in all respects. His integrity is above reproach and his ability as a man and citizen in the business of life is evidenced by his performance of the duties of the several important offices he has held. His death is a distinct loss to his party, to the community in which he lived and to the state. We tender to his bereaved friends and relatives our sincere sympathy and pray that He who inflicts the wound may soon apply to it the balm that He alone can give."

On motion of R. L. Reagan the report of the committee on resolutions was adopted.

George W. Parsons moved that this convention be now adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman and the secretary, which was carried.

KINCHEON.

Editor Union:

I am glad to know the action of the republican mass convention at Clanton met the approval of so many populists. I hope the republican executive committee will meet in Clanton on March 15th with the populist committee. Have a union meeting and call a primary to nominate a ticket for the populists and republicans to elect next November. "Together we stand, divided we fall."

GEO. W. EDWARDS.

LOMAX.

This community has had a sensation the past week in the elopement of J. W. Collins, widely known as the champion fiddler of Chilton county, and Mrs. Lincoln Collins. Both he and her have grown children. Sheriff Morgan would like to learn their new address. John Collins, a son of J. W., was arrested on the charge of carrying concealed weapons, and pleaded guilty before Judge Adams, who fined him $5—cheap rate for "pistol toting."

LIBERTY HILL.

We are glad to say that measles are thinned out in this neighborhood, and our farmers are getting along with their work nicely.

Mr. Lum Smith and wife visited this community last Saturday. We were all glad to see them.

Albert Headley and wife were visitors to Travis Headley Sunday.

Rev. B. H. Vickers and daughter, Esther, attended his appointment at Shelby Sunday.

OLD MAID.

COOPER.

Editor Union:

I was at the Kolb-Adams-Smith speaking on Monday. Coopers is a place of energy and life these days, and the people are wide awake and they turned out almost to a man to vote on the stock law. The crowd was large, but not to hear the assertions of Kolb that he will badly beat the other candidates for the office to which he aspires, nor to hear Judge Adams assert that he was right in every position he held in 1898, and that he is yet the one unchangeable, and while now he is back in the democratic party, he is the same, only the populist party is dead and having no populist party ticket in the state or nation, he simply saw it was the best thing to do to go back to the democrats. That he was right in 1898, and he is right today; in other words, he had the audacity to try to make the populists believe that he was absolutely right then and that he is also absolutely right today. Democrats (a very few, I mean), stood in the crowd and heard the honorable judge show that he was fully right in his position in 1898 (some of you know what he said of the democrats in 1898) and that he was absolutely right now, and some few had the extra ability to believe him right then and right now. The judge had a modest little blush, and declared he was the best judge the county had ever had by saying positively they never had beaten him for a good judge, and try it when they would or when they might his proverb ran: "It's the best you can do, you never will beat it." Then he proceeded to prove this new made proverb, and the flight of oratory and elocution was at an end.

Colonel A. C. Smith was called upon and he spoke for one or two minutes, very low and very weak, but the crowd seemed to show more interest, but his speech was not in it. In this respect his speech was like Kolb-Adams-Smith in that of getting into the different offices sought. On the day after election they will find they are "not in it."

FAITHFUL OBSERVER.

JUMBO.

The Jumbo farmers are busy preparing for more 15c cotton.

Mr. Tollen, of Anniston, who represents the Alabama Mineral Land Company, gave us a call last Friday.

Oh, yes, our mines are still moving on. We can hear the grand new railway coming nearer every day. Who knows how soon this will be called back woods no more, but will be a beautiful, healthy, happy and desirable place for a home? With best regards to the Union and its many readers, I will ring off

"MAISON."

PLEASANT GROVE.

Farmers in this community are busy preparing for another crop. We ought all to be thankful for the good things the Lord blessed us with in 1903, though He has been good to us all of our lives.

Dave Lockhart visited friends near Kincheon Saturday night.

Charley Cooper and Mrs. Nixey Milford paid a flying visit to Clanton Saturday.

Harry Roper and wife also went to Clanton.

J. C. Henley and Mack Baker called on their best girls Sunday.

William and Charley Ward, visited their sister Saturday night.

NEMO.

RIDERVILLE.

Editor Union:

I want to say a few words concerning our future political affairs. I am glad to see the populists so firmly based as to the course they will follow. If the pops and republicans put out good men they will have no trouble in electing them. I was in Stanton last Sunday, and one of the leading democrats asked me, "How is politics?" I said I hadn't heard much yet. He said: "My brother is going to run for tax collector. What kind of a run do you think he will make, and can't you support him?" I told him he was in the wrong road for me. Well, he said, he understood that the democrats would put out men and the pops would elect them. I told him he had hold of the wrong end of the stick; that it was the pops and republicans that would do the electing. That is all right; let the dems go their road; they will be all out of sap by the time we get ready to start, and we'll run right by them. They will get up all sorts of political schemes and dickers, but we have plenty of good men of our own faith to beat the dems with, for the dems are dead within themselves. Our men that quit us and went to the dems remind us of the old man's hogs that died with the cholera—he gave them poke root and they poked off to the woods and died. Them that went to the dems poked off and died.

Detecting Counterfeits

QUEER SLIPS MADE BY FORGERS OF BANK NOTES

Jefferson's Eye Gone, William Windom's Lip Swollen, Webster's Nose Flattened, Grant Deprived of His Shirt Stud and Justice Afflicted With Club Feet.

DON'T take any bad money while you're out," is advice harder for the New Yorker to follow than for any else in this country.

According to tales published in the current "Dickerman's U. S. Treasury Counterfeit Detector" there are thirteen different kinds of counterfeit bank notes of this State, ranging in denomination from $2 to $100, to say nothing of the phony gold coins and small change. The bank officials of Massachusetts, which comes second on the list, only have to keep their eyes peeled for ten different kinds of native counterfeit bills.

Unless a man's an expert, he would have to carry a small chemical laboratory, a pocket toof chest, and a complete collection of United States currency, indexed for immediate reference, if he would be absolutely safe against bad money.

It would embarrass some folks, however, to hold up the box office line while they dropped acid on their change and counted the hairs on the buffalo in the five-dollar bills. The only protection afforded such people is that derived from a hasty glance at the color of the note and the workmanship on the portrait.

Judging from the descriptions of counterfeit United States and Treasury notes given in "Dickerman' Detector" the most general defects are in the portraits. Watch out for the evil eye, bad complexions, tousled hair and the shape of the nose; if you do it may save you money.

For example, if a two-dollar bill on which Jefferson has only one eye is offered to a man, he shouldn't take it. Neither should he accept a bill upon which a white streak runs across the iris of each of McPherson's eyes.

If McPherson's hair and beard haven't been carefully brushed, or if he has a "staring look, and the head appears flat," have nothing to do with him. And above all things shun him if he has "many white spots on his face."

Now for the ten dollar-note. Be on your guard against Gen. Sheridan under these conditions: When his "face has a moth-eaten appearance;" when his "right eye and mustache are hardly visible;" when his mustache and chin whiskers "appear smoothly brushed" (they should be straggling and bushy); and last but not least, when the "right end of his forehead and right cheek is a mass of white patches."

Daniel Webster should be avoided on ten-dollar bills when his nose is flat.

In twenty-dollar bills keep an eye on Alexander Hamilton. If his "nose, instead of being round on the end, is brought to a sharp point," and if "his chin, instead of being double, is square," he is an impostor.

The man who takes a bill with the line of Benjamin Franklin's mouth and the opening of his ear too pronounced, may be out fifty dollars. He may find consolation, however, in the fact that indistinct tail feathers on an American eagle might have cost him a hundred. If Admiral Farragut has too long a nose and his upper lip protrudes, that's also a sign that a hundred-dollar bill is bad.

As might be expected in a counterfeit, the figure of Justice in the $500 kind is somewhat out of plumb. The scale she holds aloft is, very appropriately, slightly crooked.

In addition to this she is club-footed, and her toes are too short. If further proof were needed, it may be found in the indistinctness of the lobe of J. Q. Adams' ear.

In the silver certificates even Martha Washington's complexion doesn't escape the hands of the spoiler. She receives mention among the one-dollar counterfeits as having "white patches on forehead and face."

On two-dollar silver certificates it is well to make sure that Gen. Hancock's hair and mustache are smoothly brushed, for one counterfeiter has mussed them badly. Also be wary of William Windom, especialy if his "upper lip appears a little swollen," or if his "cheeks appear sunken and his chin out of proportion."

Gen. Grant is chief sufferer in counterfeit five-dollar silver certificates. In one case "two white patches appear on his lower lip, near left corner of mouth." In other instances "he looks pock-marked" and "has a moth-eaten appearance." One counterfeiter seems to have had all the instincts of a common thief, for in his production the "stud on Gen. Grant's shirt front is missing."

Ten-dollar silver certificates are dangerous when Hendricks lacks a right eye.

On the twenties look out for Manning. Don't let the left side of his face press against the background too closely, and above all things see that his mustache is nicely curled. One bungler has sadly bedraggled it.

In the only described counterfeit of one-hundred dollar certificates Monroe is the victim. His left cheek bone is missing, and this, as might be supposed, gives his face "a different expression."

Of course, the portraits on some counterfeit bills are not defective. With these, and in the case of coins, other methods are necessary for detection. But any one who thoroughly masters all the portraits on our currency will undoubtedly find it something of a help.—New York Sun.

Russian Discipline.

Discipline in the Russian army is confined to the essentials very strictly, and does not concern itself about things not immediately connected with the movements of troops and their conduct in action, according to O. K. Davis, in the December Everybody's. They will fight magnificently, but for the rest they are a lawless, unkempt, slouchy, dirty lot, whose clothes seem perpetually unwashed and whose hands are in everything that is not their own.

There were a dozen different breeds of fighting men in the Pekin relief column, and among all of them I saw instances of unprovoked cruelty and savagery. With the others such cases were sporadic, but among the Russians discipline does not seem to undertake to provide against that sort of thing. I never saw an officer make an attempt to stop a Russian soldier from such work, but I saw one spank a man for letting a horse fall down.

The officer who was in command of the guard that was escorting me on one occasion stopped his men to loot a shop and let me go and find my way as best I could without them.

The Duke's Rose Garden.

There is at least one man in England who makes money out of his recreation, and that man is the octogenarian Duke of Rochester—Dean Hole. Combining deep learning with a large fund of bright wit and broad humor, he can spare time from his heavy ecclesiastical duties to add five thousand dollars a year to his income by growing roses in the musty old town so well known to the lovers of Dickens. For sixty years the Dean has been studying the national flower of England, and during that time as many as five hundred varieties have passed through his hands. He is his own gardener, even at his present advanced age. As early as seven o'clock in the morning he may be seen in his garden looking after his pets, and his method of disposing of his growing is through a London wholesale florist, who cuts them at Rochester under the critical eye of the Dean and removes them to Covent Garden market. Many of the varieties are rare, and it is no uncommon thing for a single blossom to fetch as much as two dollars.

Counting the Razor Strokes.

"Very few men realize the manual labor entailed in the operation of shaving, aside from the constant care and skill that must be exercised," said the handsome barber as he paused to strop his razor. "I didn't realize it myself until the other day. The man I was shaving was a stranger to me, and he seemed a trifle nervous. When I got through with him he said to me: 'Do you know how many strokes of the razor you used in shaving me?' I looked up at the clock. It had taken me nearly twenty minutes. 'I give it up,' I said. 'I never thought about it.' 'Well,' said he, as he buttoned his collar, 'you used just 459 strokes with the razor. That's pretty fair for me, because I'm nervous. I have frequently been up to near 600. You see, I suffer from insomnia, and the only way I can get to sleep at nights is to lie in bed and count. In that way I have gotten into the habit of counting the razor strokes while getting shaved, and I want to tell you that 459 is a pretty good record for me.' Say, do you believe that?"—Philadelphia Record.

It Wasn't His Fault.

A well-known Brooklyn politician owns a dizzy old frame building in one of the Jewish quarters of Manhattan. Not long ago his tenant, a small clothing merchant, summoned him hastily by telephone, telling him that the place was on fire. When the owner reached the ground he found that the fire department had extinguished the flames before they had done much of any damage. Somewhat annoyed at having been called from important business for so trivial a matter, he said rather sharply to his tenant:

"It's a pity the whole building didn't burn."

"Vell," said the tenant, with a deprecating gesture, "you can't plame me. It vasn't my fault. I didn't sent in de alarm."

How Could It Be a Mistake.

What a woman doesn't know about newspapers isn't worth knowing. The other morning Mrs. B. was talking to her husband.

"I notice in the Daily Hoodoo that Mr. Biffkins died on Sunday."

"It's a mistake, my dear," replied the husband. "He died on Monday."

"But the paper said Sunday."

"I know it, but it was an error in the print."

"I thought so, too, at first, but I got a half dozen copies of the paper, and it was the same in all of them. They certainly couldn't have made the mistake over and over again."

The husband tried to convince her, but it was no use, and he gave it up.

Essence of Orange Leaves.

One of the remarkable industries of Paraguay is the preparation of essence of orange leaves. More than one hundred and fifty years ago the Jesuit priests, who then ruled that secluded country, imported orange-seeds and planted groves, which have now become immense forests, filled with small establishments for extracting the essence, which is exported to France and the United States for use in soap and perfumery making. It is also employed by the natives in Paraguay as a healing ointment and a hair tonic.

SHIPS BEFORE THE MAST.

WHAT OCCURS WHILE A SKIPPER IS "SIGNING ON" HIS CREW.

Characteristics of the Men—Excitement and Confusion Incidental to the Departure of a Deep-Sea Packet from Port.

Having a sharp attack of the desire for a life on the deep during my junior year at Harvard, I finally managed to obtain a berth from the skipper of an American clipper ship to sail in a few days for San Francisco, writes George Noble, in the New York Evening Post. My job was to be "boy"—not cabin, but deck—a position corresponding most nearly to that of an apprentice on an English ship.

On the day prior to sailing, the act of "signing on" took place in the United States shipping commissioner's office. This is simply the drawing up of a contract between the master and the men. The latter, when I first saw them, were sitting about in embarrassed, uncomfortable positions on the rude benches of the office. Nervously fingering their caps in their hands, they whispered with one another in hushed, mysterious tones after the usual fashion of sailors when they are in any large room ashore. They fell far short of the general idea that I had gathered of sailors from reading books written by landsmen. No flowing, bell-mouthed trousers were in sight; no blue flannel shirts open at the neck with wide rolling collars; no conventional sailor caps. Instead, take them altogether, they made me think at the time of a mixed collection of men of the streets—most of them drivers of coal wagons. Later, once we were clear of the shore, I discovered the true worth of some of them.

With few exceptions, the men had pale, unshaven faces, and wore makeshift clothing. They had the general appearance of day laborers, except for the fact that they stood so much in awe of the commissioner's clerks with their pens behind their ears. This was while they sat down. When they stood up and walked there was something about them that I had never seen before, something indescribable—the true mark of the sea.

As name after name was called they would approach the desk one at a time, and after listening to an indistinct formula of words (which comprised what is known as the "ship's articles") muttered in sing-song by the clerk, would hastily scratch their names. Then a colloquy would take place, the sailor would nod his head, and while he hurried to join his comrades at the other end of the room, an advance note for a month of his pay would be handed to some boarding master. This "dead horse" to be worked off at sea represented various loans and expenditures which the boarding master claimed, and of which the sailor had not the faintest recollection. All he would ever see of that note was a bottle of whiskey later in the day.

When my turn to sign came I noticed that more than one man, instead of putting his name to the articles, had made his mark. Under the terms of the contracts the able seamen were to have $18 a month; the ordinary seamen, $12; while my pay as a green hand was to be $1 a month. When all had signed, the captain addressed the group, giving them orders to report on board at daylight on the following morning. The ceremony was over and the crew disappeared as if by magic. The boarding masters disappeared, too.

That night I slept aboard the ship. Next morning long before daylight, I was aroused by the hammering and shouting of the carpenter on the fo'c'sle door, much as if I were the pilot, and everything was at a standstill until I should make my appearance. This music was soon drowned, however, by the uproar which arose from the dock. The crew, routed from bed by their various boarding masters, and carted to the ship with their baggage, had arrived.

Such confusion as ensued as the dim light of dawn began to creep into the sky I had never before seen in my life. The dock swarmed with men. Sailors rubbing their eyes and bumping into one another as they blundered about, slowly coming to their senses as the rum inside of them evaporated in the keen morning air; boarding masters hustling them and trying to force them to climb over the rail to the ship's deck. The more the sailors awoke to the situation, the more they dreaded making the start on a long voyage, and the more they strove to evade the boarding masters and to lose themselves in the streets. Just so much more naturally, the boarding masters shouted and stormed about, threatening the men with punishments of all sorts. A sailor's advance note is worthless until after he has sailed from port.

The edge of the dock was strewn with the chests, bags, and bedding of the men. Finally, this was tossed pell mell to the deck of the vessel, and after half an hour more of wrangling the sailors followed their traps. The stuff was bundled into the fo'c'sle, and there those of the disgruntled crew who did not fall over in a stupor at once fought among themselves as to which bunk each should occupy.

These disputes were finally ended by the sharp commands of the captain and the mates, who ordered all hands to tumble out on deck to give a hand at getting the ship clear of the dock. The orders were supplemented with a few belaying pins and the forecastle was quickly emptied.

The rushing to and fro on the deck as the ship was unmoored from the dock and swung about in the trail of the tugboat that was to tow her to sea; the confused shouting of orders from every quarter; in fact, everything that took place in the space of the next hour seemed nothing less than a reign of misrule which it is impossible to describe. At length, out of the confusion I began to discover some sort of system. One by one the yards were hoisted and the sails properly set as the land began to grow smaller astern. With each bit of pulling and hauling the boatswain gave out frightful groans and semi-jodels. At each blood-curdling sound he uttered, all hands gave a simultaneous heave on the ropes. The cries lightened the task more than one could believe, and gave double the ordinary heart to every one.

At length at about noon, when we had the land merely a dim blot behind us, and the ship was pretty well set in shape aloft, all hands save the man at the wheel, were ordered to knock off work and get dinner in the galley. This was good after the work of the morning, and consisted of soup made of fresh meat—the last we were to see of that article for many months.

Bolting our dinner, we were out on deck again in short order to find that the tugboat had cast off from us and was making a few turns about to see that all was well before going back to New York. Before long she left us to ourselves, and soon was only to be distinguished by a thin line of smoke in the distance.

GIRLS DO THE WOOING.

In Quite a Number of Countries Courtship Waits on Maid.

Not everywhere do the boys do the wooing. Among the gypsies of Moravia, for instance, none will dare presume to court a maiden until she has notified the young man of her choice her readiness. This she does by using a cake as a love letter, baking therein a coin, and throwing it within his tent door at night when he is alone. He, of course, is not bound to accept. But if he does it behooves him to be faithful. The Romany of Hungary knows naught of breach of promise suits. Instead, the relations and friends of the jilted maiden wait upon the inconstant lover, argue with him, plead with him. Then, if he still remains obdurate, he is maimed by a shot in the leg or arm.

By ancient Romany custom, too, the slighted girl has the right to be present and to decree in which of his limbs he shall be wounded. In practice, however, she usually elects to stay away, thereby leaving the fearful choice to him.

A marriageble Burmese girl as soon as she has completed her trousseau places in her window the "love lamp." and according to whether its interjecting beams, carefully direct from behind with her own tiny toilet mirror shine on this hut or on that the gallant within knows that somewhere a lassie's heart is inclined toward him.

When one of the cigarmakers of Southern Spain—who constitue a separate class by themselves—casts her eyes lovingly on a likely lad she forthwith twists her powder puff into a pompon for his hat. If he wears it at the next bull fight it is considered a match.

The Andalusian peasant girl sends a pumpkin pie to the particular swain she affects. If he eats it, well and good; she is engaged. If not, she tries elsewhere, pie following pie until success is arrived at.

Swiss maidens go a-wooing not always and anyhow, but at stated intervals—the eves of the weddings of their friends. Then is held what is known as the "feast of the love garlands." All the unmarried girls who can claim acquaintance with either bride or bridegroom assemble at sunset at the latter's house, dance, sing and make merry. Then when the dawn is gray they take their departure, each girl bearing away with her a posy gayly decked with ribbons.

This she hangs on the way home upon the door knob of the house where resides the youth of her heart's desire or flings it through the open casement of his bed chamber. She may select who she will on these occasions, provided she does not stray beyond the limits of her own canton. For this latter is, according to Swiss ideas, unpardonable. Should she be suspected of it a straw puppet is left dangling—presumably as a hint of the fate that may befall herself—outside her chamber window, while the young men of the village whom she has jointly and severally slighted conspire together to waylay and beat the unlucky stranger whose offenses and misfortune it is to have been the object of her wayward choice.—Chicago Tribune.

Result of a Shave.

The toughs in lower Walnut street believed they had a new policeman on their beat last night and started in to have their own way. Koger patrols this district, and has become so well acquainted with the old timers that he has little trouble in holding them down. Koger is 45 years old, and wears an umbrageous mustache. The policeman on the beat last night was a young man and smooth faced. One well-known character named Burns was the first to find this out and felt safe to go and have a good time at a saloon Koger had warned him to keep away from.

Much to his surprise the "young officer" found him.

"I warned this man to stay away from that place a dozen times," said the policeman to the desk sergeant at the central station.

"I never saw you before and you never saw me before in your life, for I never was there," loudly declared the man.

"Why, you know me; I'm Koger. I got shaved today."

The man immediately capitulated.—Kansas City Journal.

The Egg Eating Hen.

The egg eating hen is an intolerable nuisance. She is a twin sister to the chicken eating hog. There have been many plans suggested to cure her of this habit, but she is still at it, and perhaps always will be. Her appetite is certainly an abnormal one when it craves the contents of an egg. Sometimes red pepper has been put in the shells of the nest egg, but the experiment has not been a roaring success. One poultryman uses nests that are so small that the hen cannot reach down under her body to peck at the egg after she has laid it and the nest box is so high that she cannot reach the egg when she stands upon the edge of the box. Nests are sometimes provided that allow the egg to roll down into a darkened place where the hen cannot see it and she wonders what she is cackling at. Hens rarely eat porcelain eggs.—Green's Fruit Grower.

Meat and Grain For Food.

Foods containing protein are given cows to increase the milk production, and hens to increase the quantity of eggs and improve their quality. The dairyman understands full well that in feeding grains which furnish protein to cows, a sufficient quantity of succulent food must be given to formulate the proper balance. Yet this same man protests when it is suggested that the same rule should apply to laying hens. The proper feeding of poultry is not so difficult as any one would think, nor is the feeding of any animal, for that matter.

If one possesses a knowledge of the needs of the animal he is feeding, he will readily find out what foods will supply such needs. Feed the variety of grains by all means as well as an occasional supply of animal feed, but do not overlook the need for green food. This same rule works the other way, so do not attempt to obtain results from green food and grain at the expense of the animal food. In some way get at the properly balanced ration and then profitable results will follow.—Indianapolis News.

Farm Gate.

To make a good farm gate make it in two parts as shown in the cut below. Make it four feet four inches high and any length desired, from ten to sixteen feet; twelve feet is preferable. Make it out of good white oak lumber one by four inches. At the ends where you nail use one strip on each side and nail from both sides. In the centre place a post in the ground, leaving it about eight inches high. To this hook one part of the gate. Use a slide latch. If you have hogs use two latches, one at top and one at the bottom. Gate posts should be nine feet long and about sixteen inches in diameter, set four feet in the ground. With good, heavy hinges and proper care this gate should last twenty years.—Norman T. Atkins, in The Epitomist.

To Prevent Soil Washing.

The past two seasons have been unusually favorable to soil washing, and many acres of slope land have been carried to the level bottoms below or borne away by high water. This loss of fertility if followed up year after year would impoverish the hill land to such an extent as to render it entirely worthless for crop raising. As washing occurs mainly where soil is loose and sandy in texture, such ground needs extra protection in the line of drain ditches and cross plowing. Frequently where it is necessary to crop the land situated on hill slopes, the mere opening of a ditch at the upper end of the cultivated portion will prevent serious loss from washing by keeping the water from the land above from coming down in injurious quantities over the field. The use of strips of soil binders through the cultivated field is also to be recommended. These should be sown crosswise of the hill, and any good pasture grass will answer the purpose provided the roots are strong and penetrate the ground to some depth. In plowing a field that washes badly it is well to bear in mind that furrows made lengthwise of the hill are conducive to soil washing; hence it is always a good plan to plow the land crosswise. Organic matter, such as barnyard manure, rubbish, hay or stubble plowed under, will, until entirely decomposed, aid in keeping the soil particles in their places through heavy rainfall. In the same manner badly washed ditches may be effectively closed by the use of hay or straw in sufficient quantities to prevent further carrying away of adjacent soil. Often the rains come so quickly that the water comes almost in a body down the hillsides. In a comparatively dry season this is not desirable, as much of the moisture is conducted from the field before it has an opportunity to percolate through the soil. To prevent this, plow the ditches to run in the direction of the most gentle slope, so that the water may be carried off gradually.—C. B. Barrett, in The Epitomist.

The Codling Moth.

A good knowledge of the life history of the codling moth is the first essential to its control. Every fruit grower should familiarize himself with its different stages by studying the insect in his own orchard.

The codling moth passes the winter in the larval stage. The larvae may be found incased in silken cocoons in cracks and holes in the trees, and in houses where apples have been stored. In the spring these larvae [illegible] pupae, from which the moths [illegible] about a week after the ap[illegible] blossom.

"When epidemics of la grippe first began to make their appearance in this country I was a sufferer from this disease.

"I had several long sieges with the grip. At first I did not know that Peruna was a remedy for this disease. When I heard that la grippe was epidemic catarrh, I tried Peruna for la grippe, and found it to be just the thing."—Isaac Brock.

Pe-ru-na Used in the Family for Years.

Mrs. E. West, 137 Main street, Menasha, Wis., writes: "We have used Peruna in our family for a number of years and when I say that it is a fine medicine for catarrh and colds, I know what I am talking about. I have taken it every spring and fall for four years and I find that it keeps me robust, strong, with splendid appetite, and free from any illness. A few years ago it cured me of catarrh of the stomach, which the doctors had pronounced incurable. I am very much pleased with Peruna. I am 87 years old."—Mrs. E. West.

Pe-ru-na is a Catarrhal Tonic Especially Adapted to the Declining Powers of Old Age.

In old age the mucous membranes become thickened and partly lose their function.

This leads to partial loss of hearing, smell and taste, as well as digestive disturbances.

Peruna corrects all this by its specific operation on all the mucous membranes of the body.

One bottle will convince anyone. Once used and Peruna becomes a life-long stand-by with old and young.

Mrs. F. E. Little, Tolona, Ill., writes: "I can recommend Peruna as a good medicine for chronic catarrh of the stomach and bowels. I have been troubled severely with it for over a year, and also a cough. Now my cough is all gone, and all the distressing symptoms of catarrh of the stomach and bowels have disappeared. I will recommend it to all as a rare remedy.

A TRAVELER AT SEVENTY-ONE YEARS OF AGE.

I am so well I am contemplating a trip to Yellowstone Park this coming season. How is that for one 71 years old?"

In a later letter she says: "I am only too thankful to you for your kind advice and for the good health that I am enjoying wholly from the use of your Peruna. Have been out to the Yellowstone National Park and many other places of the West, and shall always thank you for your generosity."—Mrs. F. E. Little.

Strong and Vigorous at the Age of Eighty-eight.

Rev. J. N. Parker, Utica, N. Y., writes: "In June, 1901, I lost my sense of hearing entirely. My hearing had been somewhat impaired for several years, but not so much affected but that I could hold converse with my friends; but in June, 1901, my sense of hearing left me so that I could hear no sound whatever. I was also troubled with severe rheumatic pains in my limbs. I commenced taking Peruna and now my hearing is restored as good as it was prior to June, 1901. My rheumatic pains are all gone. I cannot speak too highly of Peruna, and now when eighty-eight years old can say it has invigorated my whole system."—Rev. J. N. Parker.

Mr. W. B. Schnader, of Terre Hill, Pa., writes:

"I got sick every winter and had a spell of cold in February, 1899; I could not do anything for almost two months. In December, 1899, I saw one of your books about your remedies. Then I wrote to Dr. Hartman for advice, and he wrote that I should commence the use of Peruna, and how to take care of myself.

"I did not lose one day last winter that I could not tend to my stock. I am sixty-three years old, and I cannot thank you too much for what you have done for me."

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

ALABASTINE
Durable Wall Coating. n't Rub Off;
WHY?
Because it cements to, and not stuck on the wall with paying, animal glue, as are various so-called "wall finishes," which are kalsomines under fanciful names.
You can apply Alabastine.

ALABASTINE

The Only Sanitary and Permanent Wall Coating

ALABASTINE is not a disease-breeding, hot water glue wall finish, furnishing a lodgment and harbor-ground for disease germs; it is a natural, rock-base composition, in white and many exquisitely beautiful tints; in powder form, ready for use by simply mixing with cold water. Anyone can brush it on.

ALABASTINE cements to walls, distroys disease germs and vermin, and never rubs off or scales. Other wall coatings, under fanciful names, and usually mixed with hot water, are unhealthful kalsomines, stuck on the wall with glue, which soon rots, nourishes germs of deadly disease, rubs and scales, spoiling walls, clothing and furniture. When it is necessary to refinish, the old coats must be washed off—an expensive, nasty, disagreeable job, making the rooms damp and unfit to live in.

When walls are once coated with Alabastine, succeeding coats may be applied, year after year, without washing the walls, thus saving great expense and annoyance.

Hot and Cold Water Kalsomines Have No Merit

Some dealers try to sell them, buying them cheap, and trying to sell on Alabastine's demand until such time as their customers learn of the imposition.

THEY ARE WORTHLESS PREPARATIONS

If you cannot buy Alabastine of your hardware, paint or drug dealer, refuse all imitations, and write us. We will tell you where you can get Alabastine without delay, or sell it to you direct. $500.00 GIVEN AWAY. Write for particulars.

Leaflet of dainty hints, hints on decorating, and our artists' up-to-date ideas on beautifying the home, Free. Buy Alabastine only in packages, properly labeled.

WILD ANIMALS FAR-SIGHTED.

Defect of Near-Sightedness Appears to Be Product of Civilization.

"The effect of near-sightedness appears to be altogether a product of civilization, of our method of living," says Dr. Grier. "The natural condition of the eyesight for all kinds of animals is what is commonly termed far-sighted. Wild animals are invariably far-sighted, and remain that way even after capture by man and confinement in menageries or zoological gardens. Animals, even as young as four and five months old, when captured continue far-sighted in the zoos until their death, but the animals born in captivity are always (there may be some exceptions, though I have never heard of any) near-sighted. This is probably due to the constricted range of their vision, for which nature endeavors to adapt their eyesight to the best advantage.

"Among human beings it is very nearly the same. A hunter, trapper or sailor, a man who spends most of his life in the open and has an unlimited range for his vision, has the natural eyesight, and can discern objects a great distance beyond that possible to the eyes of the dwellers in cities. We have little need to see far away in a city, and the telescopic power of our eyes, therefore, diminishes perceptibly from generation to generation, until in the course of time it is probable we may all be near-sighted, without the power to see distinctly over 100 yards.

"The many hours each day a child spends in the schoolroom with its restricted area helps spread the near-sightedness a great deal. The little one before it enters school can see much farther than it can a few years after having begun its scholastic career. Then for a half dozen hours daily it is called upon to look no greater distance than to the teacher's desk, less than thirty feet away, so its eyesight becomes adapted to seeing clearly at thirty feet, but not so well at 100 feet, a decided contrast to the quality of the primitive eyesight."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

An Unsolved Mystery.

It is a most unpleasant truth that during the last thirty years the death rate from cancer has nearly doubled, and that as yet there has been no effective treatment found for it.

In England and Wales in the year 1876 out of every 1000 deaths twenty-three were from cancer, while in 1899 this had increased to forty-six per 1000, and the proportion is still increasing with greater rapidity. The foregoing considers the sexes together, but when we separate the statistics we find that women are much more subject than men. In 1899 thirty-four deaths out of every 1000 for men, and fifty-six out of every 1000 for women, was cancer's record. Cancer is at present perhaps the worst disease that attacks adults of mature years, those under twenty-five years being practically free from it, and as yet no cause can be definitely assigned.

During a good many years the opinion has been stated by physicians that cancer can be caused by too much meat eating, or by an overfed condition, accompanied by indolence, and statistics seem to bear out this conclusion.

A Remedy For the Consumptive.

The electrical current offers a remedy for the consumptive, according to the Lancet, London. Experiments have been conducted to this end by Dr. J. Cunningham Bowie with a high degree of success, the doctor securing the best results with an alternating current of high frequency and low potential. A special apparatus was made for the work, one permitting of a great range of adjustment. In practice the current density ranged from 300 to 800 milliamperes and from fifty to seventy volts, and the application from ten to twenty minutes. Almond oil containing iodine, thymol and other antiseptics was used for intralaryngeal injections. The arrest of the lesion was brought about much more quickly than by the simple use of antiseptic oils alone, and the doctor says he is entirely satisfied that the use of the alternating current promotes healing.

More Than One House.

Mr. Newrich, the contractor, having made a fortune—part of which he had invested in house property in the east of London—wished to rise into "smart" society. He soon found an impecunious aristocrat who, says Tit Bits, was willing to show him the way for a consideration.

The new friend advised Mr. Newrich that visiting cards were one of the necessities. As a model to be used in preparing copy for the engraver, the aristocrat offered one of his own cards, which read:

"Harold De Vere,
"Iona House, Portsmouth Square, W."

Two days later, as De Vere was sitting in his dressing gown at breakfast, a servant brought in on a salver a visiting card bearing the following:

"Ephraim Newrich,
"I own twenty-three houses, London, E."

The Discovery of Radium.

It was at the close of the year 1897 that I began to study the compounds of uranium, the properties of which had greatly attracted my interest. Here was a substance emitting spontaneously and continuously radiations similar to Roentgen rays, whereas ordinarily Roentgen rays can be produced only in a vacuum-tube with the expenditure of electrical energy. By what process can uranium furnish the same rays without expenditure of energy and without undergoing apparent modification? Is uranium the only body whose compounds emit similar rays? Such were the questions I asked myself, and it was while seeking to answer them that I entered into the researches which have led to the discovery of radium. Mme. Curie in the Century Magazine

DOCTORS FALL IN LINE.

Practicing Physicians recognize the unfailing reliability of Doan's Kidney Pills by prescribing them for Backache, Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Disorders—a tribute won by no other Proprietary Medicine. Four cases cited from "Notes of His Practice," by Dr. Leland Williamson, of Yorktown, Ark.

YORKTOWN, ARK., Mar. 1, 1904.

FOSTER-MILBURN CO., Buffalo, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—I have been engaged in the practice of medicine in this section for ten years. This is a very sickly climate, on the Bayou Bartholomew, near the Arkansas River. It is particularly malarious and miasmatic; we meet with many and various abnormal conditions of the human family; prominent among the cases in which I have been called upon to prescribe is kidney disease. Many of these disorders manifest themselves by pains in the back, often extending to other parts of the body; sometimes headache is present, caused by uraemic or chronic uric acid poisoning, soreness in region of kidneys, cloudy, thickened and foul-smelling urine, discharges of pus or corruption; inflammation of the kidneys, extending to the bladder, is caused by excess of uric acid and decomposition of the urine. Hemorrhage is sometimes met with, caused by high state of inflammation or congestion.

There is no class of diseases a doctor is called oftener to treat than the variety of kidney diseases, in many of which the patient will have chills or rigors, followed by fever, a result of the kidneys failing to eliminate the uric acid poison from the system. Such cases require the kidneys restored to their natural functions, then the poison and foreign substances are removed—shock to the nervous system averted and natural health restored.

I have, for some time, been using Doan's Kidney Pills in these many manifestations and with uniform success, curing most cases. I can further say that even in hopeless cases where they have waited too long, Doan's Kidney Pills afford much relief and prolong life. I can recommend the pills in conditions of excessive or deficient secretion of urine, as also in convalescence from swamp-fever and malarial attacks, as verified by the following cases in my practice.

CASE 1.

THOS. ORELL, Bear, Ark., age 60. Pain in back for several weeks, then chills, irregular sometimes, severe rigors followed by fever. Gave good purgative of calomel and padoph, and Doan's Kidney Pills. After taking four boxes of the pills, patient up and enjoying good health for one of his age.

CASE 2.

MRS. SMITH, Tarry, Ark., age 29, mother of four children. Had female complaint and kidney trouble, manifest by pain in back and urine irregular; sometimes very clear, changing to cloudy, and with much sediment on standing in chamber. Gave local treatment for female complaint and prescribed Doan's Pills; after using six boxes she regards herself as cured.

CASE 3.

BROWN EAKS, Wynne, Ark., age 21. Had severe case of malarial hoematuria or swamp fever. Gave necessary liver medicine, calomel and padoph, and morph.-sulph., to relieve pain, and ordered Doan's Pills for the high state of congestion and inflammation of the kidneys. Recovery resulted in two weeks. Prescribed Doan's Kidney Pills, to be continued until the kidneys were thoroughly strengthened and all pain in back subsided.

CASE 4.

ELIJAH ELLIOTT, Tarry, Ark., age 34. Pain in back and legs and headache. Uric-acid poisoning. Prescribed Doan's Kidney Pills. After taking several boxes pain subsided—urine became normal, or natural, and patient able to resume his work.

These are a few of the typical cases in which I have used Doan's Kidney Pills. In a great many instances I use them alone with curative results, while with some others indicated remedies are associated.

I believe that by the judicious use of Doan's Pills many serious complications are arrested and many hopeless and incurable cases of Bright's disease prevented.

I have often found that one box of the pills is all that is required to effect a cure, but in some cases I continue their use until all symptoms are entirely absent and the cure effectual and permanent. Yours truly,

Dr. Leland Williamson.

A Shocking Crime.

The daughter of a widow living at Potsdam has just been tried for inciting soldiers against an officer in the following circumstances: One Sunday last year she was walking with her sweetheart, a soldier, when she met a young cadet. He stopped the soldier on the ground that he had not saluted him. The soldier and the girl maintained that the salute had been given, whereupon the cadet ordered the man to follow him to the barracks. The girl upon this called to a number of artillerymen, bidding them not to allow such a young officer to arrest an honest man. The soldier who followed the cadet as ordered, was sentenced to five months' imprisonment in a fortress. The charge against the girl was dismissed, but she was fined 30 marks for insulting the cadet.

Miss M. Cartledge gives some helpful advice to young girls. Her letter is but one of thousands which prove that nothing is so helpful to young girls who are just arriving at the period of womanhood as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly, for it is the only medicine I ever tried which cured me. I suffered much from my first menstrual period, I felt so weak and dizzy at times I could not pursue my studies with the usual interest. My thoughts became sluggish, I had headaches, backaches and sinking spells, also pains in the back and lower limbs. In fact, I was sick all over.

"Finally, after many other remedies had been tried, we were advised to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I am pleased to say that after taking it only two weeks, a wonderful change for the better took place, and in a short time I was in perfect health. I felt buoyant, full of life, and found all work a pastime. I am indeed glad to tell my experience with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it made a different girl of me. Yours very truly, Miss M. CARTLEDGE, 533 Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga." — $5000 forfeit if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

By Lawrence Scheidel, Ogemaw Co., Mich.
225 bu. per acre.
By J. W. Massey, Crockett Co., Tenn.
504 bu. per acre.
Ray Stearns, Ransom Co., N. D. says: "Ripened in 120 days. Yielded 504 bu. per acre. Next year I will grow 600 bu. per acre from it."

National Oats.

Enormously prolific. Does well everywhere. It won't let your acre produce less than 100 bu. Try it.

Billion Dollar Grass.

Most talked of grass in America. Would be ashamed of itself if it yielded less than 14 tons of splendid hay per acre.
